The agencies in full operation are varied, as the social and spiritual needs of the district demand. But the great and ever-present aim of the workers is to stop short of nothing less than the real heart and life conversion of the people to God. We have already noted the large church membership. There are many weekly meetings for Christian culture and fellowship. The Sunday-schools of the Mission have an aggregate attendance of nearly 1600 children. In this part of the work the large Board School built on the site of the old Clerkenwell House of Detention has been impressed into the service. Open-air preaching is carried on with great vigour, not only on the Sabbaths, but on week nights, and many careless ones have thus heard the convicting word which ultimately led them to the feet of the Saviour in penitent trust. Not the least important part of the Mission programme is the work of the three visiting sisters, under the guidance of Mrs. Wakerley. These earnest Christian women have proved ministering angels and messengers of grace in many a poverty-stricken home, and to many a lonely tempted one. They also visit the public-houses around with remarkable results. During the past year a Medical Mission has been started, and has already proved a priceless boon among the poor people, both to body and soul. Dr. Howard Downes, of Hornsey, freely renders valued service in this department. In the enlarged premises it is hoped that the Medical Mission work will be greatly extended. Space forbids our doing more than giving a mere mention to the aggressive temperance work that goes on; to the fresh air fortnight in the country for the sickly children; to the rescue work among young women; to the tract distribution; to the popular Monday evening, which keep large numbers away from the streets, and the public-house, etc., etc. An important branch is maintained in Camden-street, St. Pancras, under the capable charge of an assistant minister, Rev. E. A. Bennett; and the work at Leysian Hall, though on a separate financial basis, is also under the supervision of Mr. Wakerley.

The neighbourhood in which the Mission is planted is largely an industrial one. Once upon a time Clerkenwell was a famed centre of the manufacturing jewellery trade, and though there are still many who follow the occupation, much of the industry has moved away. Undertakers seem at present to be the outstanding class of tradesmen. Close by is that atheistic centre, the so-called Hall of Science, Old-street; and Clerkenwell Green was not so long ago the focus of all the turbulent social forces of central London. Happily, since the demise of Mr. Bradlaugh and the defection of Mrs. Besant, clamant infidelity has been on the decline. Throughout this wide-spreading region the Gospel is unceasingly proclaimed and exemplified by the agents of the Central Mission, and the spiritual results are of the most cheering character. With larger and more adequate premises, we believe the Mission will have a still greater sphere of usefulness before it. The superintendent may be trusted to lead his forces into every newly-opened door, and to make every vantage ground the stepping-stone to greater victories for Jesus Christ. He edits a live monthly organ of the Mission called The Central, an admirable record of work and testimony.

The fact that Mr. Wakerley was recently elected on the Board of Guardians, and carried into the vestry at the top of the poll, indicates the high esteem in which he is held by his neighbours. Some of his chief helpers are also vestrymen. There is every certainty, therefore, that Christian principles and methods of relief will be well represented in the administration of the local affairs of this part of the great metropolis. Mr. Wakerley, though busy enough at home, receives constant calls to service in other places. He has just taken a leading part in a special mission of all the Free Churches in the town of Portsmouth.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE MISSION.

The annual gatherings in connection with the work of the Mission were held on Tuesday last week. A luncheon and a tea meeting for the more active friends of the work were interesting occasions. In the evening a large company crowded the Holborn Town Hall, and the proceedings were of the most inspiring sort. King Frost reigned without, but inside all was warmth of soul and general jubilation. A venerated brother, Mr. Robert Carr, of Highgate, presided, and struck the key note in quite a model speech, full of high-toned hopefulness and enthusiasm. Mr. Wakerley gave a capital report of the work of the past year, embodying some of the notes of progress referred to in the foregoing sketch, and many more besides. During the evening two sisters sang beautifully, a special word of praise being due to the lady who rendered with singular pathos a most touching ballad, "Dead for Bread." Fresh from his long stay under the sunny skies of Italy, Rev. H. Price Hughes proved in a powerful speech that he has lost nothing of his gift of effective popular address. He made some telling points in connection with social questions on the tapis, particularly the return of righteous men to the London County Council, and such a civic government of the whole of London as would enable the richer districts to bear a part of the heavy burdens resting on the poorer parts of the city. He ably discharged his usual functions as "whipper in" of the needed funds to meet the mission expenses for the coming year.

REV. THOMAS CHAMPNESS

made the speech of the evening. He had his audience crying and laughing by turns, if not simultaneously. He is now quite a veteran, and though his voice, as he said, is somewhat worn out in the Master's cause, there is no cooling of the central fires, or of his power to move the hearts of others. A speech by Mr. Champness, with its overflowing bonhomie, its rich touches of originality, and its quaint bits of northern dialect, is a thing to be heard rather than reported. Cold type is no vehicle for inspired eloquence. But we must endeavour to reproduce, in some shape or other, two or three of his narratives. He is strong in stories; they often stick, he says, where a sermon would be of no avail. Here is one about

ROYAL SYRUP.

I was away down in Lincolnshire with a man who keeps a lot of beehives and produces a lot of honey. People put up statues to the memory of men who have not done half so much as the fellow who makes honey. That man told me many things about bees. Do you know what they do when there are not as many young bees as there ought to be: when for some reason or other the queen bee is not laying eggs? They begin at once to make a large cell big enough to hold a queen bee. Then they take one of the ordinary grubs that grow into working bees, and they feed it with a kind of food that is called "royal syrup." This food changes the ordinary working bee into a mother of millions. That is what Methodism wants to-day—this royal syrup! There is a promise in Zechariah that the feeble shall be as David and David shall be as an angel of God. Oh that all commonplace people might get some of this royal syrup. This is what we want to-day—to change the ordinary into the extraordinary. This Mission has been raised on royal syrup. I remember St. John's-square when it was only a little grub. I tried to feed it in my poor way, but it was a grub when I got it and a grub when I left it. Something has turned it into a queen bee; and what we want all over Methodism is a good dose of this same royal syrup. If we are to succeed, two things must take place. One is that the converted people must be convicted that sin is a dangerous and a damning thing. Another thing we need to know is that no man is too bad to make an angel out of, if only God can have his own way.

WHO IS THE WICKEDEST MAN?

I have a friend—a little bit of a man if you measure him by inches. Like John Wesley he is a "light weight"; for John Wesley could have ridden in the Derby so far as weight was concerned. He won many a grander prize than that, and on horseback too. This little friend of mine is working as a missionary in Wales. He lives on royal syrup, and it agrees with him too. Do you know what he does? When he goes to a place he asks, "Where does the wickedest man in the village live?" Of course in the country everybody knows everybody; that is the beauty of living in a small place. In London nobody could tell you who the wickedest man is, but in a Welsh village my friend soon finds it out. He makes straight for the man's house; "I am going to have him saved," he says. That's what the royal syrup can do.

The other day he asked the question. They told him where the man lived, but they said, "You must not go there, he will kill you." "Well," said he, "I have never been killed yet." He went into the house where the man lived and said, "I have come to fetch you to chapel. Oh, I have come to do it, and you will have to go." The man laughed him to scorn. "Well, if you won't go, let me pray with you." The man didn't mind that; so he fell down on his knees and prayed. By and by the man began to tremble, and he said, "If you will give over praying I will go with you." The man went off to get his face washed, and my friend was left alone with the wife. She said, "If you get my husband converted you will be doing the grandest thing you ever did." Said my little friend, "Why, you are worse than he is. Look at the house, woman, and the dirt in it? Why don't you wash your face, and comb your hair?" That was plain talk: no need of a Greek Lexicon to see your way through it. The woman began to feel very queer. "You are going to chapel," he said. "Nay, I have no bonnet." "I will get you a bonnet." He got her a bonnet. They both went to the chapel; they yielded to the truth, and God converted them both. A few months after, when my friend went to the place again, he saw a matronly, nice-looking woman, busy about some good work. He asked who she was, and they told him it was the woman he got the bonnet for. That is what the royal syrup does. I am not joking; there is a power that changes the feeble into the mighty, and I want every commonplace Christian here to say, "God helping me, I will have it; I will taste the powers of the world to come."

HOW BLIND MARTHA WAS CURED.

Away yonder in the grimy town of Bolton, in my own Lancashire, there was a little child born. Do you know, it was such a little child that the old ladies who preside on such occasions, said, "We have never seen a child as little as this before; we will have it weighed." So they took it to a green grocer's and weighed it in the scales used for weighing potatoes, with not even a bit of newspaper between it and the scales. The result was that the child caught cold, and the cold went into her eyes; that set up inflammation, and the little girl became blind. Everybody knew blind Martha, and everybody loved her. The parents tried one thing and another, but nothing seemed to be able to cure it. One very hot, bright summer day, when little Martha was sitting behind the door, because her eyes could not bear the light, a knock came to the door. When her mother went to open it she found an itinerant doctor—quacks, some people call them, but I don't. He was going round physicking people and doing them good. I do not know his story; very likely he had fallen under the power of drink, which had brought him down from some high estate. I know that he was a God-blessed man so far as skill was concerned. He saw the little girl, and asked the mother what was the matter with her. "She is blind; she cannot bear the sunshine." He said, "Why don't you get something done for her?" The mother said they had done all sorts of things but it was of no use. "But the child can be cured." "Nay," said the mother; "she's had all sorts o' doctors, but none of them have done her any good." Martha was listening attentively, blind though she was. "The child wants blistering." "Blistering! We have blistered her many times." "Where?" "Behind the ears." "You have blistered her in the wrong place; in a case of this sort you want to have the seat of the inflammation as far as possible from the seat of the pain. I wish you would blister the child's wrists, and I am sure you will soon see a change." "Oh," said the mother, "we have tormented her quite enough." "Well, you remember what I have said, and I will call again."

When the father was told, they began to talk about it, and they thought they had better try; and Martha herself wanted it. So they blistered her at the wrists, and for a while there seemed to be little good done; only the inflammation was not so strong. But one day when the father came home Martha climbed up on his knee, and, looking into his face, she said, "Dada!" "What is it, Martha?" "I can see a bit." I tell you, there was some stir and gladness in that household. Martha's eyes went on getting better and better, until in the course of a few months she got quite strong, so that she was able to go to school. A time came when the children got a half-holiday. They clubbed together and said, "What shall we do? Let's go gathering buttercups and daisies." They asked Martha if she would go, and she said, "Eh? I never saw a buttercup." "We'll take thee." So they went into the meadows and gathered flowers. While they were away the itinerant doctor came round again. "I have called to inquire for the child." "Come in, come in, and sit down," said the mother; "she's gone into the field to gather buttercups." "I am delighted to hear it," he said. Sure enough, at that moment Martha came back with her pinafore full of flowers; she was full of delight; she had never seen anything like it before. "Does thee know who this is, Martha?" "No." "This is the man that cured thee." "Eh? Is it him?" She brought her buttercups, and she poured her treasures down at his feet. "What is thy charge?" said the mother; "we are going to pay thee." "Nay, I want no other payment than the gratitude of this little child."

When I heard the story told in Bolton something in my heart said it would be well if all those who receive great good should say, with Charles Wesley, pouring their treasures down at the Master's feet:—

O let me kiss thy bleeding feet;
And bathe and wash them with my tears.
The story of thy love repeat
In every drooping sinner's ears.

Whatever God gives you, bring it and lay it at the feet of Jesus, and you will find everlasting joy.

MISSION IN EDINBURGH.

An Edinburgh minister writes:—Mr. George Clarke has just held a most encouraging mission here. It was quite undenominational, although the meetings were held in three Free Churches in succession—the first week in Warrender Park (Rev. T. Carrie's), the second in Morningside (Rev. A. Martin's), and the third in the Barclay (Dr. J. H. Wilson's). The attendance was large from the beginning, but it increased each successive week till the last week, when the large church was crowded to its utmost capacity. Mr. Clarke spoke with increasing power, and certainly the last week was the best, alike as regarded the addresses to the Christians in the afternoons and the evangelistic meetings in the evenings. On the third Sabbath there must have been an audience of about two thousand, while the large hall adjoining was filled with an overflow meeting, which was addressed by Mr. W. A. Campbell, of Glasgow. Many were unable to gain admittance. There was throughout the mission a widespread impression, and many remained at the close for conversation and prayer.

Among the inquirers it cannot be said that there was, in many cases, deep conviction of sin. There was more of a realisation of being unsaved and a desire to close with Christ as a present Saviour. A considerable number professed to have decided for Christ, a considerable proportion of these being younger people. Between 500 and 600 gave their names and addresses as inquirers or young Christians. These came from all parts of the city, representing all classes of society and all churches—Established, United Presbyterian, Free, Episcopalian, Congregational, Baptist, Methodist, while many had no church connection.

On the last Sabbath of the Mission Mr. Clarke addressed a meeting for young Christians in Morningside Church in the afternoon, and in the evening a meeting for women in the Barclay Church, and for men (including many University students) in Warrender Park. These were all largely attended. At the close of the meeting in the Barclay, which was composed mainly of young women, Mr. Clarke, speaking from the words, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve," pressed the matter of immediate decision for Christ, and asked those who had decided, or wished now to decide for Christ to rise, when almost the whole of the vast audience crowding the church in every part rose to their feet.

It would be premature as yet to say much as to results. Time will be required to prove the genuineness of the progression made. Meanwhile there is much ground for hope. Christian people have been refreshed and edified. Earnest Christian workers have had their hands filled with work for which they had been longing. In a number of cases, several members of the same family have been brought to Christ; and in one large establishment as many as forty-five are said to have professed their faith in Christ. Mr. Clarke is expected to resume his work in the west end of Edinburgh in March, and on the south side of the city in April, and his visit is being looked forward to with much expectation.

It may not be amiss to say that the union of the three congregations mainly engaged in the recent Mission has been a very happy one. There has been most hearty and harmonious co-operation on the part of the ministers and Christian workers, and a united and powerful choir has strengthened the hands of Mr. Clarke all through.

EXCEEDING IN EXCELLENCE.

Deep lie the waters in mossy wells,
And deep lie the shadows in woodland dells;
But deeper and stronger than ocean's roll,
Are the yearning depths of the waking soul.

Warm is the breath of the summer day,
And warm is the light of the sun's strong ray,
And warm is the breast of the nestling dove;
But warmer than all is the heart of love.

White is the lily on yonder lake,
And white in the winter the soft snowflake;
But a soul redeemed, in its spotless glow,
Is fairer than lily, and whiter than snow.

Sweet is the juice of the mellow fruit,
And sweet is the sound of the silver lute.
And the glances of childhood, free from guile;
But sweeter than all is a mother's smile.

Mystery spreads o'er the midnight skies,
And mystery reigneth where deep sleep lies,
And mystery dwells in the babe's first breath;
But none hath a mystery like to death.

Precious indeed are the lustrous gems
Which shine in earth's costly diadems,
The ruby which gleams in the solid gold;
But wisdom, more precious a thousandfold.

Mighty is he who hath won the fight,
And mighty is he who hath stood for "Right";
But mightier far is the noble soul
That hath fought the battle of self-control.

Great is the king whom the nations fear,
And great is the judge with a judgment clear,
And great is the man to whom much is given,
But greater the least in the kingdom, Heaven.

True are the beamings of friendship's gaze,
And true are the seasons' returning days,
And the counsels of age to the thoughtless youth;
But the Word of Life is the very truth.

Free is the course of the grand wild wind.
And free is the flight of the raptured mind;
But freer than all things without, within,
The conscience of him that is free from sin.

Hopeful the traveller to gain his rest,
And hopeful the worker to win the best;
But the certain hope that shall never fail
Is that which is "anchored within the veil."

READING FOR THE BLIND.

Sir,—Seeing a report in your paper of the Lending Library for the Blind, 114, Belsize-road, it has occurred to me that some of your readers might be glad to know how pleasant an occupation writing in Braille for the blind is. Since we first learnt it, in May, 1888, my sister and I have written upwards of eighty volumes, and the work is of ever-growing interest.

To anyone living a solitary life, it is of especial value, being an entire change from reading, writing, and working. I have known no real writer in Braille willing to give it up, while to many anxious and over-wrought minds, it has been an immense benefit, taking them out of themselves, while doing a real work for the good of their suffering fellow-creatures, and therefore for their Father in Heaven.

All particulars and means of working can be obtained from Miss Arnold, at the Library for the Blind, 114, Belsize-road, N.W.—Faithfully yours, Mary Griffiths.

The Evangelist.

CHRIST'S TOUCH OF EAR AND TONGUE.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

A large portion of Christ's biography, as given by three of the four Evangelists, is devoted to a narrative of his miracles. These deeds of healing are narrated not simply to attest his Divine power and compassion; for two or three cases would prove his divinity as decisively as two or three scores of them would do it. Each miracle has some peculiar feature, and nearly every one teaches some underlying spiritual truth. The miracles become object-lessons, and when grouped together they form a delightful little system of practical theology.

Take, for example, that scene in the region of Decapolis which Mark describes to us; and upon the thread of that short story see how many pearls of practical truth are strung. A man was brought to Christ who was doubly afflicted. He was deaf, and he had such an impediment in his speech that he could scarcely speak at all. Both the inlet and outlet of sound were obstructed. If anyone said a good thing he could not hear it, and if he had a good thing to say he could not utter it. This poor fellow illustrates the condition of a soul that is marred and diseased by sin. Every unconverted person resembles that man, for he is deaf to the voice of God, and as to the praise and service of God he is speechless. If you, my reader, have never listened to Christ's invitation and have never uttered an honest prayer to Him, then this picture portrays you. And if you really desire to be a different man and a better man, just observe what steps were taken by that sufferer in the coasts of Decapolis.

The first step he took is the one that you must take. He came directly to the compassionate and almighty Saviour. There is no hope for any sinner who stays away from Christ. "Come unto Me!" In these three short words is condensed the mightiest love message ever given to this sinning, sobbing, suffering world. And when a sinner comes to Christ he will not be allowed to suggest methods or name conditions or prescribe terms. The friends of that deaf man made a mistake when they besought Jesus to "put his hand upon him." Christ has his own way of doing his own work. No two conversions are any more exactly alike than any two human faces. Don't compare your own feelings with the experiences of other people, and expect to have their degree of sorrow for your sins, or expect to be wrought upon by the Holy Spirit as other souls have been converted. There is no stereotyped mould for the new birth. Christ is a Sovereign; he will heal you just as he chooses; be thankful that you can be healed at all.

There was a crowd waiting to see Christ lay his hand on the deaf stammerer; but on that occasion their curiosity was not gratified. Jesus led the man away from all the tumult and the interruptions of the crowd that He might produce all the more deep personal impression upon him. He dealt with him alone. Jesus often shuts a soul away in the solitude of a sick-room or in the loneliness of a bereavement in order that the soul may listen to his voice of love. In the process of conversion there is no help to be gained from any third party, much less from the crowd. Every seeker for salvation must come directly and personally to Jesus. An hour spent in secret, penitent, self-surrendering prayer, alone with Christ and your Bible, is worth more than twenty hours spent in listening to sermons or conversing with Christians. The best "inquiry meeting" in the world is where there are just two present—Jesus and a praying penitent. I wish that more people—yes, that more Christians—were willing to spend an honest hour with Jesus.

This poor deaf and dumb man obeyed. He submissively yielded himself to the Saviour, and it was the one decisive act on his own part that brought to him the coveted blessing. In fact, about the main thing that you or any awakened, anxious soul can do is to let Jesus Christ have his way with you. Saul of Tarsus had been bent on his own way—a brutal and devilish way it was, too; the short turn was when he cried out, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" A genuine Christian life is just the doing Christ's will. Happy is that person who begins there, for he or she has got to come there sooner or later, or else be lost. Christ's method with the man who had a deaf ear and a speechless tongue was to touch the diseased organs.

Christ went right to the root and the seat of the difficulty. Commonly the trouble with sinners is that they don't want Christ's hand laid on their besetting sins. But He never will consent to compromise with our evil appetites or lusts, nor will he give us pardon or peace until we are willing to put the knife to favourite sins. The great work of the Holy Spirit is to convict a sinner and make him see his own depraved heart, self-will, and corrupt affections. Right there, on the heart, the will, the affections, Christ must lay his loving hand, or there will be no genuine lasting conversion. Halfway converts make halfway Christians. Unless, my friend, you are willing to submit your sin-diseased heart to the searching, cleansing, renewing hand of the Divine Healer, there is no hope for you.

There is one pathetic stroke in the account of our Lord's dealing with that man near the shore of Galilee. He "looked up to Heaven and sighed." That sigh meant not only pity for one sufferer, but, as Luther says, "it was a common sigh over all tongues and ears, over all hearts and souls, over all sinful men from Adam to his last descendant." No one can sympathise with us like the Man of Sorrows. Jesus, with a pitying sigh, speaks the omnipotent word which opens a new world to one hitherto locked up in the prison-house of silence. "Ephphatha!" That word spoken in the every-day dialect of the country signifies "be thou opened!" It was the man whom Christ addresses, and not the touched ears and tongue. The man had to be opened to the income of sound and the outcome of speech; and oh, what music there was in that word! Perhaps the happy creature loved to repeat that charmed word to himself for years afterwards. So have many of God's people loved to recall the scenes, the sermon, the faithful words spoken to them, or the prayer or something that was as indelibly linked with their conversion as the word "Ephphatha!" was linked with that man's recovery.

Immediately his ears were opened, and his tongue was unloosed. We are told that he spoke plain; or, as Wyclif has it, he spoke rightly. The touched tongue speaks out of the abundance of the heart. We like to hear young converts give clear, unmistakable testimony to the power of converting grace. Nothing thrills a prayer meeting like the testimony of one who can stand up and say, "I was dead, and now I am alive; I was blind, and now I can see." The vernacular of Zion is praise to the love that saved us from hell, and put the new song into our opened hearts and tongues.

A happy man was that dwelling in Decapolis. How delicious the first music of bird songs and the voices of his loved ones! A new inlet of joy was given to him, and a new outlet for thought and affection. At last the fraction of a man becomes a whole man. Just so will it be to you, my friend, if you will bring your sin-diseased heart to Jesus Christ. Hitherto you have been deaf to his voice (and to your own conscience too) and dumb to his service. Let Jesus Christ touch the mainspring of your soul; give yourself up to Him, and He will open a new world to you. A new life will begin, with new aims, and new aspirations, and new joys, and new usefulness and new hopes; and you will wonder that you never came to Christ before.

MR. LANE AT CHELTENHAM.

It is with great thankfulness that we look back upon the visit of this faithful servant of the Lord to our town. We feel definite blessing has been received. Not only has an impetus been given to the work of the Y.M.C.A., but increased encouragement to Gospel effort.

The meetings, both afternoon and evening, were held at the Corn Exchange, and were well attended, in spite of the inclement weather. Many remained behind to the after-meetings, convinced by the Holy Spirit of their sins, and of their need of Christ as their Saviour. In these days of conflicting opinions, when truth is sacrificed, one was glad to hear such sound, Scriptural teaching on such vital subjects as Ruin, Redemption, and Regeneration. Mr. Lane has left behind him in this place many warm, Christian hearts, who cherish the hope of welcoming him again next year, if the Lord will.

NOTES FROM AMOY.

Our best piece of recent news is that the well-known missioner, Mr. Millard, has been with us. It is no small grace of God that he has been raised up from amongst the merchant community in Foochow, and has now for years testified to the Gospel of the grace of God. Since the last summer the fruit of Mr. Millard's work seems to multiply, and tells on both Chinese and Europeans, perhaps specially on the former. Praise be to God for this. It encourages our faith. One Chinaman has so received the grace of God that he has been chosen for work in preference to many generally regarded his superiors.

Mr. Millard has impressed our Chinese, both those who saw him and those who heard of his information, through showing something of the way he has been led. He was not always successful in service, and when this came home to him, and he asked the Lord why, it was revealed to him that there existed in him evils of the heart which prevented the inflow of the Holy Ghost. He frankly told of the besetting sins of temper, and resistance to control, and impure thoughts, which had hindered the working of God. When a leading Chinese pastor heard of this, he solemnly explained to his people, "These sins are the sins of us all."

Alas! there was proof even before him. A man who had entered the meeting so full of earthly things as to refuse to take any part, hearing a statement of these facts, was roused in soul and voluntarily prayed. God is very gracious to our beloved brother, not only in granting blessing on translations of his utterances, but on reports. No blessing is so greatly needed amongst Chinese Christians as deliverance from besetting sins. Our friend addressed the students of three colleges with power, deeply impressing the men with the necessity of being willing that God should search them, and reveal any evil way, cleanse from it, and then fill with his Spirit, so that their service for Him may be truly effective, as that of others whom he instanced.

The Chinese believe in reality. It is said of our friend that gay men of the world, who have not yet come to enjoy God, admire his consistency, and see "the sharp threshing instrument" he has become in the hand of God. This wins a hearing for him with the money-loving and pleasure-loving Chinese. Also the Chinese, equally with all of us, like to see something done. Mr. Millard was able to give a series of facts of men in whom the awful craving for drink, gambling, and other sins had been once and for ever taken away, and a new heart, and life, and love given them.

A gentleman who had heard Mr. Millard singing said, "He is a trained man." When accomplishments of education, refinement, knowledge of men, and wide acquaintance with the truth of God are pressed into the Master's service, there is an example which may stir young men whose lives are spent in "sham nothings." Of course, it does not follow that all who hear our friend judge alike. Some sympathy with God is required to see his working. In some cases conviction is hard to bear, and excused in a variety of ways. Once, a lady in whom the arrow of God stuck fast, sent her husband to expostulate. Mr. Millard said, "I cannot draw back from what was spoken, being satisfied it was given me thus to speak. This conviction may last days." It did so, and ended in a blessing. So may all who need wounding, be both wounded and healed!

A native pastor, who had ideas of serving God which needed testing, was wise enough to submit to probing. He went away a quieter and wiser man, resolved to wait on God till the Divine will should be known. Praised be God for new tokens given that our Chinese fellow Christians can be led on to the most blessed experiences of the Christian life. It is further matter for joy that a number of missionaries are in deep sympathy with Mr. Millard's efforts. All varieties of nature are harmonised and employed through the love of Christ. One missionary woke up to the consciousness that salvation from sin meant something more than a deadly conflict with powers of evil. Christ can and does give present and joyous deliverance, till a man knows the Spirit is working through him. J. Sadler.

CANON BARKER, of London, spoke last week at the jubilee meetings of the Aberdeen Temperance Society.

THREE MISSIONARY AMBITIONS.

By the late Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D., Boston.

We are often greatly indebted to one who asks us a question. A student inquired of us one day whether the Bible anywhere sanctions ambition. Yes; for though the word is not found in the English concordance, it occurs in the original. The word φιλοτιμέομαι, to love honour, is found three times in the Greek Testament, and the three texts where it occurs constitute an admirable chain of missionary exhortation.

I. The Field: "Yea, so have I been ambitious to preach the Gospel where Christ was named, lest I should build upon another man's foundation" (Rom. xv. 20).

This is not according to the course of this world. If one were buying a house-lot it would be no objection, other conditions being favourable, that he could secure a plot where the foundation-stones had been already laid, leaving nothing to be done but to rear the superstructure, store upon store, till the building should be complete. "No!" says the apostle, "I desire a field where not a sod has been turned, where not a turf has been broken, lest I should build upon another man's foundation." If this saying sounds paradoxical, we believe that on reflection the whole philosophy of missions will be found wrapped up in it. The great commission reads, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature," not, "Stay in one part of the world and build up a Christian civilisation." As distinctly as concentration was the principle of Judaism, so clearly is diffusion the principle of Christianity. The requirement of the one was that all should come to Jerusalem; the command of the other is that Jerusalem shall go to all men. And this latter idea is so vital to the Gospel that it cannot be violated without the most fatal results. There is a wise saying that "capital is the blood of business," and the body politic can only be healthy

AS IT IS KEPT IN CIRCULATION.

But who, looking at the condition of the Protestant world to-day, can doubt that Christianity is suffering from congestion at the centres—too much blood around the educational centres of Christendom, producing that intellectual vertigo by which so many theological professors are made to stumble upon the skandalon of sceptical criticism; and too much blood about the religious centres, the home churches, causing that fatty degeneration of the heart by which Christians are becoming inclined to a good-natured and easy-going toleration of all religions—pagan, heathen, and infidel. "In union is strength," the world's maxim; "in diffusion is strength" is the motto of Christianity. "Tear down the rookeries if you would be rid of the rooks," was John Knox's advice for dealing with the religious houses where the monks and friars of his day were congregated, to fatten on the life of the nation. What intelligent Christian can question the vast benefit which would accrue to the world if there could be a removal of those theological "foundations" on which such learned professors as Wellhausen and Kuenen and Pfleiderer and their American sympathisers have rested, while they have undermined the authority of that Bible which they are employed to teach? and if the endowment of their chairs could be capitalised for sending hundreds of plain, pious, and consecrated missionaries to the heathen, even though those missionaries were utterly ignorant of Hebrew or Greek or systematic theology? Cromwell put the same hard sense into another saying when, inquiring about certain silver shrines in the cathedrals, he was told that they were effigies of the twelve apostles. "Melt them up and coin them into shillings, and send them about doing good!" he exclaimed.

So we say with the utmost emphasis concerning the architectural luxuries and the artistic choirs and the sumptous adornments of our modern sanctuaries. What an unspeakable blessing might come to the world if the evangelical wealth thus employed could be coined into missionaries and sent to those who have never heard the Gospel! The apostle's saying embodies the deepest wisdom, and its truth was never more apparent than now. We believe that the great commission contains the best antidote against the great relapse which threatens the Church to-day; that apostolic missions, undertaken with new zeal, furnish the only line of resistance against the apostate theology and the apostate Christianity which are now coming in upon us like a flood.

DIFFUSION OR DEATH

is the alternative which faces us. The church which is not a missionary church must now become a missing church. The foundations which our fathers laid in faith and prayer are in many instances being built upon with hay, wood, and stubble; the true-hearted must turn aside from them and build anew upon the foundation of apostles and prophets.

In a word, it seems to us that in the apostle's method lies the true secret, not only of the salvation of the world, but of the safety of the Church. The mission workers in our city, who, without pay or patronage, plunge down into the slums to rescue the perishing, are rarely found to be unsound teachers of the Gospel. In mingling with them we have constantly been surprised and delighted at the Evangelical correctness of their teaching. On the other hand, there are scores of preachers in the same city who are building on ecclesiastical foundations many generations deep—creed foundations, wealth foundations, and culture foundations—of whom it may be said without slander that the preaching of the simple Evangelical Gospel is the last thing they know how to do. We see the saying of Dr. Duff demonstrated on every hand: "The church which ceases to be evangelistic will soon cease to be Evangelical."

II. The Work.—Paul exhorts the Thessalonian Christians that they "be ambitious to be quiet, and to do their own business," etc. (1 Thess. iv. 11). The nature of that business is not defined, but the τὰ ἴδια points to the Christian's special and peculiar work. "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" asked Jesus when his mother was chiding Him for neglect of parental claims. And since the great commission was given, every disciple may answer the claims of business, and the claims of society, and even the claims of the home church with the question: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Master's business?" There is, there can be, now no work comparable for a moment with that of making known the Gospel to the unsaved millions for whom Christ died. And is there any sphere where a sanctified ambition is more strongly demanded than here? The lament of an eminent labourer on the foreign field, that in spite of all which the Christian Church has attempted and accomplished in this century, "it has thus far only been playing at missions," is a statement borne out by actual facts; for do not men who "mean business" put themselves and their energy and their capital and their time into their special work? Has the Church of the nineteenth century, with all its efforts toward world-wide evangelisation, done this? "Let us not be pessimists, but let us be truthists," says, and well says, a Scotch preacher. We do not expect perfection in the Christian Church, but it is better that we aim at perfection and come short of it than to aim at imperfection and attain it.

WE ARE IN DANGER OF SELF-COMPLACENCY

in view of what we have done, if we do not impartially judge ourselves for what we have failed to do.

Let us examine ourselves, then, concerning our outlay for the great work in comparison with our inlay for ourselves.

According to the best estimate which we can obtain, there are now above nine thousand missionaries on the foreign field—a noble army of witnesses for which we should devoutly praise God. But it is computed that there are a hundred and thirty thousand ordained ministers at home representing the same constituency. How vast the disproportion! Fifteen times as many building on foundations already laid as there are preaching the Gospel where Christ is not named. Does this represent the most aggressive business policy in the enterprise of missions?

At the lowest estimate fourteen million dollars were given by Protestant Christendom last year for the cause of foreign missions. We praise God for this testimony of Christian hearts to the constraining power of Jesus' love, and for all of sacrifice and self-denial which it represents. And yet, though the Christians of America gave nearly one half of this sum, they gave it, according to the reckoning of Dr. Strong, based on the census of 1890, out of wealth amounting to thirteen billions of dollars now in the hands of the Christians of the United States; so that by the law of proportional giving they contributed on that year, he says, one thirty-second part of one per cent. of their means to foreign missions. A widow's mite, indeed, but a mite subtracted from millions left untouched—a speck of gold-dust dropped from a mountain of gold coins! Does this look like an aggressive policy on the part of those who are doing business for God? Again, it is held by many Christians that the task which the Church has assigned to her is that of converting the whole world to Christ.

If success is any criterion of business enterprise, let us ask what has been actually done? Hardly more than two million disciples can be reckoned as the result of the toil and effort of this century of missions; and if we add what are called "adherents"—those who have in some sense been influenced by Christianity and identified with it—we may perhaps compute two millions more. But while we rejoice and give thanks for what has thus been wrought, we have to remember that in the same hundred years in which this has been accomplished the heathen and Mohammedan population of the globe has increased by two hundred millions; in other words, the false religions have in the race for the conquest of this earth to Christ.* How long will it take to convert the world at this rate of speed? Is it true that the children of this world are swifter as well as wiser in their generation than the children of light? A hundred years have elapsed since Carey went to India, and still vast portions of that empire remain unreached. The British Government took the census of India three years ago, and did it in a single day—its two hundred and eighty millions of population numbered and registered within twenty-four hours; and yet in a hundred years missions have not succeeded in reaching all in that vast empire, and Standard Oil cans are found to-day adorning the native houses in India, where as yet no Christians are found.

Nay, more; we have to be rebuked not only by comparing ourselves with the children of this world, but with the children of the Evil One. Did we spend less than a million for promoting the worship of our Christ in China last year? One of the oldest missionaries in that empire estimates that the worshippers of demons spent a hundred and thirty millions in sacrifices to their god, the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience. What shall we say to these things? We must ponder them seriously, and ask thoughtfully whether there is not room for a vastly larger business ambition in carrying on the work of missions? And if, perchance, we see those who really rise to the height of this great argument, let us not count them fools and fanatics.

A scene which recently occurred at a missionary meeting of Dr. Simpson, in New York, has been reported far and wide, and with not a little comment. It seems that at this gathering, the people became so impressed with the claims of Missions, and with a sence of their supreme obligation to Christ on behalf of a lost world, that they brought not only their money, but their jewels and bracelets, their watches and their rings, and laid them on the altar for foreign missions. Some conservative Christians have spoken against this action as decidedly unbecoming, as nothing less than an outbreak of religious hysteria, from which they pray to be delivered; and more charitable critics have said that at least it was a very eccentric procedure. Eccentric to what? Such as become truly centred in Christ are likely to be found out of centre with

THOSE WHOSE ORBIT IS THE WORLD.

That was an eccentric scene recorded in the nineteenth of Acts, where many that believed came and confessed and showed their deeds, and made a sacrifice that counted up "to fifty thousand pieces of silver"; but the issue thereof was that "mightily grew the Word of the Lord, and prevailed." In these days of burdened missionary treasuries the last thing we need to fear is an extravagant ambition in doing the Lord's business, which is our business, and in giving the Lord's wealth.

III. Our Reward.—"Wherefore we are ambitious, that, whether present or absent, we may be well pleasing unto Him" (2 Cor. v. 9, vide R.V.). This certainly is the highest evangelical motive. Neither apostolic succession nor apostolic success constitutes the truest credential of the missionary. "No soldier on service entangleth himself in the affairs of this life" (2 Tim. ii. 4. R.V.). No; not even if, by so doing, he could enhance his success and multiply his conquests. "That he may please Him who enrolled him as a soldier" is the chief aim. The joy of the harvest is blessed; but one must not fix the eye upon this, so as to forget the approval of the Husbandman, which is greater than all.

The first great missionary could say as his highest confession: "I do always the things that please Him" (John viii. 29).

The chief missionary of the apostles writes: "Or do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ" (Gal. i. 10). "I have one passion, it is He, He alone," wrote Zinzendorf. "Here I am, Lord, send me," said David Brainerd. "Send me to the rough and savage pagans of the wilderness; send me from all that is called comfort on earth; send me even to death itself, if it be but in thy service and to promote thy Kingdom." The final award will not be "Well done, good and successful servant"—though blessed are they who shall be counted worthy to achieve success—but "Well done, good and faithful servant."—Missionary Review of the World.

THE STUNDISTS AND THE TSAR.

I HAVE just been reading with great interest the concluding article by a Stundist in THE CHRISTIAN of the 7th inst.

Doubtless it has occurred to many besides myself that, if no previous action can be taken, there is certainly a reasonable hope that during the visit of the Tsar and Tsarina to Great Britain, which has just been announced, opportunity may be afforded for bringing to their notice the terrible condition of their most loyal Stundist subjects through the persecutions they suffer at the hands of officials of the Greek Church, of which His Majesty is the head.

I would urge your readers to obtain for themselves and lend to their friends Hesba Stretton's deeply interesting and most edifying book, "The Highway of Sorrow," which more clearly than any other I know describes the fearful trials these humble-minded and devoted people of God are now being called on to endure.

It is a matter of great thankfulness to us as a nation that the Prince of Wales and our beloved Princess have been able, not only to bring comfort to the hearts of their Imperial Majesties of Russia during their late bereavement, but to cement the friendship of the two greatest Powers of the world.

Is it too much to hope that either through our gracious Queen herself, or H.R.H. the Princess of Wales, the attention of the Empress of Russia, the daughter of the good Princess Alice of Hesse-Darmstadt, may be drawn to this terrible blot on the fair name of her newly-adopted country, and that the cry of God's people in her Empire may reach her during her visit to England?

To ensure this, immediate action should be taken to rouse Christians throughout our country.

MISSION AT PORTSMOUTH.

AN evangelistic mission was held last week, under the direction of the Nonconformist Union, the special missionaries engaged being Revs. F. B. Meyer (of Christ Church, Lambeth) and J. E. Wakerley (of the London Central Mission, Clerkenwell). The Town Hall was used for the evening meetings, and the Elm Grove Baptist Church and Buckland Wesleyan Church for the meetings of the afternoon.

An introductory prayer meeting was held on the previous Saturday evening in the Marie-le-bonne Mission Hall, when an address was given by Rev. J. H. Batt. At the first meeting on Monday Rev. A. E. Sharpley gave an exposition of Scripture. The meetings of Tuesday and Wednesday, conducted by Mr. Meyer, and those of Thursday and Friday, led by Mr. Wakerley, were well attended, despite the bitter weather, and were exceedingly effective. The secretary, Rev. John Kemp, had made arrangements at the Town Hall for inquiry-rooms and workers. Every night persons resorted to them for guidance and prayer. The Congregationalist, Baptist, Wesleyan, and Bible Christian ministers earnestly worked together throughout, with the result that many Christians in all the congregations were greatly quickened, and a number of professed conversions took place.

Some London Missions.

THE ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

THE unique undertaking of this Mission in labouring systematically and successfully for the reclamation of criminals and the saving of erring boys and young women from sinking into a life of habitual crime has made its name known far and near. But while this work is going on as actively and usefully as ever, the Mission is also doing grand service among the poor of St. Giles'. In the arctic weather we have lately been experiencing this work has become peculiarly pressing. How pressing let the following facts attest.

The other morning Mr. Wheatley, whose personal sorrow in the bereavement he has just suffered in the death of his wife, has not been permitted to hinder his activity—was visiting in St. Giles when he observed a little boy clad in one garment, carrying in one hand a cup containing a farthing's worth of milk and in the other a halfpenny worth of bread. The child's feet were blue and chapped by the frost, and he was so evidently suffering that and tried to comfort him. Mr. Wheatley followed him home, found six fatherless shivering mites in a miserable room, fireless and foodless, save for the meagre portion the child had fetched. Mother was out trying to sell in the street. Needless to say immediate wants of the famished bairns were attended to, and a little help is still being given.

Then again, while at Holloway Prison, on Tuesday week, as is his custom morning by morning, he observed among the crowd at the gate, a miserable-looking girl, barely out of her teens, with an infant in arms, evidently very ill. Her husband, it appeared, had been put away for fifteen months, leaving her without means of support. Whatever may be said of the man's wrongdoing, and probably of the thriftless early marriage, the condition of mother and babe was such as to demand attention. After inquiry she was sent to the Women's Home maintained by the St. Giles' Christian Mission. The doctor who was called to the child reported it in a most critical state.

Such cases constantly recur. Apart even from prisoners' families, there are hundreds of men out of employment tramping the streets in dumb despair, while their families are starving. Here is a case in point. A lady was carrying her purse in her hand, when a haggard man passing by, snatched it from her and ran off. The cry was raised, he staggered and stopped. After arrest Mr. Wheatley saw him, and found he had been an honourable honest man all his life. Wife and family at home had tasted nothing for three days, and in his frenzy he had yielded to the sudden impulse of the exposed purse. When, however, he heard himself called "thief" he realised what he had done, and stood still to be captured. The case was thoroughly investigated, the family relieved, the magistrate communicated with, and the man discharged, on recognisances, as a "first offender." Friends came forward, and now the family is provided for till work is found. I confess that here good seems to have come out of evil. I am no teacher of any such doctrine. The fact is merely given as it occurred, and as illustrating the cases that come before the Mission. No Christian heart will admit that wife and children should be left to die of want because the husband yielded to temptation.

With the agony and long drawn-out sorrows of the poor at this trying season this Mission is endeavouring to deal as fully as its funds will permit, and always with a view to setting the distressed on their feet again. The four female missionaries, and numerous voluntary visitors in connection with the Mission, find out the true state of affairs, hidden from the public gaze; and as far as means allow, the help needed is provided. Children shivering in rags, are clothed; a little fire and food are given; the aged (found sometimes in deplorable straits) are aided by warm covering, or tea and coal as need be; the sick are attended to; the unemployed assisted in finding work, or tided over the crisis; the suffering families of men who have done wrong are looked after; and all this beyond and beside the direct rescue work among men, women, and boys who have broken the law—an effort which aims at their salvation, and nothing less. Such a Mission has strong and undoubted claims on the support of all Christians and all patriots. The Superintendent, Mr. William Wheatley, 29, Brooke-street, Holborn, E.C., will gladly afford information as to the varied operations of the St. Giles' Christian Mission.

SPITALFIELDS LODGING-HOUSE BAND.

Among the special missionaries sent forth by the London City Mission, there is one set apart to these last refuges of despair—the East-end common lodging houses. His district includes 171 such houses, and his report affords remarkable testimony to the power of the Gospel amongst those who might by man be deemed as beyond all hope.

My present purpose, however, concerns a special branch of this work rather than lodging-house visiting generally, though its records teem with interest. Round the missionary (Mr. Millership) have gathered a company of fifty devoted young men and women, drawn chiefly from large drapery establishments, who, after their daily toil, give time, strength, and means to service in the lodging-houses. These, with the missionary, hold Gospel services in the common kitchens, free meals to the starving, aid in seeking out and winning lost men and fallen girls: and prove themselves ready to do, to give, and to bear anything, if thereby some from these miserable haunts may be saved—as, indeed, many have been.

Many workers come on Saturday evening to prepare for the Sunday morning free breakfasts. Shortly after midnight, a small band of young men set out to for the homeless. East, West, squares, enbankment and bridges are scanned and breakfast tickets are given to the destitute. Early on Sunday morning those in the lodging-houses who are without a breakfast are supplied, and at 9 a.m. the doors are besieged with a hungry crowd of men, women, and children, of whom 160 are admitted. After the meal the Gospel is set forth. In the afternoon and evening Gospel services are held in various large houses; and not a few have been won to the Saviour by this means.

Apart from this regular work, to which this band give Saturday evening and the Lord's Day, there are open-air meetings (one of the best helpers being converted in these services), weekday meetings, both for men and for women, and a Sunday-school. A very special and fruitful work is also carried on for the rescue of fallen girls, and many have been sent to homes; Miss Steer, Mr. Taylor, and others taking them.

Moreover, distress is at present sorely felt, and every effort is being made by this band to aid those in direst straits. The young women and their friends give and make all they can, but the need demands more assistance. The total number aided in various ways last year was 5564. This band, as an outcome of L.C.M. lodging-house work, affords a fine illustration of what earnest souls, even with limited opportunities, can do, if the heart be stirred with love to the Saviour and pity for the fallen. The treasurer of the Spitalfields Lodging-house Band is Miss Facer, 161, Offord-road, Barnsbury, N.

PEARL FISHER.

A YOUNG PEOPLE'S MISSION.

MR. HENRY COLLINS, of the Evangelisation Society, has conducted a fifteen days' mission to young people at High Wycombe. It was promoted by the members of the Christian Endeavour Societies of the Congregational and Baptist churches, the Y.M.C.A., and the Wesley Mission Band. The different societies prepared the way by united prayer, and a thoroughly organised and large staff for giving publicity to the meetings, and pressing invitations to young people. The Congregational and Baptist ministers assisted at almost every meeting, and other ministers of the town occasionally.

There was a devout and happy spirit of union, cheering to all concerned. The old Congregational meeting-house was lent for the purpose, and though the weather was severe, large attendances were the result, and many professed to be converted and to turn to the Lord. Several backsliders were reclaimed, and more fruit is yet anticipated. The workers and many who found blessing met at a pleasant tea table on Saturday, and afterwards resolved to hold another mission in January, 1896, and to invite Mr. Collins again to conduct it.

Letters to the Editor.

THANKSGIVING AND REVIVAL.

Dear Sir,—The suggestion of your correspondent, W. W. Ashby, I heartily endorse, that believers who are no longer fitted for active service should set apart an hour, on the Lord's Day evening, for prayer on behalf of the messengers still employed in spreading the Gospel over the world. Being myself nearly past work, I gladly join the number of those privileged thus to employ this hour, and only wish that the suggestion could be more generally known in order to be adopted.

If I may be permitted to add another word to your correspondent's suggestion, it is, that those who thus spend this sacred hour in prayer for the spread of the Gospel should devote at least a portion of it in confession, not only of individual, but of the failure of the Church as the witness for Christ on earth, and, realising this, in beseeching our bleseed Lord to come and Himself do speedily that which his Church, during all the centuries of his absence, has failed in accomplishing. As a father runs to the help of a fallen child, so would our Saviour run to he aid of his children if they cried unto Him. For his confession of failure He waits. E. W.

"ADVANCING APOSTASY."

Dear Sir,—In reference to the discussion as to whether Evangelical churches are on the increase or decrease, allow me to ask in which category are we to place those clergymen who have a Ritualistic service and an Evangelical sermon? This is a very frequent combination. Does the one neutralise the other? Does the work of conversion go on? —Yours, &c., An Inquirer.

["See that thou make ALL THINGS according to the pattern shewn thee in the mount."—Ed.]

Dear Sir,—Mr. Eugene Stock, in his letter of last week on the above subject, says: "It is true there are losses in St. Pancras." Perhaps you will allow me, as a former resident of above thirty years' standing in Regent's Park, to show a little of the spread of Ritualism in that part of St. Pancras so well known to me.

St. Mark's, Regent's Park, Evangelical, Rev. W. B. Galloway, now Ritualistic, Rev. Sparrow Simpson. St. Matthew's, Oakley-square, Evangelical, Rev. C. Phillips, now Ritualistic, Rev. H. E. B. Arnold. St. Pancras, Evangelical, Rev. W. Champness and Rev. A. Thorold, now Ritualistic, Rev. H. Paget. St. James's, Hampstead-road, Evangelical, Dr. Stebbing, now and for some time Ritualistic; Rev. — Waldo, Rev. C. W. Hodson, and Rev. V. G. Borradaile. St. Mary's, Seymour-street, Evangelical, Rev. — Stephenson, now Ritualistic, Rev. R. C. L. Reade. St. Stephen's, Camden Town, Evangelical, Rev. — Hannam, now and for some time Ritualistic, Rev. John Fitzgerald.

Comment is needless.—Yours truly, C. B.

Dear Sir,—The spurious "Christian charity" advocated by "C. W. Hawes" would, if consistently carried out, lead to the following conclusions:—

(1) That the Church of England is a vast mistake, as it was founded by men who "denounced" the sacerdotalism of the Church of Rome, and its puerilities as practised at the church Mr. Hawes attends.

(2) That Paul and other apostles were wrong in rebuking the "foolish Galatians" (Gal. i. 9; iii. 1), the tradition-loving Colossians (Col. ii. 8, 20-23), and the teachers of other doctrines (2 John 10.).

(3) That the Lord Himself was uncharitable in denouncing the ceremonialists of his day.

(4) That all the renewing and reforming energy which down through the ages has led the Church of God to "come out and be separate" from evil, has been ungracious and wrong, and that all who cry "Lord, Lord!" and all the teachers of opposing doctrines of professing Christendom, are alike devoted men of God and seeking his honour and glory.

T. Rowland.

Sir,—I have read with interest the letter of Mr. C. W. Hawes in last week's issue, and wish I could rightly join in his views of the actions of Ritualists. Being now past eighty years old, and having taken an active part in Church matters sixty years ago, I look back over the past and mourn that the influence of Evangelicalism has so greatly waned, while Ritualism, with its outward shows, altar lights and processions, is satisfying the minds of the worshippers. This system so indulges the flesh, by allowing worldly gaieties in unison with much devotion, that it is sure to be popular.

Walking for a country tour one afternoon, I saw great numbers coming away from the Highest church there. A resident friend with me remarked, "If you observe Saturday's paper, you will find all of them in the list of those at the ball to-night." Last Saturday's paper of another town records that "the annual gathering of the Girls' Missionary Working Party was held at the Clergy House, and the dancing kept up until the early hours of the next morning." As an aged man, that which most appals me is the spiritual deadness which pervades these churches, even amid the activity of many outward forms. Let us all arise to more earnest prayer.—I am your servant, A Watchman.

Dear Sir,—Might I avail myself of the opportunity of calling attention to the remarkable letter of your correspondent, C. W. Hawes, in your last week's columns? Charitable as he may seem in tone, the writer has unfortunately entirely missed the gist of the Christian position in England. In order to palliate the treacherous action of the "Ritualistic Conspirators" and Oxford apists, he bids us look at the lives of a few of their more notable leaders. In order to excuse his own position (which he candidly states), he asks us to remember we are not judges in God's stead. If we could reasonably pursue such a line of argument, we might undeniably include in the Church's fold such heroic champions against sin as Confucius, Zoroaster, and Mahomet undoubtedly were, assuming from the integrity of the prime movers the honourable and God-fearing characters of their communities downward, the only difference lying in the fact that the one party disacknowledges Christ as God, the other practically acknowledges Him as living God.

Bishop Ryle writes: "Absurd and ridiculous as the customs and 'traditions' of the Pharisees appear at first sight—almost ludicrous and worthy of none but children—we need not look far to find an exact parallel near home. What can we say to the gravity and seriousness with which men argue on behalf of chasubles, albs, copes, lighted candles, flowers, piscinas, sedilia, credence tables, rood-screens, and the like, in the present day? What can we say to the exaggerated attention paid to ceremonies, ornaments, gestures, and postures in the worship of God, about which it is enough to say that Scripture is totally silent! What is it all but Pharisaism again, but a melancholy repetition of disproportioned zeal about men's 'traditional' usages? What single argument can be used in defence of these things that the Pharisees might not have used with equal force? One thousand eight hundred years have passed away, and yet the generation that made so much ado about 'washing pots, cups, and tables' is still among us! Let us beware of attempting to add anything to the Word of God as necessary to salvation. It is as good as saying that his Bible is not perfect, and that we know better what is necessary to salvation. It is just as easy to destroy the authority of the Bible by addition as by subtraction, by burying it under man's inventions, as by denying its truth. The whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible, is our rule of faith—nothing added and nothing taken away. Let us draw a broad line of distinction between those things in religion devised by man and those plainly commanded in God's Word. What man devises may be useful and expedient for the times, but salvation does not hinge on obedience to it. 'Full well ye reject the commandment of God that ye may keep your own traditions'" (Mark pp. 136-138).

If with "altar lights, altar cross, processional cross, eucharistic vestments, and such like" (all utterly without warrant of either the New Testament, or the Early Fathers, and therefore the excrescences of a worldly and eye-pleasing religion) the Gospel of Christ is fully preached, yet "the Word of God is thereby made of none effect through these traditions." The fallible but true minister of Christ may err in his "severe judgments against those who differ from" the Gospel of his Master, but your correspondent forgets that there is a "righteous indignation" which refuses to give quarter to the enemy of the truth (2 Pet. ii. 8).

He is the true preacher of Christ who is a Christian inwardly, not outwardly; who "carries about the dying of our Lord Jesus," not on the body, but in the heart. "The day of the Lord . . . will not be, except there come a falling away at first."

As a proof of "the disacknowledgment of Christ as living God" by the Romanists, the following testimony of Bishop Gardiner in Mary's reign is remarkable. "God's passion," said the bishop. "Did I not tell you, my lord deputy, how you should know a heretic? They have nothing in their mouths, these heretics, but the Lord liveth! the living God! The Lord, and nothing but the Lord!" (Froude, vol. vi. p. 104).—Faithfully yours,

A. H. T. Clarke.

"CHRISTIANS AND MONEY."

Dear Sir,—Is it correct to suppose that Zacchæus "was rich" literally after he had done what the Holy Spirit records? "A. K." omits what I think is the most conclusive testimony that Zacchæus from that time was a shareholder with his Lord as Head of that Great "*Un*limited Liability" company in which all the faithful joyfully invest regardless of consequences as concerns this life. Was Paul a loser when he did so? (Phil. iii. 7, 8, and 2 Cor. vi. 10). If "A. K." will refer again to that Scripture, he will find that after Zacchæus gave half his goods—he most likely gave the other half, because he said: If I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold!

Our Lord knew the hearts of all men. He would not have commended Zacchæus at once as he did as "the lost one saved" if He had detected any mental reservations as to his having sufficient after he had done this to live respectably and comfortably. He who commends the poor widow that gave her all most likely saw Zacchæus doing the same—dear Mr. Moody rightly makes much of restitution on conversion, and as "A. K." says, "Zacchæus was rich," so that he could give half of his goods and yet live respectably; but as his class were notorious for ill-gotten gains, we can fancy one and another hearing of this conversion and coming to claim their money as promised, then his well-to-do friends would say, "What a fool" (1 Cor. iv. 9, 10).

The Holy Spirit has recorded the counterpart in Luke xviii. in the very rich ruler who went away very sorrowful—no salvation. But here the story of Zacchæus closes with his salvation. He has Christ, that is enough; he has all things (1 Cor. iii. 22). Are we ready to follow Christ as did Zacchæus? If not, there must be something wrong on our part (1 Cor. vii. 30, 31). "A. K." asks, "did our Lord say to Zacchæus, Give the other half?" No, because He saw that he had already done so in his heart. Happy Zacchæus! (Luke xiv. 33).—Yours faithfully, Alex Marshall.

Dear Sir,—I have read with much interest the letters on this subject. Without criticising anything written in your pages, it may help sincere seekers after truth if I relate my own experience on this subject.

After my conversion, in reading the Scriptures I came across the Sermon on the Mount, and was much impressed with such verses as Matt vi. 19, 20, 21. I asked myself, "Is this to be taken literally?" and seeing the Lord's disciples took it so, I held that I should also. This was confirmed to me by such a passage as Luke xii. 33. Being a thoroughly business man, I at once acted out these principles to the letter, sincerely believing that it was the Lord's teaching to me in my present position and sphere. I must acknowledge that the Lord richly blessed me in my soul and in my business the years I acted on these principles.

My first experience of the Scriptures was that it was all alike applicable to me. I was like a child looking up to the stars, which, whilst they seemed different in size and brightness, all seemed to be on the same plane; but further knowledge of God's works altered these views considerably. So further knowledge of God's Word altered my views on this subject, for I discovered not only distinctive truths, but distinct lines of truth, and that in his word there was distinct teaching for Jew, Gentile, and Church of God, also teaching in connection with the kingdom (Matt. iv. 17, also v., vi., vii.), and teaching in connection with the Church (1 Tim. vi. 17, 18, 19), and the same Lord who said, "Lay not up," also in different circumstances gave the counsel recorded in Luke xxii. 35, 36, 37.

I now saw that what I had been doing sincerely while acting out Matt. vi., etc. (real true commands), I could not now do, but that the Christian was called in this day of Christ's rejection, to act as a faithful steward in the gifts entrusted to him in his Lord's absence, also that considering that one under the law had to give one-tenth, surely one under grace would be constrained by the love of Christ not to come behind them under the law; and that our high ideal as servants of God, whether possessed of much or little, should be like one of old, to be—

As poor, yet making many rich.

Yours,
2 COR. v. 14, 15.

COUNT TOLSTOI'S VIEWS.

DEAR SIR,—Your notice of Count Tolstoi in THE CHRISTIAN led me to read his book, "My Religion." From this I gather that Count Tolstoi is certainly not what we understand by a Christian and a believer, although he has grasped in a practical way the commands of Jesus in the Sermon on the Mount, and has adopted them literally as his rule of life.

In so doing he has given us a valuable lesson on non-resistance of evil, on purity, on not swearing at all, on love of foreigners as well as our own countrymen, and so forth. But a word of caution seems necessary when it is found that implicitly or explicitly he denies the Incarnation, Redemption, the Atonement, the foreknowledge of Jesus, the need of a new birth, a future state, and Resurrection (which he calls a "superstition").

He says: "The idea of a future eternal life comes neither from Jewish doctrine nor from the doctrine of Jesus, but from an entirely different source." Accordingly he makes the perpetuity of life to be that of the race, not of the individual. "As opposed to the personal life, Jesus taught us not of a life beyond the grave, but of that universal life which comprises within itself the life of humanity past, present, and to come."

He exalts reason as the guide of life. "Jesus first taught men to believe in the light, and that the light is within themselves; Jesus taught men to lift on high the light of reason." He declares the law of Jesus opposed to that of Moses; and scoffs at the definition of faith in Hebrew xi. 1.

Being convinced that this his teaching is by no means to be taken as a whole as sound, I venture to suggest that some remarks to this effect should find place in your paper.—I am, dear Sir, yours truly, G. SAVAGE.

Spring Grove, Isleworth.

[Letters from other correspondents to the same effect have reached us. The article quoted dealt with the practical life and activities of Count Tolstoi, and not with his theological views, from which we dissent as heartily as our correspondents.—ED.]

WINTER IN DONEGAL.

Is this the echo of the great Atlantic,
Through dark Tyrconnell's rude and ragged bays?
The Banshee wailing, or a human moaning,
Borne on the blast amidst the snowy haze?

This muffled cry is coming from the cabins
By mountain gorge and solitary shore—
The wolf of want is ravening on the war-path—
His hungry eyes are gleaming at the door.

The parents crouch beside the potless embers—
Even the old tobacco pipe is dead—
And hear their children, with their pale blue faces,
Appeal in silence, but in vain, for bread.

Oh, brothers, sisters, in your homes of plenty,
While thanking Him who freely gives you all,
Remember those who lack all earthly comfort
Amid the winter snows of Donegal.

Donegal. J. K.

REQUEST FOR PRAYER.—For God's blessing on a Six Days' Mission to Children at Cubitt Town, from Feb. 18 to 23, by C. D. Smith and H. C. M. Wilkins.

MARTYRS' MEMORIAL HALL.—Colonel Sandys, M.P., who presided at the laying of the foundation stone of the Martyrs' Memorial Hall by the late Sir Arthur Blackwood, and was joint trustee with Sir Arthur, has kindly promised to preside on Feb. 20, at the opening of the Blackwood Memorial Institute for Lads, connected with the work of the Dartford Young Men's Bible Class. A memorial organ will be opened at the same time. Of the £500 asked for, £400 has been subscribed. Hitherto, no part of the building has been opened with any debt on it. It is hoped that many friends of the late Sir Arthur Blackwood will attend the opening proceedings. Tickets may be had from Mr. J. Lawrence Mitchell, Gartly House, Dartford.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

OXFORD.

THAT unique event in Oxford life, Canon Christopher's missionary breakfast, was held on Saturday last, and was attended by over 300 senior and junior members of the University and prominent townsmen. The gathering was, as usual, representative of every denomination in Oxford, and a very interesting and helpful address was given by Bishop Ridley of Caledonia, whose North-West American experiences were most graphically pourtrayed, and proved very strong testimonies to the power of the Gospel.

The breakfast always ushers in the C.M.S. Anniversary, and sermons were preached in seven Oxford churches on Sunday, and the annual meeting was held on Monday night. Canon Ince, Regius Professor of Divinity, presided, and paid a warm tribute to C.M.S. work, while Bishop Ridley and Rev. Ll. Lloyd, of Foochow, proved an admirable deputation. Mr. Lloyd was a Sunday-school teacher in St. Aldate's parish twenty-two years ago, and it was a great pleasure to Canon Christopher thus to welcome an old worker.

The weekly meetings of the Missionary Union are again very well provided with speakers representing various societies and churches.

A deputation of boys from Mr. Spurgeon's Orphanage, under Rev. V. Charlesworth, were in Oxford last Sunday, and pleaded in person the cause of the orphan at the Wesley Memorial Church and at the Y.M.C.A.

A united children's service of the schools in the Oxford Sunday School Union was held on Sunday. All such expressions of unity are especially welcome in this city, where differences are so marked and emphasised.

The preacher at Mansfield was Dr. Cameron Lees, of Edinburgh. Dr. Fairbairn's short course of sermons on the Person of Christ have been greatly valued.

IRISH NOTES.

THE Methodist new church and schools at Barrackton, Cork, which have cost about £6000, are rapidly approaching completion, and will be ready for opening in a few months.

Rev. Dr. Buick, of Cullybackey, has been nominated by sixteen Presbyteries for the office of Moderator of the General Assembly for next year, and Dr. Williamson, of Belfast, by seven.

Since last June Mr. Samuel McComas, J.P., has been enabled to pay off £2400 of debt on the building fund of that institution, and hopes to see the debt totally wiped out by the end of the year.

A very remarkable temperance mission has been held in Agnes-street Methodist Church, Belfast. Amongst the speakers were several ladies, while testimonies were given by about a dozen converted drunkards. The singing was splendid, and the meetings have been most encouraging in their results, bringing sunshine and sobriety into many homes.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

DR. ROBSON, late of Inverness, has been inducted into the pastorate of the new U.P. Church in Perth. He is editor of The Missionary Record of the U.P. Church.

Eleven ladies and gentlemen, about to go to Old Calabar in connection with the U.P. Church, have recently attended large farewell meetings at Dundee, Edinburgh, and elsewhere.

Rev. R. Simpson, of Turriff, has been invited to succeed Dr. Walter Smith in the Free High Church, Edinburgh; an invitation to succeed Mr. Lee, of Nairn, has been given to Rev. J. Martin, Free St. Pauls, Edinburgh.

The slum work of the Salvation Army has been inaugurated in Aberdeen.

A meeting to explain the scope and purpose of the Christian Endeavour Society was recently held in Aberdeen, but no definite action was taken in the establishment of branches.

MR. AND MRS. WM. HALL, of Annan, have been conducting a twenty days' mission in St. Paul's (English Presbyterian) Church, Spittal, Berwick-on-Tweed. The work has been one of deep interest, and evidence of the Holy Spirit's presence and power was not wanting.

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND STEBBINS have been evangelising at Waterford, N.Y., and Oxford, Ohio. At the former place, where a good work was done, Mr. John Currie (returned from Scotland) is following up. Oxford is the seat of Miami University, one of the oldest colleges in that section of the country.

The Book World.

THE ARGUMENT FOR CHRISTIANITY, by George C. Lorimer, D.D., minister at Tremont Temple, Boston, U.S.A., is a very useful work on Christian evidences. The treatment is broad, the argument being conducted on many lines, including—from History, Christ, Testimony, and Miracles. These by no means cover the ground, however, for the teaching of prophecy, the need of humanity, and the story of achievement are exhibited with much clearness. Then there is a chapter on the concessions and admissions of great men, and a study of comparative religion. Dr. Lorimer takes high ground throughout, and his work should be placed in the hands of those who suffer from intellectual doubt or spiritual perplexity. The pages evince wide reading; and it is interesting to learn from a prefatory note that the author's wife has done much to enrich and strengthen them. (7s. Baptist Tract and Book Society.)

"ALSO," a Bible-study on the usage of this word in the New Testament, by Rev. E. W. Bullinger, D.D. (4d. The Author, Bromley, Kent.) The opening words of this pamphlet are: "When the word 'also' occurs in a sentence, the sense of the passage entirely depends on its position, and it is impossible to read (especially aloud) correctly and intelligently without knowing the particular word it is intended to emphasise. In the Greek this is never in doubt, but in English literature, including both the Authorised and Revised versions, there seems to be no definite law as to the position of the word 'also,' and no uniformity as to its usage." Dr. Bullinger gives the 378 passages of the New Testament where the Greek kai is represented in an ambiguous or misleading manner in the A.V. and R.V., and also a list of occurrences where the emphasis has been properly indicated. Careful students of the Scriptures will find light on every page of this pamphlet, and those who mark their Bibles will be able to transfer the information by simply underscoring the emphasised word.

INFANT BAPTISM: An Address to those Perplexed. By Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence. (Marshall Brothers.) This is the second edition of a little book which presents with much force an argument which is by no means new—that the ordinance of Baptism is the Christian counterpart of the Hebrew rite of circumcision. These pages attribute to those who hold Believers' Baptism several positions and ideas that are neither distinctive in character nor representatively held, and they contain minor arguments which might well be directed in other quarters. As to the main contention, the fact that the Apostles in council at Jerusalem (Acts xv.) said nothing of the relation of baptism to circumcision, when they might well have been expected to do so, is unnoticed. This is the more remarkable, in view of the fact that the book abounds in arguments e silentio, such as "there is no instance in the New Testament of an infant being rejected from baptism, nor of a person being rebaptized after infant baptism, nor of a son of a believing parent being baptized as an adult!" The book deals with its subject on denominational grounds. The subject is worth more serious discussion, in order that due weight may be given to (1) the admissions of impartial scholars belonging to all communions, (2) the facts of Apostolic history and Christian antiquity, and (3) the practice of the Greek Church, in which immersion has ever been the mode of baptism. We doubt if Baptist controversialists will find any new arguments to answer in this book; but thoroughgoing Protestants, alive to the perils of our day, will seriously question some of its positions; for the baptism of infants is declared to be "more than a dedication" to the Lord,—to be, in fact, admission into covenant with God, and into church membership, and that by a rite which is "for the remission of sins." Baptismal regeneration is a great snare; and this book comes too near sanctioning it with its desiderated priestly functionary.

GOD'S WARNING AND MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH (1d. Marshall Brothers.) A timely and telling pamphlet, by the author of the "Hidden Hand," based on the recent and somewhat remarkable utterances of the Bishops of London, Manchester, and Liverpool, in connection with the progress of Romanism within the Church of England.

Among the various items in the entertainment given by the boys of Stockwell Orphanage, nothing is more heartily enjoyed than the Quick March, entitled Our Banner, which has been published. It is entirely an Orphanage production, the words being written by Rev. V. J. Charlesworth, and the music by Mr. Walter T. Partridge. Both words and music are alike bright, lively, spirited, and inspiriting, and the swing of the piece is such that we anticipate for it a cordial reception. For a choir of boys nothing could be better. Copies may be obtained from the Stockwell Orphanage, S.W.

THE Y.M.C.A.

Reports just to hand show that Johannesburg Y.M.C.A. is doing an excellent work.

Mr. Henry White, an old member of the Stafford Rooms Association in Edgware-road, gives encouraging news of the Y.M.C.A. work in Cape Town.

Mr. A. P. Stockwell, late secretary at Melbourne, passed through London last week on his way from New York, to take up the general secretaryship of the Calcutta Association.

Archdeacon Sinclair has paid a two days' visit to Bristol under the auspices of the local Y.M.C.A., and addressed large and enthusiastic meetings. The Archdeacon also visited Bath, and gave an address in the Jubilee Hall.

The Trowbridge Association held their quarterly meeting Jan. 31. Mr. P. E. Coulson presided, and there was a good attendance. Thirty-eight new members and associates had joined since the Jubilee Conference, held on September 25.

The Croydon Y.M.C.A. General Committee has decided to present a complimentary ticket for the use of the Association to each clergyman, minister, and missionary in the borough. The opening of the new building has been fixed for Wednesday, March 27.

The Indian National Convention of Y.M.C.A.'s has been held at Madras. The proceedings were characterised by a tone of deep spirituality, and were at the same time most practical. Twenty-four Associations were represented. The formation of a National Union was effected. A native agent was called, and, after six months' training at Madras, will take up work in the Tamil country. An appeal was made to the Student Volunteer Movement to co-operate in carrying out University settlements in India.

At the invitation of the Cambridge Heath Congregational Church the members of the Hackney Y.M.C.A. attended a special service there on Sunday evening, when a sermon was preached by the pastor, Rev. J. R. Richards, followed by a brief account of the work of the association by the secretary, Mr. F. L. Porter. A collection was taken in aid of the Y.M.C.A. funds. At the other meetings for young men held during the day addresses were given by Drs. Robert Anderson and John Gritton.

The work of the Y.M.C.A. Mission to Seamen has been carried on at Guernsey for some years with the greatest possible success. Visits are made regularly, in all kinds of weather, every Sunday morning, to all the vessels in the harbour or at anchor in the roadstead. In every case a parcel of books and tracts, or a Bible or Testament, is put on board for the use of the crew, and whenever practicable a short Bible reading or devotional service is held on board one or more of the vessels to which other crews are invited.

Time seems to deepen and extend the interest evinced in the Sunday-afternoon services held by the Belfast Y.M.C.A. in the Ulster Hall. Notwithstanding the severity of the weather, the total attendance for January reached the large figure of 6,000. If the watch-night service and other Gospel meetings are included, the grand total for four weeks reached 12,000 persons which the Y.M.C.A. was the means of bringing together to hear the Gospel preached by faithful ministers of Jesus Christ. In other words, one organisation reached in a month a twenty-fourth part of the entire population of Belfast with the Gospel message. A number of cheering, and in some instances striking, conversions have been reported.

THE Y.W.C.A.

Y.W.C.A. PRAYER UNION.

One of the most valuable parts of the Y.W.C.A. is its members' Prayer Union, which was formed in 1856. Those who join agree to remember young women in prayer on Saturday evenings, and as opportunities occur, to press upon their young sisters the importance of personal decision for Christ. The Prayer Union thus binds the workers together, and is the source of all strength and success. Recently it has been reorganised, to render it more useful. Each member signs a short statement accepting the Y.W.C.A. Basis and suggestions for the guidance of character and conduct, and promising to unite in prayer on Saturday evenings. The "Suggestions" are:—(1) Loyalty to the Lord Jesus Christ. (2) Service and self-sacrifice for others. (3) Regularity in private and united prayer. (4) Daily reading of the Word of God. (5) Purity in word and conduct. (6) Careful observance of Sunday. (7) Endeavour to win others to Christ. The larger adoption of the Prayer Union is already producing greater spiritual results in Y.W.C.A. work.

In the Central Institute Monthly Record for February Miss Wingate writes as follows concerning a proposed new departure:—"To strengthen our Prayer Union, and to bring the duty and responsibility of belonging to it more prominently before our members who desire to confess Christ, we propose for our own Institute the following rules: (1) That admission to our P.U. shall be public, i.e., shall take place in the presence of other members before or after a Bible-class, or some other general gathering. (2) That notice of the meeting when P.U. members are to be admitted be given in the Record, and that those wishing to join be requested to send in their names to Miss Willmot beforehand. (3) That all, no first joining the Association, be admitted as associates only, but may signify their desire to join the P.U. when the next opportunity for admission shall occur." The first admission of P.U. members under these new rules is announced for February 28, after the Bible-class.

BRIEF NOTES.

There has been a steady increase of membership in the Factory Helpers' Union at all the London institutes, whilst the mothers' meetings and junior classes have grown considerably. Many have been brought out of darkness into light. The total abstinence branch (Gospel temperance) is growing rapidly, 100 pledges having been taken in one club alone. The committee announce a deficit of £240.

The annual social gathering of the Hampstead branch, 60, Rosslyn-hill, has been held. About 100 were present, including several old members from a distance. A cheering report was given of the "Fisher's Band," which continues to gather in strangers, many of them being very poor girls. Rev. Geo. Everard offered prayer, and a bright, practical address was given by Canon MacCormick.

The annual meeting of the Putney branch was held, presided over by Capt. the Hon. R. Moreton, R.N. There was a good attendance, and much interest was manifested in the proceedings. Miss Cutbush, the hon. secretary, read the report, which showed that the membership numbered 240, but the financial position was very low, there being a considerable debt. The chairman spoke in high terms of the Y.W.C.A., and exhorted those present to do all they could to help.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

Steady progress is reported in Ireland, partly as the result of the recent convention in Dublin.

The great National Christian Endeavour Convention of 1895 is to be held in Birmingham at Whitsuntide.

The first Scottish National Convention is arranged to be held in St. Andrew's Halls, Glasgow, on April 22 and 23.

On Thursday, March 14, a meeting open to all Endeavourers is to be held in London to consider the report of the National Council on its future organisation. Full details of time and and place will be given in a later issue.

Congregational Endeavourers in the States have during the past year largely supported two of their own number in the foreign field—Miss Abbie G. Chapin, of Tung-cho, China, and Miss Sarah H. Harlow, of Smyrna, Turkey.

Good tidings come from the south side of Glasgow, where a remarkable revival has led to the rise and progress of Christian Endeavour under circumstances of the most hopeful kind. The young people of Langside Free Church have formed themselves into a large society, which consists almost entirely of active members, so strong is the current of spiritual life prevailing, and so eager the desire for consecrated effort. The movement is spreading to other churches around.

A small Swiss Société d'Activité Christienne has been formed in the Chapelle du Valentin, Lausanne, by the pastor, M. Cornforth. It is believed this is the beginning of great things, for the steps which have led to its formation have been evidently guided by God. M. Jaccard, a minister of the Eglise Libre, has been appointed superintendent for Switzerland, and has taken up the work with much warmth.

Jessie M. Murray,
Assistant Superintendent Swiss Y.P.S.C.E.
Sussex Villa, Lausanne, Switzerland.

WOMEN'S PROTESTANT UNION.—On Thursday week the prayer-meeting in Exeter Hall drawing-room was well attended, and the petitions for praise and prayer were as deeply interesting as they were varied. The president, Mrs. W. R. Arbuthnot, spoke at intervals, grouping together the various requests. Mr. R. H. Hill gave a brief but suggestive address on 1 Tim. vi. 13. The Protestant Girl, a new penny monthly, is to be the organ of the Girls' Protestant Union, originated at Plawhatch, East Grinstead, on February 1. It has, it is believed, a mission to fulfil towards the girls of all lands. This new magazine is earnestly commended to the prayers and interest of God's people everywhere, who are seeking to bring the young to Christ, and to build them up in their most holy faith.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

A United Temperance Council for Essex has been formed at Chelmsford.

At Great Harwood the Noncomformist ministers refused to accept any share of £50 forwarded by a brewer.

In Christiania no sale of beer or spirits is now permitted from Saturday afternoon till Monday morning, save to guests staying at respectable cafés.

In connection with the Pledge-signing Crusade special meetings have been held in Reading, Canning Town, Stapleford, Rochester, Kensington, Battersea, Islington, and in many parts in the North.

A Gospel temperance mission in connection with the Islington Ruridecanal Temperance Society has been held at St. Matthew's Schools, Rotherfield-street, by Mr. A. Coates and others.

Lord Selborne is opposed to the Veto Bill, because he thinks publicans should be compensated if their licences are not renewed, and because he does not think temperance would be promoted by the measure.

Dr. F. R. Lees, we regret to state, is detained at home with a sprained ankle, and has been unable to fulfil several engagements, but he is slowly improving, and hopes soon to make up for his enforced absence from the platform.

A newspaper census has been taken at Cardiff on the proposed amendment of the Welsh Sunday Closing Act, to open public-houses for one hour at dinner-time and two hours in the evening. The votes in favour were 8499; against 2559.

The Bishop of Chester is announced to speak in Exeter Hall, Strand, on Feb. 23, at eight o'clock, at a mass meeting of men, upon his (Scandinavian) plan of "Licensing Reform," upon which occasion he will answer any questions and objections of the audience.

The United Temperance Bill, which does not meet with the united support of the temperance party, provides for compensation by increased licensing fees. A would-be publican, when applying for a licence, is required to estimate the profits he expects to make, and to name the sum he is prepared to give for the licence.

"The Gambling Mania," is the title of a pamphlet issued by the committee on Temperance and Public Morals of the U.P. Church of Scotland, on the evils of gambling. It consists of a number of quotations from representative men on this matter. It is hardly too much to say that, within the compass, it will be difficult to find more convincing condemnations of the evil.

The chaplain of Kensington Infirmary says the £140,000,000 spent annually in drink is by no means all there is to complain of. Alcohol is the cause of most people going to the workhouse, the cost of which institutions in London alone amounts to £650,000 a year. Besides this, there is the cost of officers' salaries, schools, and asylums. This is essentially a question for the ratepayers.

The contemplated trip around the world, to carry the W.C.T.U. polyglot petition, has been postponed until 1896, but a foretaste of it will be had in Washington on February 15, when Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard, and other temperance workers will present the petition to the U.S. Government, urging the separation of all governments from the alcohol traffic, the opium trade, and the legalising of social vice.

The Women's Total Abstinence Union held a meeting on Feb. 4, at the Edinburgh Castle Hall. Mrs. W. S. Caine presided. Addresses were given by Miss Annie Macpherson, Mrs. Atherstone, and Miss Down. At Hoxton Hall on Feb. 5, Mrs. Christie Mackenzie occupied the chair, the speakers being Mrs. Septimus Buss, Mrs. Down, and Rev. W. G. Morcom. On the same day a public meeting was held in the Camberwell Baths, Mr. J. T. Sears presiding. The speakers were Mrs. W. S. Caine, Miss M. E. Docwra, Mr. Chas. Wakely, Rev. G. W. Keesey, and Mr. Henry Wood.

"WORDS THAT HAVE HELPED" is the title of a series of articles begun last month in the Salvation Army monthly, All the World; the current issue continues the series. The articles include the testimonies of well-known Salvation Army officers as to the sayings or watchwords which have had special influence on their lives, or have helped them in times of crisis. Some give verses of hymns, others passages of Scripture, and yet others saying of great men. One says: "I hold firm even to the verge of fatalism the text, 'All things work together for good to them that love God.'" Another has for a watchword Carlyle's dictum: "The nakedest, savagest reality, I say, is preferable to any semblance, however dignified." In one case the personal motto is "Others"; in another encouragement has come by remembering the advice, "God can make you master of the situation."

OBITUARY.

REV. ALEX. MACKAY, LL.D.

The death is announced, at Ventnor, in his eightieth year, of Rev. Alexander Mackay, LL.D., F.R.G.S., father of the African missionary and explorer, A. M. Mackay, best known as "Mackay of Uganda." Dr. Mackay was a minister of the Free Church of Scotland, but retiring from active ministerial work somewhat early in life, he devoted himself to literary pursuits. Many of his works, chiefly on educational subjects, had a wide circulation. During his residence in Edinburgh he was associated with Dr. Horatius Bonar. The "Life of A. M. Mackay" was largely compiled from the missionary's correspondence with his father.

MR. WILLIAM ARNOT, GLASGOW.

Many will hear with sorrow of the calling home of this veteran servant of Christ, known to many in connection with the Lord's work, and to many more as the father of the beloved Central African missionary explorer, and the founder of the Garenganze Mission. Mr. Arnot had, we learn, a very peaceful end. "He had suffered some years from diabetes, but an internal hæmorrhage hastened his end." Mr. Arnot, who was aged sixty-six, was a man of strong Christian principles, and deeply concerned in the work of God at home and abroad. He had a keen sense of personal faithfulness, and a great desire that his influence on others might lead them to growth in grace and a firm hold on the Word of God. The spirit of his life at home may be judged from the fact that Frederick Stanley Arnot caught in the bosom of the family his first desire after Christian life and service, whereby he was prepared for the definite impetus to missionary devotion which he received when in 1864 he heard Dr. Livingstone speak at Hamilton.

PROFESSOR R. STUART POOLE.

Bible students all the world over will hear with sorrow of the death of Mr. Reginald Stuart Poole, LL.D., of the British Museum, and until lately Professor of Archæology at University College. While yet a lad he commenced Oriental studies, and at the age of seventeen wrote articles on the intricate problems involved in the dynastic chronology of Manetho. In 1852, at the age of nineteen, he entered the British Museum as an assistant in the department of antiquities, from which he rose to be assistant keeper of the new department of coins and medals in 1866, and finally keeper in 1870. Just before this he went on an archæological mission to Cyprus, Ephesus, and Alexandria, with instructions to report on the excavations of Mr. Hamilton Lang and Mr. Wood, and on the famous Harris Collection. He loved teaching, and would devote himself eagerly to the instruction of mere beginners, whom he soon initiated into lines of serious study. He rendered important service to the Egypt Exploration Fund, of which, in collaboration with Miss Amelia B. Edwards, he was the founder and chief support, and honorary secretary from first to last. He was the author of several valuable works, historical and archæological; also of articles in the "Encylopædia Britannica" and "Smith's Dictionary of the Bible." He retired from the Museum in 1893, after over forty years' service, and, his health giving way, resignation of his professorship soon followed.

MR. J. E. TRESIDDER.

Another serious loss has fallen on the Sunday School Union. Last week we mentioned the death of Mr. Yates, and now we have to record that of Mr. John Edward Tresidder, who passed away on Monday week as the result of an attack of bronchitis. He was born in 1825, and was consequently in his 70th year. At the age of fourteen he began that career of Sunday-school teacher which was continued to the end of his life. For thirty-eight years he had been president of the Walworth Young Men's Bible-class, through which had passed 685 young men, the present membership being about 100. From it had gone out ministers and missionaries, while numbers of its members had their worldly as well as spiritual interests greatly advanced by his kindly solicitude. To the public he has been best known as a member of the committee of the Sunday School Union, which he joined in 1852, becoming afterwards its senior secretary, in which capacity he has rendered invaluable service. It is not too much to say that the present efficiency and usefulness of the Union are largely owing to his assiduous labours and skilled management. But his Christian activities were not confined to Sunday-school work. The Baptist denomination loses in him a most valued supporter. He served for some time on the committee of the Baptist Missionary Society, and was instrumental in forming the Young Men's Missionary Association. He will be mourned deeply in the Baptist Church, Walworth-road, of which he has been for many years a deacon, and where he was greatly esteemed and loved.

MRS. ISABELLA BAINBRIDGE.

A beautiful life ended on earth when, on Jan. 30, Mrs. Isabella Bainbridge was called to the blessed country which she had so long and joyously spoken of as "Home," and the many readers of The Christian, who knew and loved her, will, we hope, welcome these brief memorial words. Her conception of Christian living was that Christ should be "Master and Lord," and her love to Him was so real that it was a joy to her to give Him the first use of all her powers. When her happy married life terminated, thirteen years ago, and her widowhood began, she adopted a simple mode of living, and became truly "a succourer of many," devoting her ample means to the comfort and help of hundreds, who still call her blessed. Her pen as well as her purse was always ready, and there are many who still treasure her strikingly original letters, brimming over with spiritual teaching and human tenderness. Care for others seemed to exclude without an effort thoughts of "old self," as she playfully called it, just as the light makes darkness die. And then, like a halo round her character was her predominant spirit of praise.

Thee I would be always praising, was in later days continually on her lips, uttered with an intensity of feeling that was unmistakable. On Sunday, Jan. 27, she repeated very distinctly the lines,

Seal Thou my breast, and let me wear
That pledge of love for ever there.

It was her last articulate utterance, but on the following Monday and Tuesday a faint smile still crept over the wasted face when she was spoken to, and on Wednesday, after a brief interval of unconsciousness, her breathing just ceased; that was all. Without one mortal struggle she put on immortality.

The life that knows no ending,
The tearless life, was hers.

REV. JAMES GALL, EDINBURGH.

This well-known worker, who for upwards of sixty years has been one of the most active workers and organisers of Christian enterprise and philanthropic work in Edinburgh and throughout the country, died at his residence in Newington-road, last Thursday. Mr. Gall had all but attained the ripe age of eighty-seven, and during his long life was specially identified with new movements of Christian activity. The evangelisation and amelioration of the people led him to devise the work with which his name will be most familiarly remembered—that of father and founder of Carrubbers Close Mission. Beginning that work in the old Whitefield Chapel in Carrubbers Close with some other three fellow-workers, in a short time he had the satisfaction of seeing his ideas take a firm hold of the people in Edinburgh. Since 1858, when the work was begun, to the present day, meetings have been held on every consecutive night; and the foundation principle which he laid down, of the workers being an unpaid agency, has proved a wise one. In religious work—as the author of such books as "Primeval Man Unveiled," "The Evangelistic Baptism," and many other practical works, as well as by his speaking power, but, above all, by his extraordinary organising ability—he has left his mark in a very tangible form. He was long a partner in the firm of James Gall and Son, now Gall and Inglis, and had shown ability in a variety of pursuits. In connection with the remarkable interest created by his work in the early days of Carrubbers Close Mission, he was, much against his will, induced to accept, by the Free Presbytery of Edinburgh, the pastorate of Moray Free Church; but he never felt that to have been a wise step. Some years later, abandoning that position, he organised, in connection with various churches in Edinburgh, Christian Institutes, and established on a satisfactory footing Grove-street Institute in Glasgow, which has occupied in the West the place filled by the Carrubbers Close Mission in Edinburgh. In an early issue we hope to give a portrait and sketch.

L.C.M. EVANGELISTIC CHOIR.—This union in Gospel song reports another year's busy work, recording 349 meetings with 747 addresses, many of these at fairs and races. The members ever hold themselves ready to co-operate with evangelistic workers, particularly the L.C.M. missionaries, in special efforts to make known the Gospel. The secretary is Mr. A. Williams, 18, Ashmere-grove, Brixton, S.W.

CANON GARRATT, OF IPSWICH, feels himself compelled to resign shortly. All classes in the town will feel the loss intensely, as for nearly thirty years he has gone "out and in among them," and no other clergyman is more beloved and respected in the whole diocese. Ipswich is just now suffering great losses, as Rev. G. Lovely, a sturdy champion of Protestantism, who had gathered round him a most devoted congregation in the church of St. Mary Keys, has just passed away. His death, and the resignation of Canon Garratt, will leave the town the poorer.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Dr. Wilbur Chapman's mission in Indianapolis (Ind.) has left remarkable results, giving an impulse to the work of all the churches. Men and women in every walk of life felt the influence of the meetings. Men who for thirty years had been infidels and never darkened a church door were attracted and led to Christ.

Mr. M. B. Williams has closed an excellent mission in Waukon, Iowa, one of the best in the history of the town. The churches united, and the city has been stirred as never before along the lines of social sins. There has been a revival in all the churches. Many converted, most of whom united with the church. (Rev.) S. R. Ferguson.

Mr. William Grove has conducted a fortnight's mission at Sermon-lane Mission, N. From the first God gave blessing, and although the weather was very severe all the time, on every evening good numbers attended, and at every service some came out on the Lord's side. Mr. Grove has now commenced a month's mission at Malden Hall, Kentish Town.
W. Harry Dawe.

Rev. Alexander Patterson has been at Des Moines, Iowa, meetings being held in the Tabernacle, which seats 2500 people. The audience room has been crowded at night, and 1200 men assembled in an afternoon meeting. He also gave addresses at the Y.M.C.A. State Convention at Oskaloosa, Ia., and is now spending a week holding meetings in the University of Illinois at Champaign.

Lancaster.—Miss Hadden has been conducting a mission here in connection with the Y.W.C.A. We have reason to praise God for the much blessing received in the salvation of souls and the quickening of Christians. Owing to this mission, the members of the Y.W.C.A. will conduct a meeting for women in the Central Hall every Sunday afternoon; and they will also continue the Mill Services during the dinner hour once a week. Will those who read these lines pray that in Lancaster these special efforts may be much owned of God.—F. Seward.

Sussex Villages.—In the pretty village of Horsted Keynes a three weeks' mission has been held by Mr. Jas. Lovell. The interest has been great, and the room has been crowded. Young men, after a hard day's work, have walked from the neighbouring villages—Dane Hill (three miles) and Nutley (five miles)—to hear the Word. Will readers pray that the lamp of Divine truth may ever be kept brilliant, and that precious souls may be brought to Christ? Mrs. Arbuthnot, of the W.P.U., has for several successive years kept this evangelist in the district, holding services in a tent, and thus many villages have now permanent buildings. G. E. G.

Coatesville, U.S.A.—A great work of grace has broken forth at Coatesville, Pa., under the leadership of Rev. Benjamin C. Needham, pastor of the Baptist Church. He secured the services of Leonard Weaver, the English evangelist, whose Biblical preaching and powerful appeals have been used by the Holy Spirit in the conversion of a large number of young men. Mr. Weaver speaks daily in the large iron works owned by the Hustons, Quakers, and warm supporters of Mr. Moody. A club of gamblers, numbering seventy-five men, has been disbanded through the conversion of the leader and several members. The work is extending, and many homes are rejoicing over sons and daughters saved. Geo. C. Needham.

Ireland.—Over one hundred persons have professed conversion at a series of Gospel services conducted by Rev. Wm. Meara and others at Killymaddy, co. Armagh. The whole neighbourhood, for miles round, has been stirred as it has not since the year 1859. The meetings are now in the fifth week, and the work still continues. Very successful evangelistic meetings have also been held in Frederick-street Methodist Chapel, Belfast, by Rev. Henry Ball, at which about seventy have professed decision for Christ. Excellent Gospel meetings have also been held in Sackville-street Hall, Dublin, by Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, and in Drum, co. Sligo, by Revs. H. McKeag and T. W. Davidson.

Alva.—On January 6 Mr. Samuel McKenzie began a series of evangelistic meetings in this place, under the united auspices of the Young Men's Evangelistic Association and the Y.W.C.A. At the outset the meetings were not largely attended, but blessing began from the first night and continued throughout. Many professed to have passed from death unto life through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. A noteworthy feature of the work is the deepening of the spiritual life of the Christian workers who took part in the mission, and in giving them a firmer grasp of God's word. Mr. McKenzie left on January 31 to visit the small village of Kennet, near Clackmannan, where the Lord is owning the labours of his servant. After a week's rest he begins work in the U.P. church at Coalsnaughton, on February 17. J. McW.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. H. E. Fox, with his eldest son, hopes to spend March and April in Palestine.

A general mission, extending over thirteen parishes, is now being held in Kensington.

Rev. John Percival, LL.D., Head Master of Rugby, has been appointed Bishop of Hereford.

The Bishop of Bedford has returned to London, but the doctors forbid him for the present to undertake work of any kind.

The income of the East London Church Fund for 1894 amounted to £18,797, an excess of £400 over the income received in 1893, and the highest figure on record.

The fifth of a series of special sermons in defence of Evangelical Protestant truth was delivered in the Albert Memorial Church, Manchester, on Sunday evening, by the Bishop of Sodor and Man.

Within nine days from the meeting at which it was resolved to raise a fund to commemorate the life and work of the late Archdeacon Blakeney in Sheffield no less a sum than £336 3s. 6d. has been subscribed.

In Liverpool the lectures of Mrs. Schor on the manners and customs of the women of Palestine are largely attended. A special feature of the exhibition is a large and beautiful model of Herod's Temple, designed from the descriptions of Josephus and the Talmud by a Liverpool Scripture reader.

Archdeacon Sinclair has delivered two lectures in the Town Hall, Ipswich, to a very large attendance. Canon Garratt took the chair in the afternoon, when the Archdeacon dealt with the principles of the Prayer-book. In the evening Dr. Sinclair spoke on the blessings of the Reformation.

A large congregation assembled to hear Prebendary Webb-Peploe's recent sermon at St. Stephen's, Norwich, in connection with the N.P.C.U. The preacher showed from Holy Scripture and the Prayer-book the non-sacerdotal but Scriptural and spiritual character of the ministry of the Church of England.

The Manchester Guardian states that the vicarage of Sheffield, vacant through the death of Archdeacon Blakeney, has been offered by the Simeon Trustees to Rev. Prebendary W. H. Webb-Peploe. Whether he may be led to accept or not, is an open question. The post is a very important one, but the loss to London would be serious.

The Archbishop of York has made a wise choice in the selection of Canon Favell as Archdeacon of Sheffield, a city which has long been a stronghold of sturdy Evangelical faith. Dr Favell has worked in Sheffield twenty-two years, and is well known and highly respected. He is an eloquent preacher, and has been very successful in both the parishes in which he has laboured.

Services for business men will be held in St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, every Wednesday in Lent, at 1.15 p.m. The preachers will include Archdeacon Farrar and other well-known clergymen.

At Seaton Sluice, in the parish of Delaval, in Northumberland, the unique sight may be witnessed of a building, one half of which is a Mission-chapel of the Church of England, and the other a chapel of the Methodist New Connexion body. The building was originally a brewery, and the present vestry of the Mission-chapel was a bar over which drink was served. The late Marchioness of Waterford, on inheriting the property at Seaton Sluice, at once turned the brewery into a place of worship, and also closed two public-houses on the estate.—The Record.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Wellingborough Church has now 750 members.

Providence-place Church, Cleckheaton, reports 471 members.

Rev. Henry Gardner has closed his pastorate at Hamilton-square Church, Birkenhead.

Rev. R. Balgarnie, having closed his mission at Sutton, Surrey, has begun at Huddersfield.

Rev. T. Bagley has conducted a series of mission services in the Congregational Hall, Soham.

It is stated that Great George-street Church, Liverpool, has raised over £1850 during the past year.

Arley Church, Bristol, reports a considerable accession of members, especially from the Sunday-school.

King-street Church, Dudley, has 141 members, with 400 Sunday scholars, besides 190 in the men's Bible-class.

Rev. Chas. James, of Ryde, Isle of Wight, has been ordered to the South of France for a time in consequence of a serious attack of lung affection.

Principal Cave has intimated his intention of resigning his position as one of the Merchant Lecturers, owing to the pressing nature of his other engagements.

The pastorate of Rev John Wills at West Croydon Church has begun under very encouraging auspices, and the prospect fills the friends with hope and thankfulness.

Sittingbourne Church reports 153 members, of whom 52 were admitted during the year, making 101 during the two years' ministry of the present pastor, Rev. F. J. Trick.

Wycliffe Church, Warrington, reports 317 members. In the Sunday-schools there are 1010 scholars, with fifty teachers, and 1180 members of the P.S.A. Society for men.

Rev. E. H. Reynolds has preached his farewell sermons at Great Ayton, on his removal to Barnsley. During his eighteen years' ministry he has been instrumental in building new school and classrooms, and also reopened the chapels at Stokesley and Broughton, which had been closed many years.

Calls.—Rev. J. S. Stanyon, of Barrow-in-Furness, to Leicester; Rev. W. Cotton, of Stockbridge, to Newhaven (accepted); Mr. J. A. Patrick, to Stand Chapel, Radcliffe; Rev. John Stewart, of Bexhill, to Jarvis Brook, Tunbridge Wells.

Resignations.—Rev. M. Duffill, of Whitefield Tabernacle, City-road, E.C.; Rev. R. Tutin Thomas, of Therfield, Herts; Rev. S. Knowles, of Range Bank, Halifax.

BAPTIST.

A Welsh missionary has been sent out to the Celtic settlement of Rossgoff, Brittany.

Rev. Philip A. Hudgell has commenced his ministry at Junction-street Chapel, Derby.

A new church has been constituted at Horsham, with Rev. H. Hill, Pastors' College, as minister.

Rev. Louis C. Parkinson has commenced his new pastorate at George-street Chapel, Nottingham.

Rev. F. A. Jackson has been recognised as pastor of the Thomas Cooper Memorial Church, Lincoln.

Bideford Church reports thirty-four members admitted during the past year, and an access of interest.

Stoke Green Church, Ipswich, reports 230 members, thirty-two of whom have been received during the past year.

Rev. T. R. M. Stephens, of Bournemouth, has been accepted by the Baptist Missionary Society for Congo mission work.

At a meeting of Kettering and District Fraternal Union, a paper on "The Place of the Doctrine of the Atonement in the Acts of the Apostles" was read by Rev. I. Near. At the evening meeting, addresses were delivered by Revs. C. Andrew, W. J. Tomkins, T. Phillips, T. Collings, and J. Tyrell.

The anniversary services at Rayleigh Park, Brixton Hill, were held on Feb. 3 and 6. On the Sunday sermons were preached by Rev. A. Dickerson; and at the public meeting on Wednesday the speakers were Rev. R. J. Peden, T. Hanger, A. Dickerson, J. Thorold Figg, and the pastor, Frederic Carter.

The Bristol Baptist Itinerant Society has completed seventy years of work. In the sixteen churches visited there are 308 members, 1087 Sunday scholars, and seventy-nine teachers. There are sixty-three men engaged in the work of preaching; of these forty-six are recognised preachers and agents.

At the annual meeting of the church at Willesden Green the secretary reported good work in church and school, with an addition to the membership of nineteen, of whom nine had been baptized. Addresses were delivered by Messrs. Woods, Hay, and Kempton, of the Pastors' College, and Mr. W. J. Barnes, of Camberwell.

The seventeenth anniversary of the church under the ministry of Rev. James Stephens, M.A., at Highgate-road Chapel, was held on February 6. The public meeting was presided over by the pastor, and was largely attended. The report given by the church secretary showed a present membership of 690, of which seventy-six had been added during the past year. The removals by transfer to other churches and other causes, had been sixty-nine. The Sunday-school numbered 680 scholars. Mr. Coxeter, the beloved treasurer of the church, reported that the total receipts for the year had amounted to £1262, exclusive of the offerings contributed for the pastor's support; £596 had been received for foreign missions, £246 for home objects, and £420 for general expenses, including the Sunday-school. Sixteen members of the church are engaged in missionary work in other lands. Pastor H. O. Mackay, of Hendon, gave a stirring address on the personal obligations of each member. The lamented absence of Pastor Archibald Brown, owing to his recent bereavement, called for much sympathy. The meeting was one which afforded much encouragement as to the future under the valued ministry of the beloved pastor of the church.

Calls.—Rev. J. R. Russell to Ashwood Bank, Redditch; Rev. W. Smith, of Henrietta-street, W.C., to Kirton Lindsey; Rev. T. J. Longhurst, of Cambray, Cheltenham, to Weston-super-Mare; Mr. C. E. Shearman, of Pastors' College, to Hook.

Resignation.—Rev. R. F. Guyton, of Trinity, Huntingdon.

METHODIST.

Rev. J. H. Allchurch, of Holt, is laid aside by illness.

A most successful mission has been held at Wheddown Down, Chagford.

New chapels have been opened at Brown Lees (Tunstall) Horsforth (Yorks), South Road (Bishop Auckland).

Sister Lizzie, one of the earliest deaconesses trained at Bowron House, has been compelled by illness to resign her position.

The jubilee of Wesley Chapel, Portsmouth, has been celebrated, Revs. T. Brackenbury, C. H. Kelly, N. Curnock, and others taking part.

Sister May, of Bowron Training Home, known as the singing evangelist, has conducted a series of successful special services at Skircoat-green.

Mr. and Mrs. Gipsey Evens have held a fortnight's mission in Preston with remarkable results. Crowded congregations gathered nightly at Wesley and Lune-street, 300 making a Christian profession.

The adult Bible-class started in connection with the Oakworth School a year ago, in order to retain a hold on the senior scholars, has now a membership of 238, the average attendance during the year being 206.

The Bible Christians have conferences in South Australia, Victoria, Queensland, and New Zealand. They muster 278 churches, 95 ministers, 403 locals, 6709 members (an advance of 1088 in four years), and 14,699 scholars.

The Clapton Mission is giving 1000 dinners weekly to unemployed men. The number of destitute persons aided by the social work of the mission last week was 6000. Twenty-two thousand free breakfasts have been given during the winter to necessitous children.

The combined Wesleyan churches of New South Wales, Victoria and Tasmania, South Australia, Queensland, and New Zealand contain, with mission stations, 2715 chapels, 643 ministers, 4792 local preachers, 84,164 members, 183,100 scholars. In four years the membership has increased 20,854.

The staff of the United Methodist Evangelistic Mission for 1895 numbers six, namely, Messrs. G. Hooper, J. Weedon, G. Harris, A. Megg, G. Weston, and S. Lumley. Mr. J. Sampson, the Cornish evangelist, joins the staff in September. The two mission cars will start work in March.

Dr. Alfred Hogg, United Methodist, writing from Wenchow, states that the native converts are now undergoing a series of persecutions. At Fun-Sing, forty miles north of the city, placards have been issued, threatening all who associate themselves with the detestable foreign doctrines. Notwithstanding this, this mission is making rapid progress, and an increase of the staff will soon become imperative.

The London (Primitive) Council held an all-day conference last week in Surrey Chapel. A paper by Rev. R. S. Blair on "The Past of Primitive Methodism in London," stated that the first attempt to mission London was in 1812, and very little headway was made. In 1822 the Leeds Circuit, having some funds in hand, sent two other missioners, whose stock-in-trade amounted to a few hymn-books and a shilling. In 1823 John Coulson was sent to take charge of the work. He walked the whole 200 miles, and arrived with three shillings in his pocket. The result of these efforts was that London became a small circuit. This year there are twenty-nine circuits, six missions, forty-seven ministers, and 7744 members.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. H. C. Wilson, of Eastbourne, has returned to his duties, refreshed by his trip to Canada.

A new church has been formed at Albert-road, Oswestry, where a mission has for some time been carried on.

Rev. Dr. Raitt, late of Woolwich, has agreed to take charge of the work, and to preach in St. George's Church, Borough-road, Southwark, during the next three months.

The West Merioneth monthly meeting reports the number of communicants as 8296; adherents, 15,048; Sunday scholars, 10,635; teachers, 1462. The collections for all purposes amounted to £11,036.

The Presbyterian Church is prosperous in South Manitoba region. One town of a thousand inhabitants had four churches which worked as one, the Presbyterian being the leading one, the Methodist being second, and the Episcopalian third in point of importance.

The contributions to the Synodical schemes (English Presbyterian) for the past year are as follows:—Sustentation Fund aid, £5606, against £5342 in 1893; Foreign Missions, £8542, against £9235; Jewish Missions, £861, against £876; Continental Churches, £524; College, £769, against £693; Instruction of Youth, £406.

Calls.—Rev. John Vaughan, of Croydon, to St. James's, Sunderland; Rev. John Huey, of Manchester, to Derry; Rev. J. Leward, of Edinburgh, to Leshmahagow (U.P.); Mr. James Burns, to Cheltenham; Rev. R. Allardyce, of Huntly, to be assistant in Selkirk Parish; Rev. John Cæsar, of Aberdeen, as colleague and successor in Panbride parish; Rev. A. Gordon, of Edinburgh, to Monzievaird (accepted); Rev. J. M. Munro, of Glasgow, to Inch Church, Kingussie.

Resignations.—Rev. G. J. Goodman, of Walker; Rev. D. Ogilvy, of Motherwell.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

A new hall for European work has been opened in Bombay.

No less than 26,839 homeless men were sheltered last week in the new "Poor Man's Palace" in Farringdon-street.

Christiania No. 1 Slum Post reports the salvation of twenty-one drunkards, thieves, and criminals within the last few days.

The first donation towards the new Waifs and Strays' Home has arrived from a Manchester friend. Dr. Barnardo and Dr. Stephenson have kindly expressed themselves willing to afford Major Swift all the help they possibly can.

The new Rescue report, entitled "Broken Fetters," is in the printer's hands, and will soon be before the public. It will be a concise epitome of the work accomplished during 1894. The attendances at the Women's Shelters during the year have numbered over 100,000, while more than 120,000 meals have been served at the Food Depôts.

Elaborate preparations are being made in connection with the home-coming of General Booth, whose first welcome meeting will be held in the Albert Hall. Addresses of welcome from various officers and soldiers representing many places of the Salvation Army at home and abroad will be presented, and an enormous attendance is being arranged for.

General Booth has met with extraordinary success in British Columbia. In Vancouver a full description of the methods and working of Salvation Army shelters was laid before the City Council, and it was moved, in regard to a grant for the establishment of a Food and Shelter Home in the city, that the incoming Council be asked to place a sum of the estimates for the scheme.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Healey, Heckmondwike, on 4th inst., Mr. F. J. Devine, aged seventy-six, a useful and earnest evangelist.—At Thergydhoo, Isle of Man, Mr. J. W. Moore, aged ninety-one, whose father was one of John Wesley's first converts in Peel, and who was himself a local preacher since he was seventeen years of age.—At the Rectory, Aythorpe-Roding, Rev. H. Ludgater, aged eighty, rector of the parish for over half a century.—At Lewisham High-road, S.E., on 25th ult., Mr. J. P. Symes, of Millwall, a well-known helper and good worker.—At Northam, Devon, on 1st inst., Mr. Geo. Royce, aged seventy-four, a quiet follower of Jesus.—At Longleat, Ealing, on 4th inst., Mrs. Channer, aged eighty-two, known and loved by many as a true follower of Christ.—At Shepley, Huddersfield, Mr. Thos. Holden, sen., aged eighty-three, who for fifty-four years had faithfully preached the Gospel.—At Vauxhall, on 31st inst., Mr. William Richardson, aged seventy-two.—At Lowestoft, on 2nd inst., Rev. J. M. Randall, aged seventy-six, for forty-four years vicar of Langham, Norfolk.—At Manchester, Mr. C. W. Rippon, aged eighty, a leading spirit among the Methodists.—At Banbury, Miss S. E. Sommerton, better known as Sister Emilie, of the South London Mission, and of Mr. Clegg's Evangelist Home, Halifax.—At Bradford, Mr. Thomas Anderson, aged seventy-two, an active worker.—At Dysselsdorp, Africa, on Dec. 26, Rev. Edward Newton, a devoted Methodist missionary.—At Ballinderry, co. Antrim, Rev. Benjamin Tisdell, an earnest and sympathetic friend of the poor.—At Omagh, Mr. N. Carson, editor and proprietor of the Tyrone Constitution, and an active worker in connection with the Methodist Church.—At Rathvilly, Rev. Saml. Quinton, aged seventy-three years.—At Glengeary, Bridget Villiers Harte, widow of Rev. H. Harte, Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, deeply regretted by a wide circle of friends.—At Tyne-terrace, Ilford, on 31st ult., Mrs. W. Rogers, aged eighty, associated, through husband, son, and son-in-law, with the London City Mission.

Appeals.

Bloomsbury Institution, Birmingham.—Mr. T. Henry writes: We are feeding hundreds of poor five days a week, and have no means unless friends help us.

The Grays Y.M.C.A. has just moved into larger quarters and require about £20 for additional furniture. Mr. Goodchild, District Sec., testifies that our people have a mind to work, but we have little means, being a town comparatively full of young artisans and no residential gentry, population 14,000. Will readers help to supply our needs?

FRIENDLESS & FALLEN.

Homes for 240 Young Women & Girls.

The continuous demand upon our resources necessitates our appealing to the Lord's Stewards to help us in our work among poor young women and girls.

THE SEVERE WEATHER makes it more than ever necessary to give immediate succour to those seeking help.

NINETY-SEVEN APPLICATIONS FOR ADMISSION were received at the office during last month, and SEVENTY-ONE young women and girls were admitted to the OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE, as well as many others to the Homes.

Messrs. Morgan and Scott will receive contributions, or they may be sent to Office:—200, Euston Road, London, N.W. WILLIAM J. TAYLOR.

Bankers, Lloyd's Bank, Ltd., 54, St. James's-street, S.W., on whom all remittances should be crossed Without Food, Fire, or Clothing.

The terribly cold and inclement weather recently experienced has greatly added to the difficulties of our Workers in the East End of London and elsewhere in dealing with the poorest part of the population. Not only to supply the wants of the great family of nearly 5,000 Children now in Dr. Barnardo's 82 distinct Homes, but also to aid the large number of the worthy adult poor dealt with by his 24 Mission Branches. For the former, 15,000 MEALS have to be provided DAILY, whilst for the latter Relief is supplied in various forms and wisely given, after personal visitation of the destitute and starving poor living principally in slum districts, many of whom are without food or firing or sufficient clothing, and cannot obtain work.

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED FOR FOOD & MAINTENANCE.

Donations and Subscriptions gratefully received by the Treasurer, William Fowler, Esq., by the Chairman of Committee, Samuel G. Sheppard, Esq.; by the Vice-Chairman, Howard Williams, Esq.; by the Founder and Director, Dr. Thos. J. Barnardo; or by the Bankers, London and South-Western Bank (Bow Branch), and Messrs. Prescott, Dimsdale, & Co.

COMMUNION—

PRAYER AND THANKSGIVING.

In mem'ry of thy cross, and shame,
I take this supper in thy name;
This juice of grape, and flour of wheat,
My outward man doth drink and eat.

Oh! may my inward man be fed,
With better wine and better bread.
May thy rich flesh, and precious blood,
Supply my spirit's daily food.

So, in its strength from day to day,
Shall I, with joy, go on my way.
I thank Thee, Lord, thou died'st for me,
Oh! may I live and die to Thee.

THE SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND

Was Established 1822,

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Cork, Waterford, &c., as and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. Itinerant Scripture readers are sent at certain periods throughout Ireland—North, South, East and West.

THE WORK IS CARRIED ON IN A SPIRIT OF LOVE, AND NOT OF CONTROVERSY.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports, and hold Meetings on board Ships at hours not interfering with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported solely by voluntary contributions, Secretary:—Capt. Jas. Kearney White.

Offices:—27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin; and 9, Paternoster-row, London.

PARIS CITY MISSION.
President—THE LORD KINNAIRD.
Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq.

Each day has a record of blessing. Our ten evangelists are encouraged by open doors, and a fair share of attention from a people who know not the Gospel. Spiritual darkness is dispersed, while infidelity and superstition are overcome by "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." Several of our liberal friends have been called home, and our poverty is such that unless others cast into this part of our Lord's Treasury the work of an effective missionary must cease.

Information will be given and contributions gladly received by J. M. WEYLLAND, Hon. Sec. 14, Nicoll-road, Harlesden, N.W. c4675

DESPAIRING AND DESTITUTE.—Hundreds of thoroughly reclaimable young men and women are now being turned away from the numerous Labour Homes of the Church Army for want of funds and space. Nearly one million meals served yearly, irrespective of creed, with labour test and Christian sympathy. Donors of 5s. and upwards supplied free with tickets for giving to beggars. £4000 pressingly required for food, clothing, blankets, and maintenance. Remit, Rev. W. CARLILE, Hon. Chief Secretary, Headquarters, 130, Edgware-road, London, W. c3576

THE "LIBERATOR" RELIEF FUND.

Substitutes for lost dividends are being paid half-yearly to some hundreds of destitute victims, 70 years of age and upwards, and will be continued to be sent to them as long as they live.

There are, however, MANY SAD CASES of destitute and invalid victims, between 60 and 70 years of age, for whom we cannot provide, unless we receive further funds IMMEDIATELY.

Cheques and P.O.'s should be made payable to the "Liberator" Relief Fund, and crossed City Bank.

Office:—19, Greenhill Park, Harlesden, London, N.W.

Reasons why the Lord's people should support Ned Wright's work.

BECAUSE we feed the hungry, clothe the destitute, preach the Gospel pure and simple, and find employment for needy cases without fee or reward.

BECAUSE of our long and practical experience among all classes, we are not very easily deceived.

BECAUSE of our past and present knowledge of the thieving world, we get the truth to criminals that no other mission reaches.

BECAUSE we have issued a printed report, audited by chartered accountants, every year for the past 22 years.

BECAUSE we have just opened a refuge for distressed people where they will be temporarily sheltered, hear the Gospel, and receive food without payment.

BECAUSE we have no cash in hand, do not like to go in debt, and beseech you for the Lord's sake to render us some help. However small the sum I shall be grateful, and will send acknowledgment, if name and address is given. The Lord guide your heart and hand is the prayer of

Yours sincerely in Christ,

Notes and Comments.

The social element that is making its appearance more and more plainly in our legislation has received a considerable stimulus from this severe weather. The Committee of Inquiry into the unemployed is instructed to report as soon as possible, and from the tone of the debate in the House of Commons that "soon as possible" is likely to be soon. Men are in no mood to wait in a frost below zero. The children, too, in the elementary schools come in for consideration, Mr. Acland having said in Parliament that in reckoning the attendance grant of children in the country who have difficulty in getting through the snow, he would instruct the inspectors to judge leniently; schools that have been closed through stress of weather will obtain their grant as usual. Our hearts cannot be too tender at a time like this.

This frost will leave us richer in kindness. Young fellows are turning gentle and benevolent to poor children; our policemen—many of them humble heroes in blue—are touched by the sorrows of those who come into their charge, as witness the policemen and jailors who clubbed together and paid a 4s. fine of a man who was out of work, and had left two motherless children at home. "What was to become of those children?" Yes, what indeed? At 69, Temple-chambers, E.C., there is a "Barefoot Mission," which is trying to bring the old shoes and boots of well-to-do people and their cast-off clothes into contact with the bare feet and bare backs of poor men, women, and children. It is a time when not a rag should lie idle.

One of the pathetic features of this rigorous season is the number of industrious men who have felt compelled to accept workhouse relief; one of the tragic features is the number of the poor who have died rather than "go into the house." There must be some cause for this rooted dislike to "the house." Pride can be subdued by hunger, mere foolish and groundless aversion would yield to the same stern power. There must be something which touches self-respect, that violates manhood's honour and womanhood's gentleness. "An Old Guardian" is of opinion that "not systems, but men, need changing." "Our poor are as entitled as are our criminals to the service of humane and cultivated people throughout every office in our Unions." Some poor people have not died in vain, if their deaths should hasten that change in men, wherever it is required, that shall make the relief of the poor a sweet benediction instead of a bitter humiliation.

Lest the friends of the Anti-Gambling League should be discouraged by its failure to obtain a verdict against the Jockey Club, we would point out that, as in the Northampton case, it has succeeded in establishing the illegality of the betting enclosures, its defeat being only upon inadequacy of evidence as to "guilty knowledge" on the part of the stewards. This is an important point gained, and the League only needs to practise the art of "pegging away" to secure ultimate success. Let no one deem these prosecutions to be "throwing good money after bad"; many stones must be sunk before the breakwater is firmly set, and the inrush of the tide of gambling cannot otherwise be stemmed. Meanwhile, the foundations of reform are being well and truly laid, public opinion is awaking from its lethargy, and ere long victory will rear its head if the League is well supported.

In view of the important issues involved in the approaching London County Council election, the National British Women's Temperance Association and the United Kingdom Alliance have conjointly arranged for a meeting for united prayer, to be held at St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross, on the day before the polling, viz., Friday, March 1, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Rev. F. B. Meyer, Mrs. Hugh Price Hughes, Mrs. H. Whitall Smith, Mrs. Baxter, Mrs. Brodie, Mrs. Lamb, Sister Lily, Dr. R. F. Horton, Mr. John Kempster, Mr. W. A. Coote, and others are expected to lead the successive half-hours. Prayer will be made that in this election God may so direct that those shall be chosen who will act for righteousness, purity, and justice.

The Licensed Victuallers' Society of London has made a strong appeal to its members, or rather to every publican, to do his utmost to oppose the Progressives by influencing his customers and by giving his money. "If the election is to be fought out properly it will involve a large expenditure of money." We know no political party in this journal, but if the public-house interest of this vast metropolis is against one party and for the other, in the present struggle which is to culminate on Saturday, March 2, we should have no hesitation in deciding against the party which is supported by the most degrading and most perilous trade among us. Will not both parties disown and throw overboard this ally? The party that accepts it will surely in the long run suffer destruction.

Mr. Edward Thornton, a member of the Amalgamated Society of Engineers, and of the London Trades Council, writes to The Church Times to explain why working men do not come to church. He has some startling evidence to give. In a factory with 2000 men in which he has worked he found three Roman Catholics, one Churchman, and one Dissenter. In a factory with 700 men he found one Churchman and one Spiritualist. In a factory with nearly 1000 men, where he is now, he finds only one Dissenter. He affirms that so rare is a religious man in a factory, that a new man starting there for the first time is sure to have somebody say to him, on a certain person passing, "there goes our religious man."

He explains the absence of the workingman from church by the indifference of the Church to the people's condition and wants. At present working-men have no time to think about religion. When they are in work it means rising at 5 a.m., having a long walk, entering a dull factory, and having another trudge back at night. Their state out of work is worse still. Therefore, he says: "Our anxieties of this world are so great and our leisure so little that we hardly ever think of the next world, God, or God's Church." As a remedy he would have the clergy speak boldly for more leisure for the workers; and he would have a minister in every town drawn from amongst the workers to plead their cause as one who knows before God and before masters. We do not dispute what Mr. Thornton says, and yet we find it hard to reconcile it with other facts about congregations of working-men, and with the leisure working-men can and do find for their drinking clubs and for sports and gambling. Nevertheless, we join him in deprecating the way in which life is, for so many thousands, turned into a wretched drudgery.

That metropolitan coroner spoke wisely who warned persons who take stimulants to raise their temperature, that it is a dangerous practice; for although the temperature is temporarily raised, it soon falls more rapidly, and the last state of the imbiber is worse than the first. This is one of the many respects in which alcoholic drink is a mocker and a deceiver.

The University Settlement idea promises to spread to other shores than ours. The students of Girton and Newnham Colleges are proposing to form a missionary settlement in India, probably at Bombay, in which women from the Universities may live together, and carry on educational, medical, and evangelistic work. A committee has been formed, of which Miss A. de Sélincourt is the hon. sec. At Bombay a high school for Parsee girls is very much needed; they might also be carried on into the higher branches of learning and prepared for the University degree. The settlement, if formed, will be worked on Evangelical lines, embracing members of all sections of the Church of Christ. Could this be done, it would not only throw new life into work for women in India, but would be an evidence to the Indian mind of unity with diversity, which would do something to counteract the reproach often brought against Christianity of divisions among its professors.

The Schoolmaster is taking up the sorrowful case of the half-timers. An inspector writes that he examined a child, a girl, who rose at 5.30, worked at a mill, and then walked a couple of miles to be examined. Most people will agree with him when he calls this cruel. Another girl of eleven "rose soon after five, and walked through the frost and snow nearly two miles to the mill. Work commenced at six and continued till 8.30, when there was an interval for breakfast, the child not leaving the mill. At nine work again till 12.30, and then dinner at the mill. At 1.30 the child trudged off to the school." We have 170,000 half-time children. Our hours of child labour need reforming. In Germany they allow no children to work for wages until they are thirteen years of age. If we remember rightly our British delegates to the famous Labour Conference, called at Berlin by the German Emperor, reported in favour of raising the age to this standard, but it has not been done. We are thankful that our inspectors, or some of them, are not burying the man in the inspector, but are pleading for the children.

Dr. Griffith John has declined the invitation of the L.M.S. to come home this year, although it is the centenary year of the Society; he has thus also declined, for a second time, the honour of being made Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales. He feels that his duties in China have the first claim. The example of steadfastness he sets is a good one. We know that he is only one among the faithful, who think little of honours in comparison of labours. Whatever may betide China in the deadly struggle with Japan, her missionaries will not fail her; from the youngest to the oldest, we believe they will prove themselves, as a body, worthy of their calling. Dr. John's action will be a gospel in itself to the Chinese, and a stimulating force among missionaries. We even may receive a holy impulse from it at home, where fidelity to work, the steady patience which keeps on toiling amid all allurements to turn aside, is none too common.

When speaking at Canon Christopher's C.M.S. breakfast at Oxford, the Bishop of Caledonia gave a graphic account of the Kitkatla tribe of Indians, among whom there is not a sign of heathenism left. As one who had seen missions in the East and in the West, he could testify that what trade and commerce never did, and what war never did, the preaching of Christ crucified had done.

If the preaching of Christ by missionaries had wrought the wonder, and if the result be not supernatural, then let men find some other explanation. If it be that, then he held that in this our day missions are the pre-eminent sign of the supernatural in an age of scepticism.

The best answer to an age that repudiates the Gospel is to save it by means of the Gospel.

Chief Khama, says The Independent, has been paying a visit to Cape Town, where, to his great surprise, he received from the Christians a warm welcome. In thanking a meeting, he said he did so because he thought that they would help him "to fight the enemy that is called liquor. You must pray greatly for me that God will help me in this matter, that the liquor may all be spilled into the sea, the liquor which is an enemy to the world. If you can help me in this way it will be a matter of great rejoicing to me, and God will be with you." One of Khama's attendants said there was one question that was generally asked by the people of his tribe, and that was, "Are there any white men who do not drink?" And yet some Christians will support a custom which is proving the greatest stumbling-block to the world's salvation. Oh, that they would ponder how grave is their responsibility.

Many are becoming more and more strongly convinced of the importance of medical mission work. The Church Missionary Society has published in pamphlet form, with the title "The Work of the Lord Jesus and His Apostles," two articles by Dr. W. P. Mears, late of the Fuh-Kien Mission, which puts the subject on a higher ground. Dr. Mears holds up to view the great Missionary Example, and maintains that the work of healing is the necessary complement and supplement of the work of preaching. After examining the Gospels, the Acts, and the Epistles, he concludes:—

With the example of the Apostles—even were we without the record of the Master's life—we should be guilty if we did not regard benevolent, and especially medical work, as an essential and important part of mission work in heathen lands, and in churches gathered from heathendom.

Dr. Mears establishes the proposition that, as in spiritual, moral, and social life, so also in mission work, the Lord Jesus Christ is our example; and he makes a strong appeal for medical and preaching operations being more generally combined in the mission field. Copies of the pamphlet may be had from the C.M.S. House, Salisbury-square, E.C.

"One who has come under the scourge of the tongue," writes:—

Your correspondent's example, who says—"I have resolved before the Lord not to accept anything about a servant of Christ unless I hear it from his own lips"—is well worthy of imitation. At the present time, when among certain sectarian unsectarians, this business seems to be carried on on a wholesale scale, mainly misrepresenting the true servants of God, and seeming to take real delight in it, I think it would not be out of place to lay great emphasis on what you have written. You might enlarge upon it, as a very grievous and growing sin, and a sin that must come under God's withering rebuke.

Self-constituted censors sometimes exercise a reign of terror over young or timid souls, who are afraid to speak or even think, lest they should be denounced as "unsound." Such a terrorism is in principle as un-Christ-like, as popish, and as cruel as the Inquisition. There is one thing worse than holding unsound views, and that is being unsound at heart, unsound in thinking evil, unsound in rejoicing in iniquity, unsound in not rejoicing in the truth. Soundness in love to God and our neighbour is the essential foundation of all sound, wholesome, healthy doctrine.

Professor Sayce writes from Assouan to The Athenæum:—

I think I have found Nimrod in the cuneiform inscriptions. His full name was Nazi Muruda the Kassu, and he was the Babylonian contemporary of the father of the Assyrian king who restored Nineveh and founded Calah about fifty years before the Exodus. So Moses seems to have been right after all.

It might be just as well, seeing Moses has so often proved to be "right after all," to assume that he is always right when there is any discrepancy between him and some new authority. He lived a great deal nearer the time of the events he describes than the men of to-day, and could have had no motive for writing fables for history. He was evidently too earnest, had too deep a sense of the sacredness of truth, was too full of the fear of God, to do that.

When men have a great discovery to make known or a great policy to inaugurate they like a distinguished audience. How unlike our poor pride is the gracious humility of the Son of Man, who to one Rabbi, in the quiet of an evening talk, made known the great truth of the new birth, and that God so loved the world that He gave his Son, that through Him the world might be saved; who to a sinful Samaritan woman declared the sublime truth that "God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth." From the lonely well, where no one but the woman could be the reporter, the lofty words have passed into every language under heaven, and have become the uplifting power of the most spiritual of all religions—a constant protest against formalism, a loud warning against any worship which is not the expression of desire, of faith and love, a tender encouragement to the humble who thirst for God.

Thanksgiving and Prayer.

SPECIAL MEETINGS.

The following is in relation to the meeting proposed in our last:—

We have been requested by prominent Christian workers to convene a meeting similar to that held for Thanksgiving in the Great Assembly Hall in April last. With great pleasure, therefore, we invite all Christians to come together at the Great Assembly Hall (kindly lent for the occasion by Mr. F. N. Charrington) on Wednesday, April 3, the meetings to commence at eleven, three, and seven o'clock.

Reginald Radcliffe. George Williams.
Kinnaird. Martin Hope Sutton.
James E. Mathieson. R. C. Morgan.

We cannot do better than supplement the Conveners' letter by the following extract from a letter to ourselves by our dear friend Mr. Reginald Radcliffe:—

"It would give me great delight to unite personally, but there appears scarcely any prospect to myself of this. Prayer, secret and united, is the thing—BELIEVING prayer in the prevailing name of our Christ. Calmly and deliberately may I say that perhaps NEVER in all my life did I have such expectation from our Heavenly Father for the world.

"Caged up here in our little house, I think never in years past has God given me such assurance to draw so heavily upon his Almightiness to work wonders of conversion on the earth. I cannot but think that we are far, FAR behind the Christians of the first centuries. Why should it be? If bees cast outside the drones, why should not every single Christian now be expected to be a soul-winner? Do we expect it? Do we even ask this? What a dwarfed prayer to ask for ministers and missionaries! It may pass in London now, but such a prayer would not be uttered in Jerusalem!

"Let us retreat to Jerusalem, and, first all being of one accord, then pray 'Grant that all thy servants may be filled with the Holy Ghost, and ALL speak the Word with boldness.' My strength warns me to conclude. May God bless your efforts and the proposed meeting abundantly. But look for a far, FAR greater work over the world than in 1859-60."

MISSION SCHOOLS, SCHWIFAT, LEBANON.

In her new report Miss Procter says: "During last year we were preserved in health and safety when many around us have been laid low with sickness, and several strong, active, young people have been taken away. The work has made steady progress in each line. The children advanced well in their studies, as proved by the annual examination in June; then three of our girls, having fully proved their efficiency, received their diplomas. The friends assembled on the occasion expressed their approval of the ability manifested.

"I am thankful to say that wherever any of our girls have gone to teach they have given satisfaction. There are now twenty scattered through Syria, Palestine, and Egypt, seeking to impart to others the instruction they have themselves received. But all cannot be teachers; they are needed for home and family life, and I consider it one of the most important duties to raise the home life and show that their school training makes them better wives and mothers. Thank God here again we can point to results attained; there are now to my knowledge twelve married, and only one of them has not turned out to my satisfaction; all the rest are fulfilling their duties well, and thus benefiting their country."

A WIMBLEDON CONVENTION on the spiritual life will be held at the Drill Hall, St. George's-road, March 11 to 13. Amongst speakers expected are Messrs. Bevan, Figgis, Fox, Hopkins, Houghton, Macgregor, Mantle, Meyer, Selwyn. All information may be obtained from the hon. sec. to the Convention, 18, Homefield-road, Wimbledon.

THE UNVEILING.—8.

HE THAT SITTETH ON THE THRONE.

There is a certain similarity between the first and second portions of this prophecy. In ch. i. John is in spirit in the Lord's day, and hears behind him a great voice as of a trumpet, and then he sees the risen High Priest, who holds and searches, and discerns and judges the good and evil in the churches on the earth. In ch. iv. John beholds a door opened in Heaven, and hears again the trumpet voice of ch. i., which bids him arise and enter, and the revealing angel will shew him things which are about to come to pass hereafter. Immediately John is in spirit, or in the Spirit, and beholds a Throne in Heaven, and One sitting on the Throne. The former vision was of Christ the High Priest ruling in his Church. This is of God the Great King in his government of the world, with special reference to his saints who have made a covenant with Him by sacrifice.

The first observation of the seer is a connecting link between the former and the later vision. The Sitter on the Throne is like a jasper and a sardine stone, the first and last stones in the high-priest's breastplate, but in reversed order (Exod. xxviii. 17-20). If we accept, as we may, Dean Alford's view, that the jasper clear as crystal represents mercy, and the blood-red sardius judgment, it is significant that under the Law the sardius came first and the jasper last, while under the Gospel the jasper is first and the sardius last. This seems to mark the difference between these two dispensations—the one saying, "Do and live"; the other, "Live and do." For mercy and judgment are equivalent to life and death. On the high priest's breastplate and in Him that sitteth on the Throne, they are harmonised, for Mercy and Truth are met together, Righteousness and Peace have kissed each other. Jesus the Son of God, our Great High Priest, is He who liveth and was dead; and is alive for evermore; and has the keys of Hades and of Death.

The rainbow, the ancient and well-known symbol of covenant and promise to the earth and man upon it, encircles the throne. And the circle is the symbol of Eternity. He hath made with his Son, on our behalf, "an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure."

Peace in Jesus! blessèd promise!
Covenant word of changeless love,
Sealed with blood, and daily witnessed
By thy grace, Eternal Dove.

"And the rainbow was in sight like unto an emerald"—green, for the prevailing colour of the earth is green: so we say "the green earth"; and for the same reason we call our little sister on the west the Green Isle, the Emerald Isle. The emerald rainbow would assure John, and his companions then, and his brethren through all the troubled ages, that He that sitteth on the Throne is the God of the earth. For John, who in his vision had entered the opened door of Heaven, might imagine that among the innumerable stars man and his little earthly home are of small account. In comparison with these, "what is man that Thou art mindful of him, or the son of man that Thou visitest him?" Oh, how mindful He is, how considerate of us, that He gives John, in his vision of the Throne which ruleth over all, to see it contained within the covenant rainbow, and the rainbow of the colour of the earth. Surely, all the stars of God exist for the sake of the earth, on which God was revealed in flesh, that He might die for the redemption of men, made in his own image out of the dust of the red earth!

On as many inferior thrones round the central Throne, sat four-and-twenty elders, clothed in white like the High Priest in the first vision, and wearing crowns of gold—the Royal Priesthood (Exod. xix. 6; 1 Pet. ii. 9; Rev. i. 5, 6), the number answering to the courses of the priests (1 Chron. xxiv. 1-19; Luke i. 8). In consequence of their intercessions, lightnings, thunderings, and voices issue from the Throne (compare ch. viii. 4, 5). The Seven Spirits of God, as seven lamps of fire, are here in connexion with the Church viewed as the Royal Priesthood; in the next chapter they are the seven horns and seven eyes (the power and wisdom) of the Lamb as it had been slain.

The sea of glass, clear as crystal, before the Throne, seems to be the counterpart of the "paved work as of a sapphire stone, and as the body of heaven in its clearness," which Moses and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel, saw under the feet of the God of Israel in the holy mount (Exod. xxiv. 9, 10). "God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all." "Clouds and darkness are round about Him; righteousness and judgment are the foundation of his throne." It rests upon a transparent sea of glass.

This crystal sea is connected with the four living creatures, the administrators of God's government; as the seven lamps of fire (the sevenfold Spirit of God), with the four-and-twenty priestly elders.

These living creatures include not only the cherubim as seen at the gate of Eden; over the mercy-seat; in the oracle of Solomon's temple; embroidered on the curtains of the tabernacle and carved on the temple walls, together with palm-trees and open flowers, the flora as well as the fauna of redeemed creation; running and returning like flashes of lightning in Ezekiel's visions of God; they also take in the six-winged seraphim of Isaiah's temple-vision. They are ideal beings, the antitheses of Daniel's four beasts which strove upon the Great Sea. They represent redeemed creation, man at its head, plus all the forces and qualities of every other form of life, in their highest form. For we are filled-full in Him, who is the Life, and who is the Head of all principality and power. The elders represent the redeemed in priestly worship and service; the living creatures represent them in governmental activity, the executive of God, in the throne and round about the throne (Ezek i. 15, 21: See "The Living Ones," The Christian, July 5, 1894).

The worship of these ideal representatives of God's peculiar treasure, his kingdom of priests, his holy nation (Exod xix. 6; Rev. i. 5, 6) is the adoration of God as the Creator and Ruler of the universe. It is not Jesus on his throne in the coming day, when the kingdoms of this world shall have become the Kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ. It is the throne of the Eternal Creator, the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords, the Triune God: "Thou art worthy, O Lord our God to receive glory, and honour, and power; for Thou hast created all things, and because of thy will they were, and they were created." Here, creation; in the next chapter, redemption.

How then can the elders and the living creatures be there, in the glory of accomplished salvation, if the time is now?

I reply by asking another question: How could the cherubim be seen within Eden's gate, when man was driven forth from Eden? or in the tabernacle and temple? or in Ezekiel's visions by the river Chebar, among the stiff-necked and impudent-hearted people, who were a conspicuous contrast to all that was idealised in those obedient and adoring living ones?

He who dwells in an everlasting Now calls things which be not as though they were; presents to fallen Adam, to captive Israel, to failing saints, visions of what shall be; yea of what is now, so far as we obey Him; so far as, like the elders, we worship Him in spirit and in truth; so far as we are like the living creatures—"whithersoever the Spirit was to go, they went, thither was their spirit to go." These are "they that dwell in heaven," in contrast to "them that dwell upon the earth" (ch. xiii. 6, 8).

And John says, "As Jesus is, so are we in this world." If on earth He spoke of Himself as "the Son of man who is in Heaven," the Spirit speaks of us as "baptized into his death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." For "God quickened us together with Christ, and raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus" (Rom. vi., Eph. ii., Col. ii., iii., et al.). Some beloved brethren, who insist that the Throne and the elders and the living creatures here are future and only future, yet emphasise the above scriptures, and love to quote Lady Mary Powerscourt, to the effect that saints are not a people looking up from earth to heaven, but looking down from heaven to earth. They believe with me, that "whom He justified them He also glorified."

Oh blessed vision of the Throne! Oh joy to us—who see the completed image-dream of Gentile power tottering on its brittle feet of iron and earthenware—to look with the eyes of John, and see the stable Throne of the Ancient of days. "Let him take hold of my strength." "Concerning the works of my hands, command ye Me."

This God is the God we adore,
Our Faithful, unchangeable Friend:
His love is as great as his power,
And neither knows measure nor end.

THE SCRIPTURE GIFT MISSION.

Mr. Walters, of the Scripture Gift Mission, has issued aSpanish edition of the Gospel of John in the handsome illustrated form that has become such a favourite among English workers. Especially in Central and South America are such portions of God's Word welcome for popular distribution; and several missionaries have written thanking Mr. Walters for parcels of the beautiful little book.

Mr. W. D. Powell, of Toluca, Mexico, says: "These are 'just the thing.' I could distribute thousands; they will be taken where no others would be received." Mr. F. Borton writes from Mexico City: "We give thanks most heartily for these Gospels. If only the Lord's people would do more in sending the Word itself into the world, a great deal more good would be done."

A worker at Lima, Peru, acknowledging a package of Spanish Gospels, says: "Send as many as you are able through the post. There is no other way at present, as the Government will not permit Bibles to pass the Customs House. We have many coming to hear the Word, and the Lord has given us blessing."

The extent to which the Holy Scriptures have been disseminated through the post in Roman Catholic countries of Europe should stir many to respond to this appeal. Mr. Walters is prepared to deliver five thousand copies of John's Gospel in Spanish, carriage paid, to any address in Spain or South America for £5 5s. He is preparing a French portion in a similarly attractive style with illustrations. Communications to him should be addressed, 84, St. Paul's-churchyard, E.C.

"ADVANCING APOSTASY."

We have received a large number of letters in continuation of this correspondence. In some cases writers have raised, or discussed side issues; in others a more important contribution is made to the controversy. It is impossible for us to print even the best of the letters at length, so we are compelled to summarise them.

One correspondent, "W. H. D.," says: "It is a hard matter to find an Evangelical clergyman now in country districts; and this involves great denial to those who, like myself, remember that we joined in our youth the Church which has now wandered from the right way." Another, writes: "I am old enough to remember when there was hardly a Ritualistic Church on the Continent, whereas the contrary is now the case. I recollect when the Channel Islands were all ultra-Protestant. I remember when St. Paul's Cathedral was a Protestant fane, and when one could walk into almost any London church without being offended by Popish antics, crosses, and mumblings. I remember when such a thing as Ritualism was unknown in Norfolk and Cornwall; when it was the fashion for 'fast' young men and girls to go 'for a lark' to the one Ritualistic church in Cheltenham and other towns; when no such thing as Ritualism was known in Scotland and the North of England or the Colonies; when every Army and Navy chaplain that I met was an Evangelical; whereas, in each and every case at present, the reverse obtains, and Protestant Evangelicals are growing fewer everywhere. I quite admit that there are more self-styled Evangelicals now than there were, say, thirty years ago; but their Evangelicalism is what the Bishop of Liverpool aptly terms 'Jelly-fish Christianity'; that is, they wobble with the times, blowing hot and cold as it suits their purpose."

SIR CHARLES S. KING, BART.,

says: "The amazing growth of Ritualism within a generation may in part be attributed to the latitudinarianism, 'large-hearted charity', so belauded in our day, as well as to the sad want of faithfulness in the Evangelical pulpit in dealing with Ritualism and Romanism. In too many churches, from one year's end to another, not a word of warning is heard, though the ministers can be scarcely unaware that numbers of the younger members of their congregation are being ensnared into attending Ritualistic churches, the impression left on the minds of the young too often being that the only question to be asked about a place of worship is, 'Does it belong to the Church?' and if the answer be in the affirmative it is treated as a matter of course that it is right and praiseworthy to attend it. Ought these things so to be?"

thinks the battle of Protestantism cannot be fought inside the Church of England. "The Evangelical Protestant in the Church of England is a person who deserves our compassion, for he is fighting with his hands tied. He has imposed upon himself a twofold task which is utterly beyond human power to discharge, namely, to attack Sacerdotalism and to defend the Prayer Book. I have a most vivid and painful recollection of a Protestant lecture at which I was present not long ago. The lecturer, a member of the Church of England, gave an able and telling exposé of the utter unscripturalness of the sacerdotal assumptions of the Church of Rome. At the close, when permission was given to ask questions of the lecturer, a Romanist in the audience got up, and with a Prayer Book of the English Church in his hand, deliberately retorted the charge of sacerdotalism upon the lecturer's own Church. The lecturer's reply was evasive and awkward in the extreme, and the impression produced was most painful. His own Prayer Book was more than tinged with that 'scarlet' against which he inveighed; and his very reply to the objector was shifty to the verge of the Jesuitism which he abhorred. I speak with no animus or prejudice; for I am sure that no one in the hall felt more acutely for the respected lecturer than I did. But I am more and more convinced that the Protestant whose brief includes the Prayer Book as well as the great doctrines of our Evangelical faith, has no claim to our time-honoured watchword, 'the Bible and the Bible only, the religion of Protestants.'"

Another correspondent, "E. J. A.," after analysing some of the teachings and practices of Ritualism, says: "By many a dreary deathbed the writer has seen the depression, sometimes even the despair, of those who in health had been lulled by these specious but Satanic teachings. And when the light has dawned, and faith has led the contrite soul to implore pardon and justification direct from the Saviour—who won both for the sinner by the blood shed on Calvary, and bestows them, oh, so freely—the veil of sacramentalism that hid his love, is seen to be an accursed thing, while the sacraments themselves stand forth, pure and precious, stripped of the borrowed garments of 'the Mother of Abominations'? These doctrines and their objective illustrations we must protest against. Further, we must protest against the introduction into our churches of idols. First, and conspicuous at the East end, often stands a Latin cross. The initial stage of idolatry is when what is visible is used, unauthorised by God, as a medium by which the Invisible is apprehended. It hardly exceeded this among the Pagan philosophers. But it is sternly condemned in the Bible. Not all other sins put together are so frequently prohibited. It always ends in the worship of the Material. No one who reads the Romish Liturgy of the Cross, or witnesses the abject prostrations before it, can doubt how gross is the idolatry involved. The crucifix soon follows. Images of the Virgin Mary and saints have recently appeared in many of our churches for the first time since the Reformation. Windows glow with winged figures; and carved human forms, also winged, adorn lecterns and pulpits, support cornices, and are erected in memory of the dead. I have seen many hundreds of such figures in Eastern lands, and they abound in bas-relievos in half-ruined temples of Jupiter, Venus, &c. They may be seen in profusion in the museum in Athens of wood, marble, and terra-cotta, intended to hang against chamber walls. There is no doubt as to their significance. They represent Genii, Fates, demons of the air in attendance on Pagan divinities! Is the Church coquetting with demonology, as the world is with spiritism?"

REV. CHARLES STIRLING

points out that the Protestant Reformation, which was of such glorious promise in the reign of Edward VI., became a compromise in the hands of Elizabeth. The Puritans—the "Protestant and Evangelical" men of their day—were oppressed and persecuted; and such men have ever since been an alien body within the Church. Mr. Stirling continues: "They rely upon the Articles—and these are sometimes but feebly Protestant—and take the services in a non-natural sense, explaining them away upon the 'charitable supposition' and 'hypothetical view' theory. The Protestant Constitution of 1689 for a time broke the force of Laudianism, but in 1829 that constitution, alas! was abrogated. Laudianism then burst into renewed vitality, and now dominates the Established Church. By the Bennett Judgment, 1872, the Ridsdale Judgment, 1877, and the Lincoln Judgment, 1892, its triumph was completed. A tremendous Anti-Protestant Revolution has been effected. The Evangelicals having been implored to secede, and rear a splendid Protestant Church upon the ruins of the Romanised Establishment, declined to make any sacrifice. They resolved to do Nothing; and accordingly are trying to go on as if no very particular event had occurred." Thanking God for having brought him out of the Church of England, Mr. Stirling says: "No longer trammelled by subscription, and able to look facts fully in the face, and having had occasion to bring the Prayer Book line by line to the test of the Word of God, I am compelled to bear my testimony against the Book of Common Prayer, as the fountain-head of the prevailing mischief." In conclusion, he refers to his Protestant Prayer Book, in which there is "no infant baptism, and no prelacy, but a simple and beautiful system of doctrine and government."

REV. JAMES MOUNTAIN,

describing the advance of error, says:—"The Church of England Almanac for last year says: '7000 clergy are supporters of the Romeward movement; 4136 (of whom twenty-nine are bishops) are members of the English Church Union, which is pledged to support vestments, lights, incense, wafer-bread, eastward position, and mixed chalice.'" Proceeding to refer to counter measures, Mr. Mountain speaks of the Protestant Aid Society, which offers to furnish assistance to Church people in Ritualistic parishes, and to provide clergy and suitable buildings for carrying on the services of the Church of England in an Evangelical manner. He writes:—"The intentions of this Society are excellent, and must command the sympathies of every Protestant. But, alas! what hope can one cherish of their realisation, when one reads in the circular issued by the Society that their 'congregations will not form a new church, sect, or body; neither will they take the position of 'Dissenters,' inasmuch as they will not dissent from the formularies or Articles of the Church of England as contained in the Prayer Book.' In my judgment, this circular reflects but too faithfully the opinions and position of the majority of Evangelicals in the Establishment. They dislike Ritualism, but they dislike Dissent still more. They love the Scriptures, but they will not give up the Prayer Book, in spite of its unscriptural teaching. They are willing to wound, but they are afraid to strike." Mr. Mountain concludes by calling attention to soms points in the Prayer Book which godly Evangelicale should consider, such as Infant Baptism, Confirmation, and Priestly Absolution.

MR. EUGENE STOCK

writes:—"In mentioning Torquay among the leading watering-places 'for the most part Evangelical,' I made a mistake, of which I was conscious the moment I saw it in print. I did not care to trouble you with a correction, but as some friends have written to me about it, I send this brief line. I was careful, as I thought, not to include places which, though strongly Evangelical, are not 'for the most part' so. For instance, I did not mention Brighton, or Bournemouth, or Clifton, although Evangelical teaching and work are conspicuous at all three places. Your correspondents do not attempt to dispute my facts. They only adduce other facts, which are also true."

[For some reflections on this subject we refer our readers to an article on p. 12, entitled, "Things that are Shaken."—Ed.]

THE SUFFERING POOR.

In sending in an account of some visitation work among the poor, Miss A. F. Perram, 38, Westbank, Stamford Hill, N., says:—We think of the many we know in poverty, hunger, and cold, who bravely accept the portion of the lot that has fallen to them as from a Father's hand, and endure as seeing Him who is invisible; the women who face a cold world to provide for their fatherless, or worse than fatherless, children; the young who sacrifice themselves unmurmuringly for the aged and infirm; the old, who, past work, choose to linger out their last days in want and penury, rather than accept the charity of the workhouse and the contact with its degrading influences; the invalid father stricken in the prime of life with slow disease, yet struggling with tasks far beyond his strength that he may add to the earnings of the wife and mother; the godly refined gentlewoman, compelled by the exigencies of the unnatural position in which she has been placed by the sin of others to dwell amidst surroundings altogether foreign to her birth and character, whilst she ekes out a scanty living for herself and children; the lonely needlewoman—but we will not enumerate further. "The Lord knoweth them that are his," and we can but thank Him that He so constantly lets us share his knowledge, and sends help to his needy poor through our hands.

THE WORK OF THE Y.M.C.A. at Long Island City, N.Y., has been temporarily suspended in consequence of fire, which destroyed not only their building, but the records and everything pertaining to their equipment. They hope soon to be in new quarters.

CONFERENCE OF EVANGELISTS.—It has been definitely decided that the proposed conference of evangelists, referred to in a recent issue, will be held on Thursday, May 2, in the lecture hall of Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street. "The Work of an Evangelist" is to be the subject of the day. Applications for tickets should be addressed to Mr. James B. Wookey, 48, Almack-road, Clapton, N.E.

UNITED STATES AND CANADA Y.M.C.A.—The Associations of the United States and Canada are called together in council, through their regularly-appointed delegates, once in two years. The next international convention is to be held at Springfield, Mass., in May, 1895. Owing to its location, this will probably be one of the largest of these gatherings. A special invitation has been sent to Sir George Williams, the founder of the Young Men's Christian Association.

CONVENTION IN BELFAST.

The interest in the series of conventions on The Inspiration of the Scriptures, The Jews, and The Coming of Christ, is deepening, and the influence they are exerting is widening. It is fitting that the North of Ireland should be visited, where the Lord worked in such a marvellous manner in the revival of 1859. The meetings were held in the Ulster Hall, Belfast, February 12-15.

Pastor James Smith (Dufftown) gave the opening address. His subject was a sevenfold description of the Word of God in the Epistle to Hebrews. (1) The Divine authorship of the Word (i. 1, 2); (2) its authority (ii. 1-4); (3) its power (iv. 12); (4) its sufficiency (v. 12-14); (5) it is the witness of the Spirit (x. 15); (6) it sets before us the true hope (x. 37); (7) and it is the key to the purposes of God (xii. 26, 27). Mr. W. G. Carr (Rochester, U.S.) followed with a brief address. He recommended the Bible, because it was a test of love, because of its power, because it was the book by which they would be judged, and because it paid to obey its teaching.

Pastor F. E. Marsh (Sunderland) gave the opening address in the evening, and spoke upon "Seven reasons why I believe the Scriptures to be inspired of God"—(1) Because it claims to be (2 Tim. iii. 16); (2) because it finds man (Heb. iv. 12); (3) because of the Christ it reveals (John v. 39); (4) because of the manner of its utterance (Ps. xix. 7); (5) because of the minute fulfilments of its predictions (Matt. v. 18); (6) because of the unity of its testimony (Luke xxiv. 44); (7) and because of the results it has produced (1 Thess. ii. 13).

Dr. Neatby spoke upon the connection that is found between the Living Word and the Written Word. We cannot do without the Christ, neither can we do without the Scriptures. Christ could not do without the Scriptures. "It is written," was the keynote of his walk and warfare. Christ connected the Scriptures with Himself, for He said, "They are they which testify of Me"; and again, "In the volume of the book it is written of Me." The delight of God was to write of his Son. Every word lets out some ray of the glory of Christ. The more you say, "He loved me and gave Himself for me," the more you will cling to that Word which speaks of Him.

Mr. Carr gave the closing address, and called four witnesses as testifying to the truth of God's word, namely (1) David (Ps. cxix. 160); (2) Solomon (Prov. xxx. 5); (3) Jesus (John x. 35) (4) Paul (2 Timothy iii. 16). Thus we have two witnesses from the Old Testament and two from the New.

of the conference was devoted to the study of God's purpose in relation to Israel. Pastor John Robertson (Glasgow) spoke of the coming of the Lord Jesus in two relations—First, in relation to the Church, and second, in connection with Israel when Christ comes in his glory. The speaker coupled his remarks with a personal reference to himself, by telling how he had been led to see the personal pre-millennial coming of Christ, while on a visit to Dr. James H. Brookes, of St. Louis, two years ago.

Mr. Marsh specially referred to Israel. If we would have God's power we must be on his plan. In Acts xv. 14-17 we have God's purpose in relation to the Church in gathering out a people to his name, in relation to Israel in building up the tabernacle of David, and in relation to the residue of men. There is a seven-fold parallel to be found in connection with Christ's raising Lazarus from the dead, and the condition of Israel, as described in Ezekiel xxxvii. Lazarus was dead, buried, called, raised, loosed, seated, and a testimony (John xi. 14, 39, 43, 44; xii. 2, 9); so Israel will be likewise (Ezekiel xxxvii. 5, 12, 11, 12, 23, 22, 24, 28).

In the evening, Mr. Robertson, as he could not arrive in time for the first day, drew attention to the subject of inspiration. He told us of an insane lady, who spent a fortune in buying silk and tearing it, and said it was what the higher critics were doing with the Bible, tearing out this and that. The Almighty breath is better than all the breath of man. There are many things we cannot understand, but we accept them. The children cannot understand the porridge they eat, but they know they need it, and if they were to wait till they could solve the chemical constituents of the porridge they would never eat it; even so if we wait till every question can be solved, we shall never be saved. Receive the Word, for it is worthy to be accepted in its entirety.

Mr. Smith introduced a talk on Israel as brought out in Romans xi., by remarking that the epistle of Romans may be summed up in four L's. Man lost (i. to iii., 20); man living (iii. 21 to viii.); man learning (ix. to xi.); and man labouring (xii. to the end). Israel has a fulness, reception, grafting, and a salvation in the future (Rom. xi. 12, 15, 24, 26). There are three botanical illustrations the Lord uses in speaking of Israel. The vine, telling out Israel's past unfaithfulness; the fig tree, proclaiming Israel's present condition, as a spiritually barren people; and the olive tree, pointing on to Israel's future blessing.

Mr. Carr gave a parallel between the exodus of Israel under Moses, and their future revelation. Israel was saved by the blood of atonement in Egypt, so shall God save them in the future. The second exodus is described in Isaiah xi. 11-16.

The subject of the last two days of the Convention was limited to the truth of Christ's return. Mr. Smith opened the theme on the Wednesday afternoon. The fact of Christ's return touches all Scripture, and illumines all Scripture, as it will illumine all our life if we believe it. Many a star as seen by the naked eye is only one, but with the aid of the telescope two are discovered; even so, the coming of Christ as seen in the Old Testament seems to be one, but with the light of the New Testament we find that there are two comings—one in humiliation and the other in glory. Micah v. 2 and Zech. ix. 9 refer to the first coming, but they also point on to his second. There was a private coming of which Micah speaks, and there was a public coming of which Zechariah speaks. This is brought out if we note the "unto me," and the "unto thee." And as there were two stages in the first coming, a private and a public, so there will be two stages in his return, a private one for his people, and a public one with them. There are two acts in relation to this two stages, an act of salvation for the redeemed, and an act of vengeance for the ungodly.

Mr. Carr continued the same theme. There are many Scriptures where the two aspects of Christ's comings are mentioned. There are at least thirteen of these double Scriptures. Judgment always precedes glory. Judgment fell upon Adam before the promised seed, upon Egypt before the Exodus, upon the professing church before the millennium, and upon Israel before their restoration. The address was closed by the three following questions:—How will the Lord come? Personally and literally. Where will He come? In the air for his people and to the earth with them. When will He come? We don't know. No date is given—we have no right to fix one.

Mr. Marsh referred to holding fast the confession of our hope, and said that the Christian needed Christ in three particulars. The Christian needs Christ in his redemption for his salvation; Christ himself as an inspiration to devotion and service; and the truth of Christ's return as the incentive for separation from the world. The hope that we have in Christ's return is a personal hope, because it proclaims the personal return of Christ; it is a present hope to those who are in fellowship with Christ; and it is a purifying hope to those whose affections are centred in Christ.

Mr. H. D. Brandreth gave an outline of the mystical Babylon, and called attention to the fact that all that is seen in Romanism and Rationalism has its origin in Paganism.

Dr. Neatby reminded us that prophecy has mainly to do with earth, but Christ, our hope, is a heavenly thing, given to those who are a heavenly people by a heavenly birth.

Mr. Marsh gave the opening address on the last day. His subject was the purifying effect upon the life of the believer if he is looking for the return of the Lord. The business life will be pure, in that it will be free from unrighteous action; the church life will be pure, because separate from worldly methods in carrying on the Lord's work; the social life will be pure, because the saint keeps from the company of the ungodly; the home life will be pure, because it is sweetened and hallowed by the conscious presence of Christ; and the heart-life will be pure, because Christ is sanctified as Lord in the heart.

The closing addresses were given by Mr. Carr, who spoke upon the necessity of rightly dividing the word of truth; Mr. Brandreth upon the judgement seat of Christ; and Dr. Neatby upon the theme in which he is ever at home—namely, the need to be in fellowship with the Christ now, and then there will be no surprise when He arrives.

One feature of the meetings was the number of men who attended them. A spirit of growing interest was manifest in the increase in the numbers as the meetings went on. Surely it is a sign of the times when Christians of different denominations gather around the Word of God, and listen to what He has to say. Another characteristic of the gatherings was the positive character of the teaching. Sometimes it may be necessary to call attention to the crafty working of error, but after all, the best way to combat error is to meet it with the positive and certain utterance of the Word. F.

CANON GARRATT'S RESIGNATION.

A few Sundays ago, in St. Margaret's Church, Ipswich, at the close of a sermon on 1 Cor. ii. 9, "Eye hath not seen," &c., Canon Garratt intimated his intended resignation in the following remarks:—For nearly twenty-eight years it has been my joy to be your pastor, and to know that in that hallowed connection there has been between us a bond of affectionate sympathy and co-operation, which is the support and happiness of a Christian minister. During this more than a quarter of a century some of you have grown up from infancy to manhood and womanhood, and have known no other pastor; and others of you, who have all along so affectionately sustained me in my work, have not allowed me to doubt that God's word spoken by me has been a joy to your hearts; and I think you have the right to know why I am about to sever this pastoral connection, and give up my post as vicar of St. Margaret's.

I do not think it for the honour of God that I should retain such a post as this till compelled by the infirmities of age to cease to do its duties. In that case the work of the parish would, at first perhaps insensibly, but after a while unmistakably, dwindle and grow feeble. It seems to me far better for us all, and in itself more right, that before that happens the responsibility should be transferred to younger hands. After much thought and prayer I have arrived at the full conviction that in resigning I am doing that which is for God's honour and according to his will—the one consideration which ought to determine our path.

I do not now feel as fit as I was for some of the details of parochial ministry, but am conscious of no failure of strength in other ways; and while God seems to me closing by my age the door of parish work, I think He is opening before me doors of work of a different and evangelistic kind. I earnestly desire to be permitted especially to preach and teach the much-forgotten truth of the Second Coming of our Lord Jesus Christ in various places, wherever opportunities present themselves, and I shall, I doubt not, find my way made plain.

ROMANISM IN MALTA.

Writing with reference to Mr. Glenny's recent notes on the religious condition of this island, a correspondent sends some instances of Popish intolerance, and adds:—

Malta is an island under English rule. Instead of any attempt to reduce the power of the priests, it has decidedly increased since my first visit in 1859. All the positions which were then filled by Protestants are now occupied by bigoted Romanists, and in the Law Courts, to the defeat of justice where an English sailor or soldier is concerned. Before, therefore, sending a missionary, as Mr. Glenny proposes, I would urge much united and earnest prayer to Almighty God that the way may be opened for someone to be sent under Government protection.

BRITISH GUIANA.—Mr. Henry Tayler, writing from Weiroony Creek, Upper Berbice river, says: "It is more than a year since our return to this place. We were three years in the Demerara River, and had many opportunities of service for the Lord among the Indians and others, and the joy of seeing some fruit. The Lord gives us open doors here. In my little boat I visit distant settlements of Indians, and occasionally hold meetings on board the river steamers. We have just had a new room put up for the regular Gospel and other meetings here, and the work is on the whole encouraging. Many of the Indians are bright Christians, and the labours of servants of God who have gone to their rest have not been in vain."

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 24.—ACTS XXIII.

Before the Sanhedrim (1-10).—It is a good rule to exercise ourselves to have consciences that do not reproach us. A good conscience is healthy, not morbid; true in its instincts, because adjusted by the Word of God; clear of the stain of permitted sin; cleansed by the blood of Christ. (3) Paul had a quick and impetuous nature; but he was generous enough to retract words that had better not have been uttered. (6) There was a good deal of shrewdness in this appeal, but there is a marvellous contrast between the attitude of this greatest apostle and that of his Master under similar circumstances. These contrasts serve to bring out the unparalleled glory of Christ's character.

Alone with the Lord (11).—How near this best of friends comes when all is still. No prison doors can shut Him out. They may hedge us in, but cannot cut off the communications that come from above. Those who are faithful at Jerusalem are presently given a yet wider opportunity at Rome.

On Horseback through the Night (12-35).—It was heroic of this young man to identify himself with his hunted relative. What chivalry throbs in young souls. All this was in fulfilment of the Apostle's desire to see Rome, but he was to be taken there free of charge. The great Roman empire was to pay the cost of his journey. God has many ways of carrying out his plans, never doubt that prisons, soldiers, forced marches, privation, are all part of a plan, of which the result will amply justify all the expenditure.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 25.—ACTS XXIV.

The Accusers (1-9).—How despicable it was thus to cringe to and flatter this Roman official! Felix must have known how hollow every word was the advocate spoke, and perhaps weighed the charges against the Apostle in the other scale. The devil's advocate tries to carry his case through by the number of epithets and accusations with which he seeks to blacken the defendant, thinking some of this pitch would surely stick!

The Accused (10-21).—Paul could extract matter for cheerful thankfulness from very untoward circumstance. (14) Again this epithet "the Way" is used of the teachings of Jesus. They are the way to God (R.V.). (16) Notice the repeated reference to his conscience (cf. xxiii. 1). (20) A manly straightforward speech, rebutting the charges point for point. It was for the glory of his Master that he thus endeavoured to defend himself. His eye was single, his whole body full of light, his sense of rightness gave him courage, and the Lord stood by and strengthened him.

The Judge (22-27).—Thus Paul was secured from molestation, and was able to prosecute his labours among those that came to see and minister to him. Felix knew about the Way (22, R.V.), and seems to have had strong drawings towards Christ. He had every reason to tremble when Paul spoke of self-control. His marriage-union was an illicit one. But in spite of his attraction to the Saviour, and his sense of the desert of sin, greed and the fear of man triumphed. Beware of the little rift within the lute.

Festus (1-12).—The virulence of religious hate knows no bounds. Ah, religion, what crimes have been committed under the cover of thy name! Paul knew that there was little chance of securing justice before a judge so time-serving as Festus. This was the beginning of the decline of the Roman Empire; her officials had lost the soundness of the olden integrity which had made her great.

Agrippa (13-22).—One of the Herod family. This princeling was corrupted by the crimes and villanies that bred in the enervating atmosphere of Roman civilization. What an infinite contrast between the occupants of the judgment seat and the prisoner at the bar. (19) Note the careless reference to the "one Jesus." How little he knew or cared, and yet he was certainly included in the love of God and in that propitiation which was for the whole world. How deeply dyed with the facts of Christ's resurrection was every speech of Paul. Though Festus had only heard him once, he had no doubt as to Paul's belief in the resurrection.

The Emperor (23-27).—The thought of the Emperor was very present with Festus. Note the obsequious title "my lord." How certainly must the Apostle have realised that his Emperor was Lord of lords and King of kings, and that He was beside him, quieting the throbbing of his heart.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 27.—ACTS XXVI.

From his Youth up (1-11).—Again Paul finds a theme for gladness in untoward conditions. Look for the one patch of blue in a clouded sky. (5) This is the germ thought of the splendid outburst of Phil. iii. (8) Again this witness to the risen Christ. Oh, for more of this direct vision and testimony to the facts of the unseen and eternal world. (10) This is not the last man who, from being exceedingly mad against Christ, has become his humble follower. Our Master loves to get his officers from the pick of the devil's army. We have more hope of the inveterate opponents of the Gospel than of the Gallios who do not care.

The Heavenly Vision (12-23).—There is no such deliverance from the glare and cross lights of earth as to see that light brighter than the sun. It blinds us to all beside. To each there comes a heavenly vision, beckoning to a purer, nobler life. We may see it first on the face of a martyred Stephen, but it haunts us. It confronts us when we go in forbidden paths, and summons us to arise and follow it to the life which is life indeed. (16) What we have seen is only part of the great revelation; He will show us greater things than these. (17) Delivered and sent, ponder these, Christian worker; the Master longs to perform them both for thee. (18) The seed-thought of some of the greatest passages in the prison epistles (Col. i.). (19) Let us not disobey the heavenly visions, lest they grow dim and vanish. (23) God always affords help to those who are living on his plan. (23) We Gentiles should heed Him who proclaims light.

Not Almost but Altogether (24-32).—These words were probably uttered sincerely. Such was the earnestness and spiritual force of the Apostle, he seemed likely to carry this sinner's heart by storm. He came within a little of winning his case. But many a rich argosy has sunk within sight of the harbour mouth. "Almost" is but to fail. The Apostle was the first of the Out-and-out Band. (27) We can hear the clank of the chain. (31) It is well when men are compelled to certify to the excellence of our moral character.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 28.—ACTS XXVII.

The Voyage to Crete (1-8).—Not a pleasant experience to be penned with other prisoners, and under Roman soldiers, in these coasting vessels. Paul would not have one moment out of their observation, but we know he dwelt in the secret of God's presence, and was hidden from the strife of tongues. And God inclined Julius to show him kindness. He can raise up friends in unlikely quarters.

The Storm (9-26).—The counsels of religious men are often at a discount with men of the world, but events certify the justice of their conclusions. They have access to the true Urim and Thummim. (15) The R.V. and a map will make the vessel's course clear. The nautical terms are those of an old sailor. "We" means that Luke had again joined his friend. (23) God's angels can find their way through the murkiest atmosphere. (24) When there is a Divine must in the case, all things bend to it, and storms but waft the servant of God on his way, as the summer breezes might. Let us ask that all who sail with us may be saved with us. The word grant implies that Paul had prayed for this.

Breakers Ahead (27-44).—How calm and peaceful Paul was amid the scene of that wintry morning. The dim dawn, the mighty breakers rolling over the ship, the deck crowded with the motley group of sailors, soldiers, prisoners, passengers; and amid all a prisoner becomes the true captain of the boat, breaking bread, giving thanks, eating as though he were in a friend's house, and inspiring all with new hope—it is a theme for an artist. (44) It does not matter how we get to heaven, so long as in one way or another we at last find ourselves touching its shores. Through the grace of Christ all shall be well if only you will fling yourself out of the old craft of self into his buoyant grace.

FRIDAY MARCH 1.—ACTS XXVIII.

Melita (1-10).—Thank God for the kindness shown by those who have not learnt God's love in Christ. (3) Accidents are not punishments. The clinging of the viper is not an evidence of the anger of God, but an opportunity of showing his care for his own. (5) Let us shake off temptation. We cannot help it attacking us, but we may lay aside every weight and sin. (8) What a blessing one Christian man may be to a ship's crew, and to all with whom he comes into contact! Let us ever be on the outlook for these opportunities.

Coming to Rome (11-15).—Was there a little fear as the apostle drew nigh the mighty city, of which he had thought so much? There is a touching allusion to some undertone in his nature in that word: he thanked God and took courage. How often the grasp of the hand and the hearty word have inspired new courage in some drooping spirit!

The Jew First (16-31).—He pursued his Master's bidding of beginning at Jerusalem. (20) This chain! How the iron ate into his soul! His only solace that he was the prisoner of Jesus Christ. (23) All day he poured out his soul, basing his arguments and appeals on the Old Testament Scriptures. (28) Let us Gentiles avail ourselves of this salvation; our times are nearly fulfilled; then the true branches will be grafted in again. They have forfeited their privileges by unbelief, but God is able. (30-31) The full story of these years has yet to be told, but we get marvellous glimpses into their abounding usefulness in the prison epistles.

SATURDAY, MARCH 2.—ROM. I

The Inscription (1-7).—On the threshold of his greatest epistle he writes himself a bondservant. Such humility is open to God's deepest revelations. The Son of David is also Son of God. Jesus is risen, we obtain our office of appointment from Him. We are called to be Christ's peculiar possession; we are loved by God the Father; we are intended to be saints; we have a heritage of grace and peace.

Not Ashamed of the Gospel (8-17).—We are at liberty to ask for what we want, though we may not be sure whether we are in the current of God's will. Patient prayer will settle that beyond doubt. (12) Even an Apostle's faith could be comforted by the faith of lowly disciples. Forsake not the assemblies of the saints. (14) In debt to Christ, and therefore a debtor to all for his sake. (16) Not only salvation from the penalty, but power against the dominion of sin. We may know what is good, but apart from Christ have no power to perform.

The State of Man by Nature (18-32).—All men may know of God through nature and conscience. But they have no desire to know, and therefore hold down, as though to throttle, the truth. (21) To refuse to give thanks is the first retrograde step, which leads to heart-darkness, and thus to the exchange of God for idols. (24) The next downward step is uncleanness. (28) We must never forget that the heathen are not simply in ignorance of God, but have refused Him. They have turned from Him, and therefore have lost the pervading, purifying influence of his presence; and their hearts, from being temples, have become the haunt of every foul bird and noisome beast.

UNCHANGING.

"Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."—Heb. xiii. 8.

Yes, all things change, the flowers decay,
The sunset glory fades away;
And oft earth's fairest, choicest things,
Are those that fly on fleetest wings.

Health, pleasure, fame, and friends depart,
Grief fills the once rejoicing heart;
The world itself is growing old,
And life is but "a tale that's told."

But through the swiftly changing years,
'Midst all our human hopes and fears;
Unchanged, there stands one glorious name,
Jesus, for evermore the same.

One rock of strength, which naught can move,
One sure, abiding, changeless love,
One steadfast hope which cannot fail,
One anchor cast within the veil.

One refuge from the wintry blast,
One joy which evermore shall last,
One kingdom which shall stand for aye,
When earthly thrones have passed away.

O Christ, our everlasting King,
With joy thy changeless name we sing,
Of all thy gifts, Thyself alone
Our life, our joy, our all we own.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

MARCH 3.

THE RAISING OF LAZARUS.—John xi. 30-45.

GOLDEN TEXT, verse 25.

BETHANY was situated on the Mount of Olives, about two miles from Jerusalem. Jesus was at work in Bethabara, beyond Jordan (x. 40), when the message from the sisters reached Him. The distance between Bethabara and Bethany was about thirty miles.

The death of Lazarus must have been a great mystery to the two sisters. For several reasons: 1. They knew that Jesus loved them (5). If He had healed the nobleman's son, the blind man, and even the Roman Centurion's servant, much more may they expect Him to heal his friend. 2. They had asked Him to do so (3). Their message, by its very form, indicated their confidence in Him. Yet in spite of this their brother died! 3. The reply of Jesus seemed to mean that Lazarus would recover (4). What else could be understood by the words "not unto death"? 4. Knowing that Lazarus was dead, and that the sisters were in anguish, He delayed two days before He set out for Bethany (6). All this was mysterious. It seemed as though Jesus was less kind to his friends than to others; that He would answer the prayer of others, but refuse the request of those He loved; that his message was untrue. Was not all this unspeakably painful to the sisters? Yet love's ways are right. One blessing is denied in order that a greater may be bestowed. Apparent unkindness and indifference only prepare the way for a fuller manifestation of love. Delay is not denial.

Our lesson takes up the story at the point when Jesus, outside the city of Bethany, after his interview with Martha (18-27), is met by Mary. The characteristic difference between the two sisters appears in this incident. The miracle was a fulfilment and an illustration of what Jesus had said to Martha.

30-32.—Jesus did not enter into the house because the professional mourners were there. Probably He had little sympathy with these extravagant mourning customs. And, moreover, He had come not to mourn Lazarus as dead, but to give him back to the mourning sisters. The words of Mary (32) are like those of Martha (21). The one thought of what Jesus could do had occupied them as they watched their brother die. But Mary's position is her own. "At Jesus' feet" was the place where she delighted to be (Luke x. 30 and John xii. 3). However mysterious our Lord's dealings with her, she had not ceased to love and to trust.

33-37.—"Groaned in the spirit, and was troubled" is best explained by margin of the R. V. It was not sorrow, but indignation that He expressed. Was it against death itself? Or was it against those Jews who were now weeping with Mary, but would soon be plotting to kill both Himself and Lazarus? (xi. 53, xii. 10.) Shams of all sorts were hateful to Him, but none could be more hateful than hypocritical mourners with such grief as Mary's. "Wept" (35) is not the same word that is used in 31 and 33, to denote loud wailing, but means to shed tears silently. It expresses the true deep sympathy of Jesus. The fact that He had power over death, and could command the grave to give back its victims, did not lessen his true human sympathy. This verse sanctions our sorrow over the loss of friends. See how the Jews regarded this sympathy (36, 37). They were like ourselves; and thought that truest sympathy would have been shown by preventing the trouble. How much would have been lost to the sisters, and to all mourners down the ages, if this bereavement had not been allowed?

38-45.—The grave was a cave hewn out of the rock, with a stone rolled against it (R.V.). The miracle is made more striking by several things:—1. Martha's remark (39, 40) brought out the fact that Lazarus had been in the grave four days. Her respect for the dead would not have his body exposed now that corruption had begun. Her faith had not fully grasped what Jesus had promised. Hence our Lord's reply (40), in order to strengthen her faith. 2. The prayer of Jesus (41, 42) made the miracle a work of God. What must be the guilt of those who should seek to put Jesus to death after God had wrought such a miracle by Him? The prayer is one of thanksgiving for an answer already given. May we not learn from this example how to pray the prayer of faith? 3. The Loud Call (43, 44).—This method was adopted to impress those who stood by, and to warn them further of the guilt they were about to incur. Nothing but the word of Jesus is needed to raise the dead. This is true of the spiritually dead (v. 25), and of the physically dead at last (v. 28, 29). Do not read the story without remembering that we are dead by nature (Eph. ii. 1), and that He can give us life. Have we heard his life-giving voice?

For the Young.

LITTLE THINGS.

THE murmur of a waterfall
A mile away;
The rustle when a robin lights
Upon a spray;
The lapping of a lowland stream
On dipping boughs;
The sound of grazing from a herd
Of gentle cows;
The echo from a wooded hill
Of cuckoo's call;
The quiver through the meadow grass
At evening fall:—
Too subtle are these harmonies
For pen and rule;
Such music is not understood
By any school;
But, when the brain is overwrought,
It hath a spell
Beyond all human power and skill
To make it well.

The memory of a kindly word
For long gone by;
The fragrance of a faded flower
Sent lovingly;
The gleaming of a sudden smile
Or sudden tear;
The warmer pressure of the hand,
The tone of cheer;
The blush that means "I cannot speak,
But I have heard;"
The note that only bears a verse
From God's own word:—
Such tiny things we hardly count
As ministry;
The givers deeming they have shown
Scant sympathy;
But, when the heart is overwrought,
Oh! who can tell
The power of such tiny things
To make it well!

F. R. HAVERGAL.

A YOUNG HERO.

A TRUE STORY.

ALBERT was a boy of twelve, lively, active, and strong, when the event took place which brought a sad change over his hitherto bright young life.

It was a cold winter's day when Albert went out with some of his young companions, to amuse himself on the ice, some little distance from home. For some time they went on very happily together skating or sliding, but suddenly one of the boys, venturing too near a dangerously thin place in the ice, fell in, the ice breaking all round him. This boy could not swim, but Albert could. Not hesitating a moment, he sprang into the water after his friend, and held him up till help could be brought, and they were both taken out of the water. Thus Albert saved his friend's life, for there is no doubt the boy who fell in would have been drowned but for him.

But the consequences were sad to poor Albert. The shock to his system, caused by his plunging into the freezing water and remaining there for some time, made him very ill, and brought on epileptic fits. These so affected his brain that he became insane, and he had to be sent to a lunatic asylum. Here he remained utterly listless, when not in a fit, lying either in bed or on a couch, taking no interest in what was going on around him, never speaking, and not seeming to hear or understand when others spoke to him.

The chaplain visited him, and read and talked to him, but after trying a few times to get some response from the poor sufferer without success, he gave up going to see him, thinking it useless. At length that chaplain left and another came. When the new chaplain heard poor Albert's sad story, and how his deplorable condition was brought on by his noble effort to save his playfellow's life, his heart was deeply touched with love and pity. He resolved that, however dull and indifferent the boy might appear, he would always pay him a visit when he went round among the patients. He kept this resolution.

At first, and many times after, as he read the Bible, and explained or made remarks, and prayed, no ray of intelligence passed over the stolid face. It seemed as if he might just as well have been speaking to a stone statue! But he persevered, and at last he was rewarded by perceiving a change. The poor boy's eyes began to brighten a little when his friend approached him, then he thought he could detect a slight smile flit across the pale features, and finally he actually got those long-closed lips to part sometimes, and utter a reply to a question. It was only "Yes" or "No" that they seemed able to say, but that was an encouraging advance.

By dint of gentle and patient inquiry, the kind chaplain discovered that, though the poor mind was closed to much that was going on around it, the Saviour had a place in Albert's heart. How thankful the clergyman was, then, that he had not been disheartened, but had persevered in visiting the poor lunatic!

At length poor Albert's time came to leave this world of pain and grief, and his faithful friend ministered to him in those last hours of weakness. He could not but rejoice that the poor boy's sufferings were over, when he closed his eyes in death. Can we doubt that he is now with that blessed Saviour, whose example he followed in saving life and suffering for it? M. E.

THE WELCOME HOME.

MISS CHILD has issued a little paper, reviewing with thankfulness the work of the year at the "Welcome Home." The efforts include the home, in which seamen are free from outside temptations and influences; the coffee-room, providing a counter attraction to the public-house; the fo'c-s'le, for evangelistic meetings; free suppers and lodgings; the Book Bag Mission; and the safe keeping of our sailors' clothes and money, for transmission to their friends. A country home has been opened in the Epping Forest, for the reception of sick sailors and others. This has already proved very helpful. The Christian Lifeboat Crew (with its branches in England, Sweden, Denmark, Germany, Turkey, Asia Minor, New Zealand, Australia, and China) has held its musters, as usual, with unabated vigour, and the blessing of God has been evidently resting upon it and the efforts made. The monthly texts have been eagerly sought for by the members scattered throughout the world. The visits from detachments of the Christian Lifeboat Crew to different mission centres, under the leadership of Mr. William Luff, have also been greatly appreciated.

More extended accounts of the work, and interesting incidents in connection with it, can be had at any time from Miss Child, 173, St. George's-street, Ratcliff-highway, E.

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.

DURING the past months we have been enabled to scatter the good seed in many towns and villages, and have rejoiced to see fruit to the glory of God. Recently I have had much joy in preaching the precious, ever new, never-worn-out Gospel in various places, such as Liverpool, Kendal, Bristol, Ross, Musbury, and Weston-super-Mare. In every place I have seen it proved to demonstration that the Gospel of God, and it alone, when ministered in the Spirit, is sufficient to attract the people to hear it night after night, and in many happy instances to be saved by its power. In this connection I would seek the prayers of the Lord's people for evangelistic missions I am hoping to hold in Bath, Malvern, and Kendal during the coming two or three months.

This exceptionally severe and prolonged wintry weather is making the outlook for our already ill-paid labourers sad in the extreme and dreary to a degree. "No work!" "Can't get employment!" "No coals!" "No potatoes!" are the constant confessions on all hands. We long so much to distribute coals and food where specially needed. We have no funds at our disposal, and can but echo the sad refrain of, alas! nearly every mission—"Our funds are quite exhausted!" We pray that we may be enabled to meet some of the need in these bitterly cold and bleak hills ("Blec-dunes"—bleak hills, as their name implies). W. J. H. BREALEY.

Clayhidon, Wellington, Somerset.

Things which are Shaken.

We have evidently reached the days of which He whose voice once shook the earth has said, "Yet once more I shake not the earth only but also heaven. And this word, yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain."

"See that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount," is the word which the Lord commanded Moses. "Let them measure the pattern," repeats the Spirit by Ezekiel. "Hold fast the pattern of sound words," pleads the same Spirit by the Apostle Paul.

It is of little use to find beams or motes in each other's eyes: we must be freed from them in our own. If ecclesiasticism, sacerdotalism, sacramentarianism, are rife or even rampant in the Establishment, they are not absent in the Free Churches. Fifty or sixty years ago an endeavour was made to separate from these evils, by meeting in primitive simplicity as "Brethren." But the very same principles were developed: the same priestly domination, the same Adam in the ascendant. For the evil is in the human heart.

We have not the least expectation of a remedy being found in any attempt "to secede, and rear a splendid Protestant Church upon the ruins of the Romanised Establishment." A similar idea has found expression among some spiritually-minded Nonconformists. But some of them have been convinced that the new departure would find men in the front who push with side and with shoulder, while some, with whom the meek and lowly in heart would find more affinity, would remain behind.

"Let every one abide in the same calling wherein he was called. . . . Brethren, let every one, wherein he is called, therein abide with God." So long as he can abide with God let him abide. That principle surely applies to Church as well as to social and commercial relationships. But is it not too late in the day to rear a splendid new thing of any kind on the ruins of the old? "Behold, I stand at the door and knock: if any one will hear my voice and open the door I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with Me." He does not bid him come out even of Laodicea; but when that lukewarm self-sufficiency is spued out of his mouth, He will give the overcomer to sit with Him on his throne, even as He overcame, and is set down with his Father on his throne.

We have received a large number of letters, some from Evangelical Churchmen, pointing out the advancing apostasy and the Romanising tendency of Ritualism; some from Nonconformists shewing that the Church of England is, even when Evangelical, honeycombed by Ritualistic and Romish tendencies; and some from Ritualistic and Evangelical Church people, excusing themselves, or else accusing one another. Cui bono? Is there not a deeper and more serious question than all this? Has God given us a pattern of his Church, and are we ourselves conforming to it?

The pattern is the human body, with its soul and spirit, the divinest material thing God ever made, for it was made in his own likeness, and quickened by his own breath. In two Epistles the Apostle sets forth at length the relation of the body, the Church, to its Head, Christ, and of the members of the body to each other.

In earliest days, when they kept the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, the power of the ungrieved indwelling Spirit was such, that "of the rest durst no man join himself unto them." But very soon first love was left, and already in Apostolic times, they sought their own, not the things which are Jesus Christ's; and every possible departure has taken place, from the oneness of the body and the simplicity which is in Christ.

But no failure to maintain the unity of the body can rob each or any member of its proper function or relieve it of the responsibility for its exercise.

Is not our first individual and personal duty to ask ourselves whether we are fulfilling that responsibility and exercising the gift entrusted to us? The most effectual way in which we can aid in rectifying the Laodicean or any other fallen condition of the Church is to conform ourselves individually to God's indefeasible pattern, and in whatever outward form of communion we may be, to recognise the oneness of the body and cleanse ourselves from all sectarianism of spirit.

What we need for the Revival for which we are all looking is the power of the Holy Ghost. We may count upon that just so far as we make room for Him. And room must be made by judging ourselves more than by judging others.

It is right and even necessary to ask, How far are the evils we deplore traceable to our own complicity? The very same evils may and do exist in some degree in Evangelical men and Evangelical churches, against which in their full development, Evangelicals so strenuously inveigh. If we spend the rest of our lives in denouncing the evils outside us we shall probably only convince the majority, which always seeks to be allied with the strongest party, that the stars in their courses are fighting against the Evangelicals, and they will throw in their lot with the stars.

MR. W. R. LANE AT CLAPHAM ROAD.

Commencing on Sunday, February 10, and closing on Friday, the 15th, this servant of God held a short mission in the Presbyterian church, which has been attended with blessed results. From first to last the power of the Lord was present with his servant, and it was a season of special refreshing. On the two closing evenings a considerable number of young people responded to the evangelist's invitation to meet him in the vestry, that he might explain to them the way of God more perfectly. On the last evening especially it was a delightful spectacle to see the numbers who rose from the seated audience and walked through the church to meet the pastor, Dr. McEwan, and Mr. Lane for further counsel and prayer.

Dr. McEwan has decided to hold a class every Sunday evening at the close of the service for the purpose of helping these seekers after God, and it is earnestly hoped that Mr. Lane will, at no very distant date, return again to this field of labour.

BIARRITZ.—Mr. W. W. Mowle writes from Chalet Jean Leon, Avenue Carnot, Barritz:—"I am opening an English Club here for servants, and shall be glad to receive good papers and other literature. Lord Radstock is witnessing before audiences of the upper classes. Kindly remember in prayer this special work, which is expected to last until May 1."

ANTI-LYNCHING CRUSADE.—One of the most encouraging proofs of the beneficial results of the anti-lynching agitation in the United States of America is seen in the report given by the Chicago Daily Inter-Ocean of February 1, according to which a bill has been introduced in the Senate of Tennessee to punish lynching and mob violence. This, coupled with the news of the spirited action taken by the Governor of Texas in proposing measures for the punishment of lynchers, is proof that our American cousins are determined to deal with the question in a thorough fashion.

A National Fast.

By REV. W. CROSBIE, Nottingham.

In the earnest days of our Puritan forefathers national fasts were not uncommon. And the present writer remembers a day being set apart for humiliation and prayer about the year 1848 or 1849, when there was a visitation of cholera. But this generation has seen no public fast-day or national recognition and confession of sin, and calling upon God. And yet, nothing would be more appropriate at the present time, and nothing is more necessary. The condition of things in the country and in the churches demands it. The hand of the Lord is upon us because of our sins, and blessing is withheld, and progress is arrested. Dangers and difficulties of various kinds are multiplying around us, and baffling the wisdom of the wisest. Not in one, but in every sphere, matters are assuming a very serious aspect, as if we were approaching some grave crisis, or passing into "a time of trouble."

This view may be regarded as too pessimistic; but it is not more pessimistic than the facts. The prophets of Israel were very pessimistic to the men of their day, and were denounced and persecuted, and their message of repentance scorned and rejected; they nevertheless spoke the truth, and all their warnings were fulfilled and verified. Righteousness sternly vindicated itself. It is admitted that a vast amount of good is being done—more than in any other age; but evils also abound, and are increasing, new forms ever developing, and many of the old are stronger and more firmly rooted than before. And apostasies subtle, and others more gross, are spreading in the churches, enervating faith, and clouding and confusing the Gospel. Whatever may be said per contra and in mitigation—and much may be said—it cannot with truth be denied that the health of the body-politic, and of the soul-politic, as Thomas Carlyle characteristically puts it, is not sound. Our modern civilisation is breaking down at many points, and our modern industrialism; while our nineteenth-century Christianity is proving inadequate to the great needs of the times, and judgments—the disciplinary judgments of God's righteousness and mercy—are abroad in the earth.

Should there not, therefore, be a humbling of ourselves before God, that He may exalt us in due time? We want no formal fast proclaimed and "commanded" by authority. That would avail nothing, but would be an offence to God. The fast must be spontaneous, and a necessity of the national conscience and heart. If proclaimed from the throne, the proclamation must be simply a voicing of the general and prevailing sentiment.

The nation is called great, and is the greatest nation on the earth; but what new and nobler greatness would be hers were she, by common consent and on a given day, to crowd all her temples, and send up to God confession and prayer; her Sovereign and statesmen and leaders, and all her ministers, joining the people in solemn religious exercises, as in the highest and best times in the history of the people of Israel. Out of that, what a birth of greatness and prosperity would come! Purged, reformed, and sanctified, England would be, as she has never been before, the cynosure of all eyes, and would lead the nations of the world in the paths of true progress and peace. "God, even our own God, would bless us; and all the ends of the earth would fear Him."

World-wide Evangelisation.

What a weeping amongst the mothers of Britain, and amongst the fathers too, there would be if all the children born during the coming three years were born dumb, and had always to make signs to a nurse to get her to convey their meaning to the parents. Ay, indeed, what a weeping in Britain would there be!

Well, then, if angels now are looking down on England, must they not be ready to weep as they see the thousands and tens of thousands of English professing Christians receiving the Lord's Supper, and yet leaving their duty undone and privilege of telling to their fellow-countrymen in their own tongue of the love that the Heavenly Father has towards them, and that He has given them his only begotten Son to die for them.

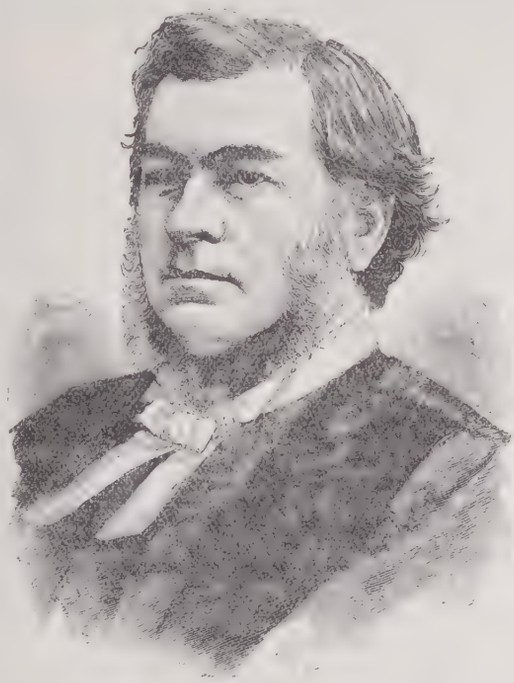
For surely the laymen and women of Britain, with all our printing and inventions, have not improved upon the Bible plan and usage of the early Christians, but sadly backslidden from it. It was a glorious beginning, that in Jerusalem, when every one of the women, young and old, and every one of the men, young and old, was filled with the Holy Ghost, and every one of them, master, or servant, or slave, was scattered, and all went not dumb, but spreading the Gospel wherever they went.

Be certain if we Christians desire, and surely multitudes of us do desire, the evangelisation of the dark places of the earth. Should not then every truly converted individual look for at least an equal blessing to be emptied out upon us, as in the first century? Our heavenly Father's arm is not shortened that it cannot save now. Nay! nay! and Himself can move this world from one end to the other. Does He wait to give us faith to say to this mountain, "Be thou plucked up by the roots, and be thou cast into the sea"?

For weeks I have been confined to the house, but how I would rejoice to hear of closet prayer and united prayer for a world-wide blessing springing up over Europe, over America, and amongst the Christians of the whole earth. For myself I may confess I used to be tempted to pray only for some small portion of the earth, or for some particular people. But how very different is Christ's teaching; for example, "After this manner pray ye, thy will be done on earth as in Heaven," yet how definite, not among the heavenly bodies, but definitely on this little globe on which the praying ones live.

The beloved Moravians have sent me their publication for December last, in which are the following words delivered by Rev. H. G. Fox, M.A., Vicar of St. Nicholas, Durham:—

"Three great facts, it seems to me, have been as yet barely perceived, and must be pressed home with repeated insistance on the consciences of Christian people. The first is the personal responsibility of every follower of Christ to carry out his purpose for the evangelisation of the world. It is a duty which, like all other Christian duties, cannot be delegated. Every member of the Church of Christ must take his full and appointed part, whether directly or indirectly, in making Him known to all nations."



Reginald Radcliffe.

LIVINGSTONIA.—Dr. Laws has fixed on the locality suitable for the establishment of the new Training and Industrial Institution which the Livingstonia Mission intend starting in British Central Africa. The place chosen is in the neighbourhood of Mount Wallen, not far from the Deep Bay Station, Lake Nyassa, and it is possible that the British South Africa Company will assist the Livingstonia Mission by a grant of land. One of the chief objects of this Industrial Institution will be the training of natives in large numbers to different trades, such as carpentry, blacksmithing, printing, and building.

THE LATE
REV. W. M. TAYLOR, D.D.,
OF NEW YORK.

Death has recently laid its hand on this Christian pastor, well known on both sides of the Atlantic, and has ushered his spirit into the larger life. He had the honoured distinction not only of exemplifying the fact that Christian service knows no geographical boundaries, but of showing that denominational walls ought to be built low enough for one to overleap them when the finger of Providence points that way. His best powers were given to the work of the Christian ministry, and he was given to see a goodly measure of success. For a couple of years past he had retired, through shattered health, from the responsibilities and cares of public office; so that he may be said to be as a shock of corn fully ripe when the Master of the vineyard gathered him home to his fathers.

Born of covenanting stock at Kilmarnock, in south central Scotland, in 1829, he entered Glasgow University at the early age of sixteen; graduating with high honours at the age of twenty. Having devoted himself to the Gospel ministry in connection with the United Presbyterian Church, he entered the Edinburgh Divinity Hall of that body and passed through the three years' curriculum of study, making good practical use of the vacations, as many Scottish students do. In those early years he enjoyed some journalistic training in his native town; doubtless learning there the value of the Press as a medium of public instruction, and preparing for editorial service later in life.

Mr. Taylor's first pastorate was in the village of Kilmaurs, where he acquitted himself so well that he was called two years later to the wider sphere of Bootle, then a new Liverpool suburb. Here there was ample scope for youthful zeal and energy. During sixteen years of an active aggressive pastorate at Bootle he saw a mere handful of people grow into a church with a membership of six hundred, having a handsome church edifice seated for a thousand. One recent biographer, speaking of this period of Mr. Taylor's life, says: "He flung all his fine muscular energy and forcible earnestness and utterance into his Sunday services. He visited faithfully; he organised mission services; he drew the people into his church, and surely kept his grasp when once he had got hold of them."

Of course, calls came to him from various places during the period of his Liverpool work, but all these he declined to entertain. In 1871 he visited the States, and preached for Dr. Storrs, of Brooklyn. This led to a very cordial invitation from the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, a church connected with the Congregational body. Mr. Taylor accepted the pressing offer, and entered on his service at that important centre of Christian testimony early in 1872. There the remaining twenty years of his public ministry were spent, with frequent visits, however, to the mother land. His pulpit gifts soon drew around him a large and well-equipped congregation, amongst whom, and the customary quota of visitors from far and near, he held aloft the banner of the Gospel. His preaching was eminently sound, fresh, Evangelical, and experimental, so that he was able to wield a helpful and elevating influence in a community where such testimony was greatly needed. The tendencies of business and social life in New York in those days of the notorious Tweed régime were of a lowering character, and it is affirmed by some that the movement which has done so much to purify the civic atmosphere of the capital of the Empire State really began in Dr. Taylor's congregation.

Dr. Taylor has made free use of the printing press in enlarging the borders of his audiences. One volume of expository sermons on the Miracles of Christ, published during his English ministry, and another on the Parables, published from America, have been widely read and enjoyed. A course of Yale lectures, published under the title of "The Ministry of the Word," is described as one of the best manuals of pastoral theology ever written, full of plain speaking and practical power. Perhaps he is best known as an author through his studies in Bible biography; in this series of volumes the lives of Joseph, David, Elijah, Daniel, Peter, and Paul have been ably and vividly unfolded for the edification of latter-day Christians. Genial in tone, earnest in spirit, and solid in his theological views, Dr. Taylor was ever a welcome speaker on public platforms. The speech and influence of men like him have done much to sweeten and to Christianise the relations existing between the great new land of the west and the mother country. For some time he edited and wrote in The Christian at Work, a live evangelical weekly journal.

Two years ago Dr. Taylor had a paralytic seizure, and recovery was so partial as to induce him to seek retirement from the burdens of active and reponsible pastoral work of a stated kind. He hoped to devote the remaining years of life to labours of a less onerous, and literary, kind. But the years granted him for that purpose have been few; and now he sleeps in Jesus, after a full term of faithful service as a staunch standard-bearer of the old Gospel in leading cities of two continents. In his day of manifested reward, many will arise to call him blessed for the words he has spoken or printed, and the work he has been able to accomplish for the glory of the Master and the good of his follows.

ASHLEY DOWN ORPHAN HOUSES, BRISTOL.

We have been requested to insert the following, and we gladly comply. Mr. Müller informs us that previous insertions have led to the reception of many orphans.

As we have now a great number of vacancies for girls in our five large orphan houses, erected to receive 2050 boys and girls who have lost both parents by death, I earnestly request Christian friends kindly to assist me in filling up these vacancies, by seeking out suitable cases for admission into our institution; by letting the relatives or friends of orphan girls know that they can be received at the Ashley Down Orphan Houses; and by advising them to write to me for their admission.

We receive both boys and girls, bereaved of both parents by death, from their earliest days, keep the boys until they are fourteen or fifteen years of age, when they are apprenticed, and the girls till they are about seventeen years old, when they are provided with suitable situations. Up to the time that our orphans leave the institution, they have a most comfortable and happy home, they are boarded, lodged, clothed, and educated entirely free of all expense to their relatives, and, when leaving, each orphan is provided with an outfit.

When I began the orphan work, fifty-nine years ago, there was accommodation in this country for 3600 orphans only; but since that time, through the blessing of God, which has rested so abundantly upon my labours, such an impetus has been given to orphan work that institutions have sprung up in various parts of Great Britain, by means of which more than 100,000 orphans can now be provided for, and for this reason it is that we have so many vacancies at the present time, and find it so difficult to fill them all up, though we have received 808 within the last two years and a-half.

George Müller.

Some London Missions.

THE SOUTH LONDON MISSION.

In the years of the great revivals God was pleased remarkably to use in South London the late William Carter, whose theatre and other special services were the means of leading hundreds to the Saviour. To many of my readers his very name must recall precious memories of a notable work amongst the lowest class. In 1861 he was led to found the South London Mission, which, under varying circumstances, has been carried on by other but like-minded servants of God.

The present locale of this Mission is Scovell-road, Borough-road, in the very heart of a dense and poor district. Moreover, vast blocks of industrial dwellings recently erected have immensely swelled he population. At least a thousand families occupy hese lofty structures, and unless means be taken to visit every door and urge the claims of the Gospel upon the inmates, there is danger that whole colonies may practically

LAPSE INTO UTTER INDIFFERENCE.

Such industrial dwellings, properly constructed, are a boon to the working classes; but none the less do they present a very serious problem to Christian workers interested in the well-being of the dwellers therein. It is exhausting for the Christian visitor, climbing flight after flight to reach one family, then all the way down and up a fresh series of stairs to reach another house; but trying as this work is, it must be done if touch is to be kept with the people. Constant visitation from house to house by the Bible woman, the secretary, and other workers is a strong point in the operations of the South London Mission. So also is open-air preaching, and many very striking conversions are recorded from the out-of-door testimony.

Some time ago (to mention but one) a young girl, whose home was blighted by intemperance, stood carelessly to listen to the speakers at the corner. The words spoken reached her heart and awakened concern. Following the band to the hall she confessed herself anxious. Three days of mental anguish ensued, and at length she found peace in believing. Since then she has become one of the most active workers in the Mission, and has been used to lead many to Christ. She is in the habit of taking Gospel books with her to the work-room in which she is engaged during the week, and reading aloud to her work-mates.

HER BRAVE TESTIMONY

has been much owned of God. This is but one of many. It illustrates how the work is being blessed, and how those saved seek to win others.

The Sunday-evening Gospel services are well attended, and fruitful in result. The Sunday-schools are full of interest; the Band of Hope, led by one who was formerly employed in a public-house, and who knows thoroughly the evils of drink, is doing good service. Similarly the Gospel temperance work has been used to the deliverance of not a few who were enslaved by strong drink. The mothers' meeting is largely attended, and has been a real help to many. The Christian Endeavour movement has taken a thorough hold at Scovell-road, perhaps owing to the fact that the treasurer of the Mission, Mr. R. H. Parsons, is one of the leading Endeavourers in South London. At all events, the young Endeavourers are doing splendid work in this Mission, besides going out elsewhere to set other young people to similar service.

Many useful agencies, common to all well-organised missions, must be taken for granted and need not be detailed; sufficient to add that there is here considerable distress by reason of severe weather and want of work, and the Mission is doing what it can in the way of relief. The secretary is Mr. T. Arnold, South London Mission, Scovell-road, Borough-road, S.E.

THE LATIMER-ROAD MISSION, W.

From the purlieus of Southwark we pass to the far West, beyond Notting Hill. Surely there the need for patient, persistent mission work cannot be so pressing as in the poverty-smitten South. Alas, it is! The "Potteries" is known to many as one of the saddest districts in West London. On the borders of this region, and penetrating into its back streets, a company of earnest workers have been toiling since 1862 in connection with the Latimer-road mission.

The hall is modest and unpretending, but inquiry proves that a vast amount of varied and useful service is carried on; for the workers, under Miss Gladstone's leadership, have learned how to utilise every corner of the building, and make the very utmost use of their opportunities.

Besides the regular mission operations, there are one or two special features which have interested me greatly. One is the pains taken to get hold of a certain rough and somewhat unmanageable element—said, by some who know the district well, to be descended from who in past days settled in the neighbourhood. Many of this class lounge about the street, frequent the Scrubs and certain waste grounds, get into mischief, and avoid, as far as possible, anything like Sunday school. For these, Evening Shelters were opened some years ago. At first they were shy of entering; but at length the confidence of some was won, and, these coming, brought others. Now about 200 are out and in the Shelter each evening—many being elder lads who otherwise would be hanging round the public-house door. Illustrated papers and simple games are provided, and care is taken to use the opportunity to win them to higher things. In cases not a few these efforts have been blessed to the conversion of some who seemed hopeless.

Nor are their sisters forgotten. Upstairs a separate room is open as a shelter four nights each week for rough girls, who are taught to sew, and in being taught come under Christian influence—happily, with good results in saving some and in keeping many from temptation.

Then the curse of the neighbourhood being drink, great attention is paid to Gospel temperance, and that with remarkable issue, quite a band of earnest Christian temperance men and women having been formed. The temperance and Gospel meetings have been the means of reclaiming many who have been slaves to drink and "without God and without hope in the world." The workers themselves regard the thrift operations—clubs, farthing bank, and so on—as a leading feature.

Apart from these there are Gospel services, a large mothers' meeting, a crèche for infants whose mothers must work for a living, flourishing Sunday schools, and a Sunday evening children's service, attended by a very poor class. In the way of relief and help, poverty being very sore at present, there is the soup kitchen, dispensing about 110 gallons daily, with its free dinners for starving children; coal and food also are given in cases of real destitution; moreover the wood-chopping yard provides work to some unemployed. The Bible woman and city missionary, going constantly from house to house, find out how things are at home.

For all these varied activities there is need of help—funds, books for shelters and library, toys for infants, and clothing for the destitute. Details of this work may be had of Miss Gladstone, Latimer-road Mission, Blechynden-street, Notting Hill, W.

Pearl Fisher.

COMMERCIAL-ROAD MISSION TO THE JEWS.—The work connected with the Sydney-street Hall is being carried on with much encouragement by Mr. H. Barnett. The meetings are well attended, and when the weather is favourable there is outdoor preaching. Mr. Barnett has brought out an almanack for 1895, which is at present being distributed among Jews in various districts of London and the provinces. The booklet is so compiled as to arrest the attention of readers regarding the Gospel. The words of Scripture as to the Messiah are given on alternate pages with the calendar, which is in Hebrew and Judæa-German. Communications to Mr. Barnett should be addressed: 94, Malmesbury-road, Bow, E.

DISTRESS IN LONDON.

We have received from London workers among the poor a number of pressing appeals for help in meeting the prevalent distress occasioned by the severe weather. We have not space for individual cases of poverty, but we append some salient points in these appeals:—

Mr. J. W. Weston, of the Grove Mission (31, Park street, Southwark, S.E.), tells of many breadwinners out of work and much consequent distress. Help is greatly needed for providing food and coals.

Pastor Vanstone, of Bow Baptist Chapel (50, Tredegar-road, Bow, E.), says the distress in that locality is heart-breaking. He fears that their soup kitchen will have to be closed unless further aid is given by the public.

Mr. A. Water, hon. sec. of the Billingsgate Christian Mission (6, The Corridor, Billingsgate Market, E.C.), finds their slender resources severely taxed to meet the piteous claims of the hungry multitudes who crowd into the mission hall.

Mr. W. Chorley, of the North-East Gospel Mission (6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, N.), has three soup kitchens at work in different centres, and the most grievous cases of suffering are being relieved by lady visitors so far as means will allow.

Miss R. Child, of the Welcome Home, 173, St. George's-street, E., reports an enormous amount of poverty and distress among sailors, owing to the slackness in the shipping trade. She invites help in giving soup suppers to starving seamen in the Port of London.

Mr. W. J. Orsman, of the Costers' Mission, 242, Hoxton-street, N., is giving cocoa breakfasts and half-penny soup dinners to 1500 of the poorest children of the neighbourhood. The soup kitchen for adults out of work is also opened. He wants help to keep the coppers boiling.

Dr. A. H. Leete, of the Wesleyan East-end Mission (242, Cable-street, E.), appeals for anything digestible and wearable, so as to meet in some degree the lack of food and warm clothing among the poor visited by the agents of the mission, especially the invalid poor.

Mr. C. R. Hurditch, of the Evangelistic Mission, 164, Alexandra-road, N.W., writes telling of widespread want and suffering in the Kilburn district. Soup dinners are being given each day at Kilburn Hall, and visitors are distributing coal, food, and clothing as far as the resources of the Mission will allow.

STAR VILLA ORPHAN HOME.

The annual meeting of this institution was held at the Home, Goodwin road, Hastings, Rev. Dr. Carr presiding. Mrs. Willis, in her opening statement, spoke of her own impaired health and failing sight, "Not that I murmur at my affliction, but I feel grieved at being obliged to increase the expenditure of the home by hiring additional labour to help me in my work, having been ordered by two specialists to forgo all needlework, reading, or writing beyond my signature; indeed, they told me I ought to have had that help many years ago. The health of the children has been extremely good during the past year, nothing beyond a few colds. We have had during the year on an average twenty-eight children. Seven children have left the home, and ten new ones have been received, making altogether at the present time twenty-nine. Many have had to be refused admission for want of funds and room, and several are now waiting to be received as soon as a vacancy occurs."

The Chairman and others spoke warmly of the good work being done in this Home, and of the care taken of the little ones.

PARIS.—The severe weather has caused intense suffering among the poor of Paris; and Miss de Broen has done her part in endeavouring to relieve it. A soup kitchen has been opened, and the large hall has been a place of refuge from the cold to many.

THE BIBLE IN AUSTRALIAN SCHOOLS.—The Bible has hitherto been banished from Australasian schools, but it looks as if a reaction were setting in. The South Australian Upper House has carried a resolution in favour of the proposal to take a vote of the electors on Bible or no Bible. In Victoria, seventy members of the present Assembly, including the Premier, are also, it is said, in favour of a plebiscite, and on this point the Australian Review of Reviews says:—"If the matter is to turn on a popular vote there is no room to doubt what the result will be. The National Scripture Instruction League has already taken a plebiscite in nineteen districts, and 46,000 votes were cast in favour of the Bibles in the schools, and only 4000 against it." Future developments of the question will be watched on this side with the greatest interest.—Westminster Gazette.

The Book World.

TWELVE SERMONS FOR THE TROUBLED AND TRIED. By C. H. Spurgeon. (1s.) Messrs. Passmore & Alabaster have issued with this title another volume of the "Twelve Sermons" series. The discourses are all of sterling worth.

THE KING'S HIGHWAY.—Volume II. of the new series contains last year's parts of this well-known "Journal of Scriptural Holiness." The list of contributors includes some fully equipped and gracious teachers; and the articles are generally instructive and stimulating. (C. H. Kelly.)

FAITH'S STRONG FOUNDATIONS. By Rev. J. Reid Howatt. (1s. Nisbet.) Admirable chapters on God, Revelation, Sin, Redemption, Faith, and Duty. Facts and reasons, arguments and appeals, are well presented. The book is likely to prove of service to many inquirers, and to help those who are weak of faith.

THE CENTENARY MISSIONARY HYMNAL. Compiled and edited by Rev. Stanley Rogers. (J. Snow & Co. 1s.) This collection of hymns and tunes, consisting of over 130 pieces, specially adapted for missionary meetings, has been issued under the auspices of the London Missionary Society. Amongst the new tunes, some are sure to become popular; there are also many old favourites in the collection.

OUR WEDDING SOUVENIR. (Marcus Ward & Co., Ltd.) This elegant volume has been designed for the purpose of forming, by means of autographs, photographs, etc., a suitable record of what may be described as the most interesting and important event of life. Space is reserved for certificate of marriage, signatures, portraits, description of wedding tour, and photographs of scenes visited, etc. Carefully dealt with, the volume must prove a most interesting and valued memento. Like many another modern invention, we wish it had come to us years ago.

TEN YEARS IN MANCHURIA. A Story of Medical Mission Work in Moukden, 1883-1893. This is a striking little narrative by Dr. Dugald Christie, of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland Mission. Evangelisation and the art of healing have gone hand in hand, with results that are very encouraging. Among the illustrations is a portrait of General Tso, who was killed at the battle of Ping Yang in September last, of whom Dr. Christie says: "I have known him for over ten years. He will be missed by all Moukden, and by none more than the missionaries." (1s. J. & R. Parlane, Paisley.)

THE BEACON OF TRUTH; or, Testimony of the Coran to the Truth of the Christian Religion. Translated from the Arabic by Sir William Muir. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) Missionaries in Mohammedan countries will value this work, which should also prove of interest to students. In a useful introduction the venerable translator describes the work as follows:—"From beginning to end it is an argumentum ad hominem, from the conclusion of which it seems impossible for the believer in the Coran to escape. It is drawn with admirable power, and close familiarity with Moslem sentiment and dogma."

CENTRAL TRUTHS AND SIDE ISSUES. By Robert G. Balfour, minister of Free New North Church, Edinburgh. (3s. 6d. T. & T. Clark.) Here are some thoughtful theological discussions. The "Central Truths" of the Incarnation and Atonement of our Lord are lucidly expounded. While familiar with the various views held on these subjects, the writer maintains positions loyal to Holy Scripture in a manner calculated to command the respect of all intelligent readers. The "Side Issues" deal with the Sinai Covenant, the Resurrection of the Body, and Heb. vi. 1, 2. In the last-named study "the teaching of washings and laying-on of hands" is held to be in apposition to the preceding repentance and faith, and not to represent, as superficial readers are apt to conclude, fundamental points of Christian doctrine. These papers are all helpful in substance and reverent in tone.

MY BOOK RECORD (Marcus Ward & Co., Ltd.) In these days of miscellaneous reading, this new form of mental diary will be a boon to many. Few people keep any account of the books they read. Fewer still follow any settled plan in their reading. The selection of the literature they feed upon is mainly left to chance—the casual remark of a friend, the sight of a volume on a bookstall, or the stimulus of a brightly written review. This journal is meant to help to a more intelligent and sober mental habit. It is divided into three parts. The first part, "Books I Have Read," is a series of blank pages, with suggestive headlines and four columns, one for the title of books, another for their authors, a third for the dates when read, and a fourth for remarks on the part of the reader. The second, "Books I Wish to Read," gives spaces for entering the names of books recommended or desired to be read, with the names of the person or journal recommending them. The third, "Books Worth Reading," is devoted to a more or less carefully selected and classified list of some of the best books, with space left in each class for additions according to individual taste. There may be some difference of opinion as to the adequacy of this selection in detail, but the general outline is thoroughly comprehensive and satisfactory. We endorse the closing sentence of the brief preface: "For young people especially, a record such as this should in the course of time prove a valuable and interesting volume, as in most cases it will form not only a record of reading, but also a key or index to the formation and development of individual taste and character of mind." A most suitable present to a young friend of either sex.

AN ORDER OF SERVICE FOR YOUNG PEOPLE has been compiled by Rev. John Watson (minister) and T. Hague Kinsey (organist), of Sefton Park Presbyterian Church, Liverpool. (2d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

SONGS OF FAITH, HOPE, AND LOVE, by John Dickie, of Irvine, is a little book containing some choice poems, by one who communed with God upon the bed of affliction. (Leatherette, 6d.; cloth, 8d. John Ritchie, Kilmarnock.)

DISESTABLISHMENT: A Clergyman's Appeal for the Disestablishment and Disendowment of the Church of England. By Rev. Lucius G. Fay, M.A., vicar of St. James's, Upper Edmonton. This is a temperate pamphlet on a present-day subject. (2d. G. Stoneman.)

BOOKS RECEIVED.

From Edward Arnold.—THE RECOLLECTIONS OF DEAN BOYLE. (16s.)

From Cassell & Co.—THE PEOPLE'S LIFE OF THEIR QUEEN. Rev. E. J. Hardy, M.A. (1s.)

From Jarrold & Sons.—BEAUTIFUL JOE: THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A DOG. By Marshall Saunders. New Edition.

From Passmore & Alabaster.—LIFE-POWER; OR, CHARACTER, CULTURE, AND CONDUCT, by A. T. Pierson, D.D. (2s. 6d.); TWELVE SERMONS FOR THE TROUBLED AND TRIED, by C. H. Spurgeon (1s.).

THE BIBLE FOR ALBANIA.

DEAR SIR,—I have received from Constantinople some good news for Albania and her population of 1,500,000:—"After waiting in vain for about three years and a-half for permission to publish a new edition of the Albanian Psalms, during which time repeated but fruitless efforts were made through Her Majesty's Embassy to obtain the necessary sanction, a further petition was presented on Nov. 30, which has resulted in permission being granted by the Turkish Government not only to publish the Psalms, but the whole Bible in the Albanian language, and we hope also for others than the Bible Society to publish educational and religious literature as it may be required."

The Bible Lands Missions Aid Society has given very important assistance to educational and Gospel work in Albania; indeed, but for that help the interesting Girls' School in Koritza must have been closed. We hope that this forgotten corner of the Bible Lands, being the old region "round about unto Illyricum," whereunto St. Paul in his missionary tours had "fully preached the Gospel of Christ," may awaken the practical sympathies and secure the prayers of God's people.—Yours faithfully,

W. A. ESSERY, Hon. Sec.

SOCIAL QUESTIONS IN THE ORIENT.

THE campaign of special meetings addressed by Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell is being brought to a close by meetings held on Monday and Wednesday this week at Bradford and Sheffield, and finally by a great mass meeting to be held at Queen's Hall, Langham-place, W., on Friday evening, March 22. Lady Henry Somerset is expected to preside. Tickets of admission, price 1s. and 2s. each for numbered reserved seats, will be supplied by Mr. H. J. Osborn, 112, Fleet-street, E.C.

GIRLS' LETTER GUILD.—Miss A. M. May, 5, Herbert-terrace, Penarth, South Wales, writes:—"This guild has over 1700 girls on the books, of whom 150 are sadly needing lady friends. The greater proportion of these are 'chapel' girls, and some of them have been waiting many months. Will not some of your readers kindly help us, as many of them have already done in the past? A simple friendly letter once a month, is all that is asked; as a rule these letters are much appreciated."

MR. AND MRS. HERMANN WARSZAWIAK arrived in London last week, chiefly on account of private matters concerning their children. Mr. Warszawiak is at the Prophetic Convention now in session at Dublin, and hopes to hold some meetings in Scotland next week. On Saturday last he preached to the Jews in Mr. Wilkinson's Central Hall, Philpot-street, E., on Monday evening he spoke at Mr. Meyer's Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, and on Tuesday at the Mildmay Conference Hall. We bespeak for our brother a friendly reception wherever he may go. Communications to him may be addressed to the care of Miss Douglas, 1, Rosebery-crescent, Edinburgh.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

CAMBRIDGE.

ON Monday, February 11, the annual meeting of the London Society for Promoting Christianity Among the Jews, (Cambridge branch) was held in the Henry Martyn Hall, Canon Perowne presiding. After the secretary had given a brief review of the past year's work, which he said had been marked by distinct progress, Rev. J. Denman addressed the meeting.

On Thursday the annual meeting of the Band of Hope Union was held, when Rev. J. T. Hallowes gave the address.

The speaker at the weekly meeting of the C.M.U. on Friday last, was Mr. A. Le Feuvre, who gave an account of the work done at the mission station of Nuddea, in Bengal.

The Bible reading in the Henry Martyn Hall, on Sunday morning, was given by Dr. Anderson, who may always be sure of a hearty welcome up here. He also gave the address at the Gospel meeting in the Alexandra Hall in the evening.

OXFORD.

THE anniversary of the Oxford Y.M.C.A. was held last Monday in the large Examination School, and proved, as in former years, a very successful gathering. It was largely attended, and addressed by Sir William Markby and that able Y.M.C.A. worker who is now known as the Rev. E. J. Kennedy, who is always so welcome and valued at such meetings.

The Y.M.C.A. has issued a most interesting report of the past year's work. It has a largely-attended P.S.A., which is conducted on safe lines and is being blessed of God, while the weekly Bible-class attracts another good gathering of men. The intellectual and social work is strong and good, and as long as it is kept clearly subordinate to the spiritual, it will prove a valuable adjunct. The membership is large and representative, and the Association is proving a much-needed and very admirable rallying point for the Evangelical churches of the city.

The Rev. Ll. Lloyd, who was here for the C.M.S. Anniversary, continued some days in the city and neighbourhood, addressing college and other meetings, with very great acceptance and profit to those present.

The Principal of Wycliffe Hall preached a very faithful and outspoken sermon on Sunday on the subject of "Confession of Sin," in which he dealt very plainly with the practice of auricular confession, and showed its unscriptural and dangerous character. Many will rejoice at such a refreshing testimony.

MR. LANE'S LANTERN.—Rev. F. B. Meyer desires to thank those who have contributed to this fund. It is now closed, as the required amount of £60 has been raised. Mr. Lane has been greatly gratified with this manifestation of affection by many friends.

AN IMPORTANT MISSIONARY MEETING will be held in the City Temple on Saturday afternoon, February 23, when addresses will be delivered by Rev. R. P. Ashe (colleague of Bishop Hannington, and Mackay), of Uganda, Rev. James Chalmers, of New Guinea, and Rev. A. E. Scrivener, of Congo. The chair will be taken by Mr. Alfred H. Baynes (secretary B.M.S.), at 3 p.m. Tickets may be obtained from the Young Men's Missionary Association, 19, Furnival-street, Holborn.

THE FALL OF PORT ARTHUR.—In The Chinese Recorder and Missionary Journal for January, Rev. S. I. Woodbridge, of the Southern Presbyterian Mission, points some of the lessons derived from the fall of Port Arthur. He says, "What splendid and powerfully defended fortress, to conquer which the French Admiral Courbet declared would require so many warships and men, with so much time. Port Arthur, the Gibraltar of the East, and the key to the capital of China, has been taken by the Japanese after thirty-six hours' fighting! Contemporaneous with the missionaries of peace, the agents of war have been at work in China. Foreign firms have sold to this eager Government millions of dollars' worth of muskets, cannon, torpedoes, and other engines of destruction on the most approved modern style. These missionaries of war have enjoyed the high favour of the mandarins, and from the viewpoint of the world have had the fairest chance of success. And yet the result is that China's superb fleet has been thoroughly beaten, and her strongholds captured by one of the weakest nations on the earth. The world will, perhaps, never hear of the great failure of war missionaries in China, but the fact, nevertheless, remains that the enormous sums expended for ships, fortifications, and such like have been hopelessly lost. These sums will far exceed in amount the total of that spent by the Church for the evangelisation of the country."

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Professor Fergus Fergusson, of Glasgow, will attain his ministerial jubilee next April, and is to be presented with a public testimonial.

A Protestant Congress has been held in Inverness, the chief speakers being Mr. Paterson, of the Scottish Reformation Society, and Dr. McEwen, of Edinburgh.

During the storm of Feb. 6, the Mary Bella, of Wick, went down two miles or so off Freswick, with the nine brave fellows composing her crew. Six of them were married and have left widows and families.

The results of the revival in Dunlop, Ayrshire, continue to be seen in the large attendances at prayer-meetings, Y.M.C.A. and Christian Endeavour meetings, and the work of instructing and building up the young converts proceeds very hopefully.

The Roman Catholics have again sued Mr. W. Quarrier, of Glasgow, for the possession this time of three children whose father was at one time a Romanist, but who died leaving the children in charge of the mother, a Protestant, to be trained as she saw best.

It will be remembered that some time ago an experiment in the "Tyson Cure" for the drink habit was made at Dundee on some seventeen test cases. The committee now report that, out of these cases dealt with, only four appear to have stood firm against further temptation. The committee have found fresh proof of the difficulty of permanent reclamation where no moral change accompanies the treatment.

The prolonged frost and intense cold have thrown thousands of men out of work in Glasgow and on the Clyde, and much distress prevails. The Lord Provost and magistrates issued an appeal for money to meet this emergency, and in three days £6678 had been sent in to the City Chamberlain. Soup kitchens on a large scale have been organised, among other places the Tent Hall of the Evangelistic Association being utilised for the purpose. The police are provided with tickets for provisions to give to any needy person. The police muster halls are open day and night, with huge fires burning for anyone to sit by; and coals have been distributed. Work has been provided for men, and besides all this there has been much generous private charity. One gentleman gave £10 to supply milk-boys in the early morning with hot coffee at the Park gates. It has been a gratifying fact that many of the police-constables had been, out of their own pockets, relieving necessitous cases before this scheme was organised. The prompt action of the Lord Provost has given general satisfaction.

The local authorities in Edinburgh, Dundee, and Aberdeen are also making strenuous efforts to meet the distress among the poor.

IRISH NOTES.

An Irish Methodist has given anonymously £500 to the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society, towards the extinction of the Society's present debt.

The Cork Presbyterians who have been actively engaged in aggressive work for some time back, are about to open this month a new church in the famous village of Blarney, about ten miles from Cork.

Rev. Thos. Connellan, of Dublin, addressed a largely attended meeting under the auspices of the local United Protestant Young Men's Association, in the Tontine Rooms, Armagh, on Friday night, and was accorded a hearty reception.

Mr. Lucas and a band of boys and girls from the Elim and Olivet Homes, Belfast, have been visiting Cork, Tralee, Waterford, Wexford, and other towns and cities in the South of Ireland, and have met with great success and much encouragement.

Mr. Wm. Crawford, of Mount Randal, whose father-in-law, the late Rev. Professor Glasgow, D.D., had been an Indian missionary for several years, has given a donation of £1000 to the Irish Presbyterian Mission Board, towards the erection of mission buildings in India and China.

A conference in connection with the International University Christian Union was recently held in Dublin. Some exceedingly interesting reports of college work were given, and practical addresses on home and foreign missions were delivered. The conference is expected to give a great stimulus to the work of the Union in Ireland.

Death has been very busy during the past week in the ranks of the senior Presbyterian ministers in this country, and, as the result, the following have been called away:—Rev. Geo. Hanson, minister of the second Ballylennon congregation, and father of the Strabane Presbytery, aged 89 years; H. R. Mecredy, senior minister of Killean, co. Antrim; John Dewart, senior minister of Ballymote, co. Sligo; and John Monteith, senior minister of Donemana, co. Donegal, who died in Jersey.

Rev. A. W. Prautch is returning to London after a month of enthusiastic anti-opium meetings in Ireland. Meetings were held in Belfast, Dublin, Cork, Bandon, Omagh, Bessbrook, Ballymoney, Coleraine, Londonderry, Armagh, Knock, Portadown, Lurgan, and Newry, at all of which the Royal Opium Commission evidence and the confidential circulars that shaped the inquiry were fully dealt with from the Blue-books, and strong resolutions were passed condemning the opium traffic. Mr. Prautch also took part in the temperance meetings at the thirty-seventh anniversary of the Irish Temperance League at Belfast, and preached the Gospel on Sundays in various churches in Belfast, to 3000 persons in the Ulster Hall, each of the two Sundays he was there.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The Duke and Duchess of Teck will be present at Exeter Hall on March 16, when Mr. F. C. Selous gives a lecture.

At the general meeting of the Beauly, N.B., Association Rev. J. R. Macrae presided, and an encouraging report was submitted.

An interesting meeting at the Epsom Y.M.C.A., of which Mr. Basil Braithwaite is president, was addressed by Mr. Geo. Holmes on the 12th inst.

The work of the three Central London Y.M.C.A.s—Exeter Hall, Aldersgate-street, and Cornhill—has been amalgamated, and will henceforth be under the direction of one United Central Committee.

Through the generosity and effort of Mr. Theo. H. Davies, J.P., a debt of £150 has been cleared from the Southport Y.M.C.A., and the work is now being conducted with renewed zeal and fervour.

The grave news to hand concerning the situation of the Christians at Beyrout and Damascus is causing some anxiety on behalf of the members of the Y.M.C.A.'s in those cities, and prayer is requested that the work among young men, which is making steady headway there, may not be hindered by the fanaticism of the Moslems.

The Pleasant Saturday Nights for Young Men at Exeter Hall are proving a great success. The Bishop of Sodor and Man was the speaker last Saturday, while next Saturday the address will be given by the Bishop of Chester. Among the speakers announced for March are Archdeacon Farrar and Canon McCormick.

Mr. R. D. Pringle, the new general secretary for the Bombay Y.M.C.A., arrived in Bombay on January 20. A public meeting to welcome him was held at Apollo Bunder. Mr. Conder, the president of the Bombay Y.M.C.A., who was in the chair, expressed the hope that the new secretary would get more of the members to take part in Christian work.

In spite of inclement weather, the annual meeting of the Exmouth Association was well attended. The chair was occupied by Mr. R. Tucker-Pain. Mr. Griffith (hon. sec.) read the annual report, detailing much good work accomplished. Addresses were delivered by Rev. J. G. Danzar, D.D., Principal of Exeter Training College, Rev. G. C. Williamson, and Mr. W. H. Roberts. Mrs. Tucker-Pain also delivered a most practical and telling address.

The annual meeting of the Inverness Association was held on Tuesday week. Mr. George Walker presided. Mr. A. Urquhart read the report. During the past year forty-one new names had been added to the roll. The numbers on the roll at present were: members, 115; associates, 30. The report dealt with the several branches of the work, and the encouraging progress in each.

A three days' sale of work has been held in connection with the Nottingham Association, by which a sum of £250 was raised towards clearing off a long-standing deficit. This Y.M.C.A. reports that during the past year ninety-nine mission halls in connection with various Evangelical churches have been supplied with workers from the Association to the number of no fewer than 400 young men.

At a public meeting called in Helmingham Parish Room by Rev. E. B. Backhouse, for the purpose of forming a branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, thirty men attended, including deputations from Framsden and Pettaugh. This is the third fresh Association that has been formed in the Eastern Counties' district within the last six months, the two others being Stowmarket and Felixstowe.

HOPE MISSION (Nelson-square, S.E.) has for the past year been a centre of work amongst the poorest of Southwark. A Gospel service, mothers' meeting, Band of Hope, and sewing class for girls are held weekly. The chief aim is to win the people for Christ, but their bodily wants must be attended to. Hope Mission has already supplied many distressed families with food, coals, etc., as far as funds would allow, but these being exhausted help is wanted.

(Miss) Annie Martin.

THE Y.W.C.A.

EMPLOYMENT AGENCY.

The Y.W.C.A. Employment Agency Department has grown during the past year; 3726 employers and 6327 seeking situations have used the General Employment Agency at 16A, Old Cavendish-street. A large number of these were suited, fifty-three needy cases were helped, and sixty-nine joined the "Scattered Members' Branch," which Miss A. Gough carries on in connection with the Agency. Thrift is inculcated, and many have been induced to use the Post Office Savings Bank. A real spiritual work is being done, and as far as possible Miss Gough endeavours to keep in touch with those who have used the Agency and become "Scattered Members." The Business Employment Agency at 316, Regent-street, was used during the year by 425 employers and 1726 seeking situations.

BRIEF NOTES.

The Wishaw Y.W.C.A. held their annual social meeting on February 15. There was a large and enthusiastic meeting, presided over by Mr. Gibson. The speakers were Provost Colville, Miss Todd, Miss Walker, and Mr. W. M. Oatts. The membership of the Association is now 103.

A proposal is under consideration to place the Welbeck Home and Institute, 101, Mortimer-street, under the Central Institute and Morley Halls Committee. The arrangement is to be made for about a year. As the "Welbeck" communicates with the Morley Halls, 316, Regent-street, it is hoped that the experiment will lead to increased efficiency.

This being the Week of Prayer for Young Women, special meetings are being held at most Y.W.C.A. centres, and a number of London clergy and ministers have promised their co-operation by preaching appropriate sermons or asking the united prayers of their congregations. Those responsible for the various divisions of the Y.W.C.A. will be grateful for the prayers of Christians on behalf of the work.

The interesting branch at Nazareth has thirty members, including the lady teachers of the orphanage. They had a happy meeting at Christmas time, when the year's motto cards were given to each. The winter in Galilee is enlivened by bright sunshine, and though snow lies on the ground, cyclamens and anemones are beginning to appear. Dr. Vartan has gathered together some of the young men, with a view to re-form the Y.M.C.A.

The annual tea and meeting of the Highbury Institute was held on the 14th inst., at 17, Aubert Park. Mr. D. Marshall Lang read the report, which showed steady progress in all departments. The treasurer's statement was satisfactory, the Institute being free of debt, Hon. E. Kinnaird gave a helpful address on our life being a song (harmony), also a chorus (members one of another). Col. Wroughton spoke briefly, after which Mr. W. T. Paton (chairman) gave a few cheering earnest words exhorting to more prayer and study of God's Word. Miss Dodd expressed her desire that in the year 1895 members might be more and do more for God.

THE LADY MISSIONARIES' TRAINING HOME, 15, Burnbank-gardens, Glasgow, is intended for Christian young women of any Evangelical denomination desirous of becoming missionaries at home or abroad (preferentially the latter), and who, in view of this, wish one or two years' Biblical instruction, with some experience in evangelistic work, also some simple medical knowledge, which may prove serviceable, very specially in the foreign field. During the past two years there have been resident in the Home twenty-five students. In addition to the Bible Lectures delivered in the Home, the students have had the privilege of attending the evening lectures given in the Christian Institute by Mr. Anderson, Principal of the Bible Training Institute, and by Mr. W. A. Campbell. The secretary of the Home is Mrs. Paton, Mar's Hill House, Alloa.

VILLAGE MISSIONS.—The Hackney Y.M.C.A. Village Missionary Society reports that during the year the members have visited from house to house distributing tracts and speaking personally to the inhabitants in some seventy-one villages, with a total population of about 13,000; also holding open-air meetings in the most prominent part of the village. They have also held fifteen open-air services in small towns or large villages through which they have passed, and have distributed about 30,000 tracts. There is very considerable scope for such efforts among the rural population within a radius of fifty miles of London. In many places the villages are left entirely to themselves, and receive no visit of a religious character from one year's end to another. The darkness is indeed dense, and, strange as it may seem, thousands of our fellow countrymen live and also die in utter ignorance of the simplest truths of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The secretary is Mr. R. Nash, 48, Navarino-road, N.E.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Brynmawr.—A month's mission is in progress here, the evangelist being Mr. G. Coultas; there has been a considerable awakening as the result.

Mr. Thomas Payne, evangelist, returned to England on Wednesday last week, after holding meetings in different parts of the United States.

Mr. W. Grove is holding a Gospel Mission at Malden Hall, Kentish Town, and the Lord is graciously putting his seal of approval on the word spoken night by night.

Rev. R. Balgarnie's mission at Ramsden-street Chapel, Huddersfield, was continued over last Sunday. It was well attended throughout, and has been made a blessing to many who have resolved to follow Christ. The next mission begins at Clifton, Bristol, on the 23rd inst.

Mrs. Baeyertz concluded on Thursday a series of evangelistic meetings in Kilmarnock. Her visit excited extraordinary interest, the Grange Free Church being quite filled each afternoon, notwithstanding the severity of the weather, and hundreds being unable to obtain admission to the evening meetings.

Mr. D. L. Moody, en route for Texas, paid a short visit to St. Louis, and conducted several evangelistic services. The grand Music Hall of the Exposition Building was crowded with eager congregations, to whom Mr. Moody preached with his wonted freshness and power. It is fifteen years since he laboured last in St. Louis.

Witheridge, North Devon.—The Congregational church of Witheridge and Puddington is greatly indebted to Rev. S. J. Whitmee, of Glasgow, for his services in the fortnight's special mission conducted by him. As a result several have confessed decision for Christ, and the spiritual life and activity of the church has been deepened and quickened.

Mr. John Cook, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a successful fifteen days' mission in the Wesleyan chapel at Whatlington, Sussex. The week-evening services were well attended, and were of a most earnest and hearty character. Many young men have professed a knowledge of the Saviour, and great blessing has been received by all.

Conference Hall, Eccleston-street.—Sunday, Feb. 17, brought a week's mission, conducted by Gipsy Smith, to a close. This servant of Christ delivered the Gospel message with great clearness and faithfulness. Some few have been brought under conviction of sin, and others found rest at Jesus' feet. The meetings have been fairly well attended considering the severity of the weather.

Ireland.—Successful evangelistic services have been held in Tandragee Methodist Church by Miss Wakefield, of Cloncore House, Portadown; similar meetings have been held in the Presbyterian Church, Magherafelt, by Rev. D. Gillespie and others. The Gospel meetings held by Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, in Sackville Hall, Dublin, closed last week, and it is believed much good has been done, and that several persons were led to decide for Christ.

Mr. James Macfarlane has held in Gilcomston Park Baptist Church, Aberdeen, a very successful mission, during which many profess to have been saved. The meetings commenced on January 13; the attendance, which was good from the beginning, increased every night. On the last Sunday of the mission the church was crowded. Mr. Macfarlane is an able and earnest preacher of the Gospel; he has also the gift of song. He is now conducting a mission in Fraserburgh.

Mr. Charles Inglis has been holding a successful mission at Highgate Hall during the last fortnight. Large numbers have attended the afternoon Bible-readings, and God's people have been greatly refreshed and stimulated. The evening meetings have not only been deeply interesting, but night after night anxious ones have been dealt with, and some have come out on the Lord's side. Mr. Inglis is speaking this week in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin. On Sunday next he takes the services at Westbourne Grove Baptist Chapel.

Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, has just concluded a fortnight's evangelistic mission in the Hall of the Presbyterian Young Men's Christian Association, Dublin. Many of the workers who helped during the memorable visit of Rev. John McNeill were to be seen working in the meetings, and it is believed that a considerable number have, under the stirring and earnest appeals of the preacher, been led to a saving knowledge of Christ. During the inquiry meetings in the large hall, the young men were invited to an after-meeting in a smaller room, where Mr. William Boyd, the secretary of the Dublin Y.M.C.A., and other friends dealt with them. It is prayerfully hoped that much blessing may follow this special effort among the people of Dublin.

Mr. Richard Weaver has been conducting a special evangelistic mission at the Baptist Tabernacle, Linton-road, Barking, E. The mission commenced on Sunday, February 3, and continued till Friday, February 15. Many will remember with pleasure and profit Mr. Weaver's visit. The very severe weather prevented the very large gatherings we were anticipating, notwithstanding the attendance was good, and the Lord blessed the word to the unsaved, the backslider, and his own people. A backslider last Sunday morning was restored, and he never rested until he brought his brother to the meeting, and on Friday night, to the feet of Jesus. It was a happy sight to see them both weeping for joy together. Mr. Weaver has not been in robust health, but God has sustained him in a wonderful way at the meetings. We thank God for his visit, and his bold testimony for the truth. D. H. Moore.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. Dr. Maclaren, who has been feeling the need of rest for some time, is about to leave work and people, for a season, in order to seek restoration of health in a more genial clime.

Rev. B. Baring-Gould has returned to England, having been visiting the missions connected with the department over which he will now preside at Salisbury-square. He has seen all the missionaries, and will now be able to communicate with them as a friend rather than as an official.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.—Rev. W. A. Meaton, Deputation Secretary, 2, Newton-avenue, Acton, W., will be glad to receive invitations to preach, lecture, or to address Sunday-schools, on behalf of destitute children, anywhere in England or Wales. He is unable now to conduct general evangelistic missions.

Mr. Henry Varley writes from Melbourne, on January 14, informing us of his arrival there. He speaks of the magnificent weather prevailing there as a grateful change from the cold and fogs of an English winter. He promises some contributions as to the present social and religious situation in Australia and the causes of the commercial depression.

Mr. W. J. Orsman, feeling that the work of the Costermongers' Mission demands all his strength, has decided not to seek re-election to the London County Council. He has been a member of the L.C.C. for six years, and the reason for retirement is the strain of attending to the various departments and committees, as well as superintending the work and preaching on Sundays at Costers' Hall. This has proved too heavy, so that rest is needed to prevent a complete breakdown.

OBITUARY.

MR. J. D. MOYSEY.

Many in the west of England will learn with true sorrow of the passing away of an old and faithful servant of the Lord, Mr. J. D. Moysey, of Venton, near Totnes. For very many years Mr. Moysey has been well known as a large-hearted Christian, whose pleasant quiet home was always open to the Lord's people. Many wearied workers found the stay at Venton a time of true rest to body and mind. The aged servant of God fell asleep on the 14th inst. at the age of eighty. He will be missed by many, Another of the old familiar faces will be no more seen among the Friends of Exeter, where he was so well known. W. S.

MISS ANNIE L. CASH.

At Pau, where she had resided for some years, on February 2, Miss Cash, of Dorking, known as an earnest worker for Christ, entered into rest. Although a confirmed invalid for many years, her beautiful unselfishness made it impossible to realise that the joyous presence which made the sunshine of her home was held by so frail a tenure. In a recent number of The Christian, there was an interesting sketch of a work in which she was engaged, in unison with a devoted friend, that of a Bible-class consisting of the maids who are in attendance each winter upon the ladies residing at Pau. This meeting was continued to the last week of her valuable life.

MR. W. H. MILLAR.

Yet another serious loss has fallen on the Sunday School Union, following the deaths of Rev. S. H. Yates and Mr. J. E. Tresidder. Mr. William Henry Millar died suddenly last week. He joined the Sunday School Union Council in 1869, and for a number of years rendered excellent service as secretary to the Continental committee, and as deputation to country conferences. When an alteration was made in the secretariat of the Union, Mr. Millar was elected honorary secretary of foreign missions. He was sixty-three years old. The funeral service, held on Friday in New Park-road Chapel, Brixton Hill, S.W., was attended by many sorrowing friends.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Mr. Matthew Burnett closed a series of Gospel temperance meetings at Cottenham, Cambs., on Sabbath evening last.

The Bath Temperance Association has held its annual meeting with encouraging reports and a stirring address from Canon Fleming.

Alderman W. D. Stephens, J.P., has been elected president of the Newcastle and Gateshead Band of Hope Union, which has now 32,820 members.

Lady Aberdare, at last week's meeting of the women's union of the C.E.T.S., spoke out strongly on the spread of intemperance among women.

The Army Temperance Association reports that the secretary has been visiting the troops at many of the stations, and the work is steadily developing.

Branches of the Methodist Women's Temperance Union have been established under hopeful auspices in Brighton-road and Charleston-road, Dublin, and in Arklow and Ringsend.

Miss Willard is expected in England in May to complete arrangements with the B.W.T.A. for the reception of foreign delegates, who are expected to attend the World's W.C.T.U. biennial gathering in June, and to make arrangements for the council.

The National Temperance Hospital, in Chicago, has just closed a very prosperous year. 165 patients have been received during the year, including 107 females and fifty-eight males. 179 surgical operations were performed, some of them severe.—Voice.

The Russian Minister of Finance intends shortly to relieve Russian alcoholic spirits destined for export to Asia from payment of excise duty, a step due to the keen competition which exists between Russian and foreign distillers in the supply of spirits to Asiatic markets.

The Nonconformist Musical Journal for February contains a portrait and sketch of Miss Helen Saunders, who is a life-abstainer, and "though very busy during the week is very faithful to her church (Wesleyan), and on Sunday devotes herself with enthusiasm to Sunday-school work."

Under the auspices of the B.W.T.A. a public conference of workers and friends was held on Tuesday last week in Union Chapel, Islington, in connection with the reception of Mr. E. Tennyson Smith, lately returned from Australia. Mr. Smith gave an address on "Women's Work for Temperance." A tea and reception was followed by a public meeting in the chapel.

The Total Abstinence Society in connection with the Dublin Post Office now numbers over one hundred members. At a large meeting of the society held this month, the chair was occupied by the president, Mr. S. S. M'Curry, and an earnest, stirring address was delivered by Mr. S. M'Comas, whose name is largely associated with all temperance work going on in the city.

The Sheffield Gospel Temperance Union has just concluded a most successful mission. During last week the Great Albert Hall was crowded each evening and a large number of pledges were taken each night. The Dean of Hereford, Canon Barker, Rev. T. J. Madden, Mrs. Servanté, and other well-known temperance speakers took part in the mission, which was carried on on Gospel lines.

The number of houses licensed (says Mr. John Barnsley) for the sale of intoxicating drinks in Birmingham is 2334—that is one public-house for every 2000 of the inhabitants, including women and children. 8000 people last year passed through the borough gaol; 3000 people were brought before the magistrates for drunkenness, and of this number 800 were women; 1997 little children were found homeless last year in the streets of Birmingham.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION has arranged for another of its annual tours to Rome, which are intended mainly for the benefit of Sunday-school teachers and other Christian workers. The excursion will take place in March, and will include visits to Paris, Genoa, Rome, Venice, Florence, Lucerne, and Brussels. It will extend over a period of sixteen days, and the total cost will be £18. Under the personal guidance of Dr. Russell Forbes, the excursionists will spend two days in visiting the places of historical and classical interest in the Eternal City.

TOWER HAMLETS MISSION.—As there are many people who are anxious to help the unemployed in this terrible time of distress without pauperising them, allow me to say that an opportunity now presents itself. Our Great Assembly Hall has never been whitewashed or painted since it was built, nearly ten years ago. We now propose to put on painters at once to do this most necessary work if the charitable public will send us the needful funds. This will give immediate employment to a goodly number of one of the most destitute class of workmen at this season in East London.

Fredk. N. Charrington.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Worcester has returned to England from the Continent in greatly improved health.

Rev. F. B. Tyrer, an able and capable Evangelical, has been appointed Rural Dean of Walton, Liverpool.

Archdeacon Farrar has promised to preach in May next the annual sermon on behalf of the Young Men's Society.

The Bishop of Rochester has had a return of his former ailment, and has been compelled to cancel his engagements.

Dean Lefroy has been addressing various large meetings in Liverpool on behalf of the Church Parochial Aid Society.

The vicar of Burnham, Prebendary Dupuis, has for a few weeks exchanged duty with Rev. H. G. Thwaites, of the Look Chapel, London.

The Haberdashers' Company have appointed Rev. A. Boyd Carpenter, rector of St. George's, Bloomsbury, to the vacant Golden lectureship.

The latest letters from Bishop Tugwell show him pushing his way into remote parts, and finding the work making steady progress on all hands.

The annual report of work on the Mackenzie River shows much earnest and faithful work in the face of many difficulties, yet with many good results.

The Bishop of Liverpool will preach in St. Paul's, Onslow-square, S.W., on Sunday, at 11 a.m. Prebendary Webb Peploe will preach as usual in the evening.

Rev. H. Sutton has visited Exeter, addressing a large company of C.M.S. friends at the annual tea, a gathering of clergy at Rev. J. F. Sheldon's breakfast, and a large meeting the following day.

Rev. J. R. Vernon, the writer of "The Harvest of a Quiet Life," has been appointed Prebendary in Wells Cathedral. Mr. Vernon is rector of St. Audries, a lovely spot on the North Somerset coast.

At St. Margaret's, Lothbury, E.C. (lent by Canon Ingram for the purpose), a short mid-day service was held on Friday in aid of the North-Eastern Hospital for Children, Hackney-road, Shoreditch, when Canon Scott-Holland preached on the subject of sin in connection with disease, taking his text from John ix. 1, 2, 3.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. John Peill has held a ten days mission at Burmantofts, Leeds.

A week's united mission is about to be undertaken by the churches in and around Wigan.

A branch mission church has been formed at Strood Institute in connection with Rochester Church.

Park-hill Church, Nottingham, reports an addition of 21 new members during the past year. The Sunday-school has nearly 300 scholars.

At Chase-side, Enfield, a good work is being done among the poorer labouring classes, who are beginning to resort to the neighbourhood.

London-road Church, Derby, reports an increase in membership of over forty. The associated mission church at Osmanton is prospering.

The mission which has been conducted at Dorman's-lane, Sussex, for some time by the Wesleyans, has been taken over by Moat Church, East Grinstead.

Rev. A. H. Cullen has been recognised as pastor at Heaton Mersey, Rev. Stephen Hooper, the former pastor, who has resigned after fifty years' ministry, presiding.

Rev. J. and Mrs. Parker, owing to the present unsettled condition of North China, have been requested by the London Missionary Society to visit Australasia.

Lancaster-road Church, Preston, reports a membership of 213. The P.S.A. in connection with the church has more than doubled its membership, being now over 300.

The Mayor, who is senior deacon, presided at the annual meeting at Victoria-street, Derby. The report showed that 61 members had been added during the year, a net gain of 20, making the present number on the roll 682.

Rev. Colmer B. Symes, of Leytonstone, who is on a voyage to the Cape for the restoration of his health, has written home to the effect that he is now making good progress towards recovery. He purposes staying a fortnight at Madeira on his way home, and hopes to be able to resume his ministry on the second Sunday in March.

The work at Finsbury Park, under the leadership of Rev. J. H. Parsons, is in a healthy and vigorous condition. The membership now stands at 642; 107 joined during the year. The pastor's Bible-class has a roll of 400 members. In the Sunday-school there are fifty teachers and 835 scholars. Two houses have been secured for Sunday-school and mission work. Five young men of the church are now students for the ministry. A Biblewoman is engaged for house-to-house visiting in the neighbourhood.

Calls.—Rev. Magnus F. Peterson, to Clarendon Park, Leicester; Rev. A. C. Tuberville, of Huddersfield, to Cheltenham; Mr. W. Cousins, to Ossett.

Resignations.—Rev. J. C. Neil, of Mearns-street, Greenock; Rev. W. Young, of Soham.

BAPTIST.

Rev. I. L. Near, of March, lies dangerously ill.

By arrangement with Dr. Booth, Rev. F. C. Spurr will continue to conduct the services at Maze-pond Chapel, Old Kent-road, until the middle of July.

Highbury-hill Church reports fifty new members added during the past year, a total increase of 100 during the present pastorate of a little more than two years.

Rev. J. Fletcher has celebrated his twenty-first anniversary as pastor at Commercial-road Chapel, E. The church has 295 members, and its organisations are in good condition.

The new chapel erected at Woodborough-road, Nottingham, has been opened. It is a handsome and spacious edifice, which has cost about £5000, and will seat 1000.

The church at Kettering have purchased a site on the Rockingham-road, near to their present mission-rooms, for a new chapel. This part of the town is extending rapidly.

Wood Green Church reports thirty-nine received into fellowship during the past year, making a total of 622 additions during the present ministry. The number at present on the church-roll is 341.

At Blenheim Chapel, Leeds, the weekly offering has been substituted for the old pew-rent system; nevertheless, the Manual reports that during the year the contributions have amounted to £1019.

With the aid of the energetic friends at Barking Tabernacle a new work has been commenced at East Ham, and an iron chapel has been opened. Already Bible-classes and similar agencies have been formed.

A meeting in connection with the Young Men's Missionary Association will be held in the City Temple, on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 23, when addresses will be delivered by Revs. R. P. Ashe, of Uganda; James Chalmers, of New Guinea; and A. E. Scrivener, of Congo.

In connection with the Strict Baptist Mission a dedicatory service was held at Keppel-street Chapel, Russell-square, last week, the occasion being the appointment of Mr. Samuel Hutchinson as superintendent of the mission, and of Mr. Ernest A. Booth as missionary to India.

Clarendon Hall, Leicester, seating 1000 persons, was opened on Thursday, Feb. 7. Rev. J. G. Greenhough preached in the afternoon. In the evening a public meeting was held, under the presidency of Mr. F. W. N. Lloyd. Addresses were delivered by Revs. W. Y. Fullerton, J. Thew, and G. D. Hooper, also the Mayor of Leicester and Mr. J. Wallis Goddard. The pastor is Rev. Frederick J. Feltham, who was formerly at Luton. There are now 105 members belonging to this new church.

Calls.—Rev. Hugh Rodger, of Bromley Common, to St. Leonards; Mr. J. W. Padfield, to Cheddar.

Resignations.—Rev. G. H. Caor, of Park-road, Bromley; Rev. R. S. Latimer, of Colne (in six months).

METHODIST.

New chapels have been opened at Burn, near Selby, and Trallwn.

New chapels are about to be built at Carnkie, Helston, Swinton, and Sidcup.

Miss Julia Ashford has concluded an eleven days' mission at Kirton-in-Lindsey.

A Bible woman is to be engaged to assist Rev. J. Flanagan in his mission work at Trinity Chapel, Southwark.

The Hull Mission is feeding the hungry. Soup kitchens have been started, and also breakfasts to the children.

Miss Brennan has conducted a mission at Victoria-street, Burton-on-Trent, and is about to commence another at Wirksworth.

Revs. Mark Guy Pearse, John Pickup, and Mr. Josiah Nix have paid a visit to the Manchester Mission, to preach and lecture on Methodist Missions.

Six young men and women belonging to the Joyful News Mission have intimated their willingness to go to Africa, China, and India, for mission service.

A series of successful evangelistic services has been conducted at Winsford by Mrs. Barker. A large number have intimated their desire to become church members.

Rev. Thomas Cook records that there were 1250 inquirers at the five missions conducted by him in New South Wales. He intended having a few weeks' rest in New Zealand before recommencing work at Auckland on January 20, and he expects to remain in New Zealand till the end of March.

Rev. P. L. Wiseman, speaking at the annual meeting of the Gravel-lane Mission, Manchester, said it was the duty of the Churches to provide for their own sick and poor. The churches should have a place of their own, where these could pass their declining years in peace, and not one of them be left to the workhouse.

The annual report of the Leeds Central Mission states that Wesley Chapel is crowded week by week, and large numbers have frequently been turned away unable to obtain admission. This has been accomplished without resorting to anything approaching to sensationalism. The present membership of the mission is 659, with 197 on trial, being a net increase of seventy-three upon the year.

Not only among the Primitive Methodists, but throughout the churches, much sympathy will be felt with Rev. Samuel Harry, of Guernsey, who, in consequence of performing a wedding service in his house without the presence of a registrar, has, it seems, incurred a penalty of six months' imprisonment. No less than ten magistrates heard the case, but though only four voted in favour of six months' imprisonment Mr. Harry was sentenced to that term. The matter is before the law officers of the Crown. Even if Mr. Harry was not sufficiently careful in making due inquiries before he performed the ceremony, the punishment is out of all proportion to the offence.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The new church at Bromley, Kent, is nearing completion.

St. Andrew's Church, Bolton, reports the addition of thirty-eight members during the year.

Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson inaugurated, on Sunday week, a series of addresses to young people in Trinity Church, Newcastle.

Rev. Dr. Thornton's church at Camden-road reports a membership of 640 (including 217 mission members), an increase of sixty during the year.

The wholesale clearances in Somers Town have had the effect of reducing the membership of Rev. Z. B. Woffendale's church from 755 to 687. The Sunday-school has a membership of 693.

Rev. Dr. McGaw, owing to indisposition occasioned by the severe cold weather during his journey from London to Manchester, was prevented from preaching the anniversary sermons of his old congregation at Sale.

Calls.—Rev. John Huey, of Trinity, Manchester, to Londonderry; Rev. John Williams, to Princes-road, Liverpool; Rev. L. Pugh Lewis, of Dolgelly, to Neath; Rev. R. Macpherson, of Yetholm, to Trinity Free, Glasgow.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Robert J. and Mary Jane Davidson have just arrived in London from Chung-King, after nine or ten years' residence there; their furlough is well earned.

Dr. R. Hingston Fox, of London, thinks "the news is to be regarded with discredit" about the rising of the Druses on Mount Lebanon—and is "probably manufactured for some party purpose."

For the last six months the Meeting House in Belfast has been under renovation and enlargement. On the 18th inst., a happy re-opening was made; Elias H. Bell, Forster Green, and other Friends took an interesting part therein.

At a Mission held last week in Folkestone by Wm. Hobson, London local Friends gave a free tea nightly to a goodly number of the out of work poor. Gratitude was manifest in many faces, and the Gospel message seemed to be heartily received by many. Practical religion was thus illustrated, and the cause of truth promoted.

Last week's Friend says in reference to the previous Home Mission Committee meeting:—"An interesting discussion took place at the suggestion of John Fyfe Stewart respecting the manifest opening at the present time for the spread of the Christian principles of Friends, and our duty as a Church to let our light shine so that many whose minds are seeking rest from the burden of ritualism, and the uncertainties of negative criticism, may find a spiritual home in a Church which emphasises the privileges of individual communion with God without the intervention of priestcraft, and which upholds in practical life and worship the government and guidance of the Holy Spirit."

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The newest departure in the social work of the Army is the provision of a home for working boys, which is about to be opened in the City of London.

General Booth, on Wednesday week, formulated before a meeting in Ottawa, at which there were present the Governor-General, the Cabinet Ministers, and the permanent officials, a project for the establishment of a Salvation Army colony in the Canadian North-West, to be devoted only to agricultural operations. The General desires that the Dominion should give a reservation of land and financial assistance.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Winslade-road, Brixton, on 10th inst., Mrs. Woods, wife of Rev. William Woods, formerly Baptist minister at Nottingham.—At Chathill, Northumberland, Rev. L. S. Orde, aged eighty-seven, formerly of Weetwood.—At Heckmondwike, Mr. F. J. Devine, a devoted servant of God and of the poor.—At Bedminster, Mr. H. Bennett, aged eighty-three, a liberal giver.—At Westbury Leigh, Mr. J. Reed, a good worker.—At Rainhill, on 11th inst., Rev. John Barton, aged sixty-seven, vicar of the parish.—At Greetland, Mr. G. Shaw, for many years a useful and enthusiastic Sunday-school worker.—At Stonehouse Court (Glo'ster), on 6th inst., Rev. R. Salway, aged ninety-four, for fifty-four years rector of Ash, Sevenoaks.—At Wells, Norfolk, Mr. T. Fryer, aged seventy-six, an earnest Methodist.—At Chelmsford, Mr. James Bennett, aged ninety-two, a faithful follower of Christ.—At Brighton, Mr. J. F. Ratcliffe, aged fifty-one, a minister for thirty-one years.—At Blackheath, aged eighty, Rev. Joseph Chapman, a retired Methodist minister.—At Billingborough, Mr. William Knibe, for fifty years a preacher of the Gospel.—At Eversley, Newport, on 6th inst., Mrs. Jenkin, wife of the Rev. R. Jenkin, chairman of the Cardiff and Swansea Methodist district.—At 23, Wood-lane, W., on 13th inst., Mrs. Owers, wife of Mr. Oscar Owers, aged 77, greatly beloved in the Lord.—At Holly Lodge, Londonderry, Mrs. MaCaw, wife of Rev. Dr. McCaw, clerk of the English Presbyterian Church.—At Dawlish, Mrs. Price, widow of Rev. Henry Price, Methodist minister, aged 80 years.—At Ballydevitt, co. Donegal, Mrs. Susan Judge, an active Christian worker, aged 90 years.—Rev. J. L. Hornecк, incumbent of Killinick.—At Gorey, Lieut.-Gen. J. C. Guise, V.C., C.B., an earnest church worker.—Mrs. Mary Wakeford Meech, widow of the late Mr. Henry Meech of Sherborne.

Appeals.

Mrs. Whittingham, 44, Alexandra-road, Hornsey, N., appeals for a piano for the Girls' Parlour, Hornsey. It would be thankfully acknowledged, and any information given respecting the work.

Y.W.C.A.—The Crouch End and Hornsey Branch, N., open their new rooms at 86, Weston-park, Crouch End, this day (Thursday), but are still in need of furniture for reading and secretary's rooms, viz.—bookcase, piano, carpets, and curtains.

Mr. Henry Morgan, who has for some years travelled, accompanied by his wife, with the Donkey Bible Carriage, has been laid aside for the last twelve weeks with rheumatic neuralgia. Friends who are acquainted with his work, as an evangelist in the villages and at fairs, may wish to aid him. His address is 160, Marlborough-road, Grandpont, Oxford.

Mr. Albert Tuttlebel, of the Zambesi Industrial Mission, Chiromo, Central Africa, B.C.A., writes asking for periodical gifts of papers, etc., for reading at the lonely station.

Will the friend who sends The Christian to Rev. G. O. Newport, Bangalore, kindly address it in future to the Theological Seminary, London Mission, Bangalore? Mr. Newport is dead, but the paper will be much appreciated still at the seminary.

MR. J. J. SIMS has recently conducted a series of services at Brighton in connection with the local branch of the Evangelistic Mission. There were Gospel addresses, prophetic lectures and talks to Christians, all of which were powerful and much appreciated. There have been professed conversions. The prophetic lectures were illustrated by a large chart.

HUNGRY, COLD, and STARVING.

THE CONSTANT APPEAL,

"Will you help me with a little food and firing? My children are starving."

This is the Plea we are continually hearing.

DRIFTS AND CRIPPLES.

C. L. Boyer's

Drift Children's Mission & Home Cripples' Band.

The Committee urgently plead for funds to enable them to supply the pressing needs and to give brightness to the 500 afflicted ones cared for by them. Also to carry the Gospel to the poorest children in East London.

WHO WILL HELP?

Cheques and Orders payable to H. Clogg, Esq., Hon. Treasurer; Office, 29, Cottage-grove, Bow, E.
Charles H. T. Archer, Secretary.

GREAT POVERTY AMONG DOCK LABOURERS

The Rev. STEWART SMYTH earnestly pleads for the sick and suffering families of poor Dock Labourers, of which this district is chiefly composed.

Very Distressing Cases

come under our notice daily, and as far as funds permit everything is done to alleviate their sufferings. Donations will be very thankfully acknowledged if sent to St. Mark's Vicarage, Victoria Docks, E.; or Editor of The Christian.

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

INSTITUTED 1307.

Treasurers: Frank A. Bevan, Esq.; W. J. Parks, Esq.

When was it instituted? 87 years ago.

Whom does it assist? The Lord's aged poor of both sexes, and of various denominations, who are 60 years of age and upwards. The pensioners dwell in all parts of the United Kingdom. Many are widows, some are blind, others have been long afflicted, and one has been bedridden upwards of 30 years; 917 are over 70 years of age, and of this number 239 are upwards of 80, and 16 more than 90. 1310 pensioners are now upon the books.

How does it assist? By pensions of Five, Seven, and Ten Guineas per annum, and by Homes at Camberwell, Hornsey Rise, Stamford Hill, and Brighton for 180 of the pensioners. £8400 per annum are expended in pensions alone, and £1800 in maintaining the Homes and the various funds connected with them. The pensions are distributed to the recipients at their own abodes. The Homes are open for the inspection of visitors daily (Sundays excepted).

What Help is required? The Annual Subscription List needs doubling. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me." John E. Hazelton, Sec., Office, 83, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

"SAVE THE CHILDREN."

Children's Aid Society.

2768 Children have been rescued from Dens of Infamy. 10,319 Children (boys and girls) have been aided by the "Boys' Beadles." Painful but interesting details of the rescue of the children will be sent on application. Funds are urgently needed. Contributions may be forwarded to Messrs. Morgan and Scott; or to Arthur J. S. Maddison, Sec. Office, 32, Charing Cross, S.W.

CENTENARY
LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Head Quarters: 14, Blomfield-street, E.C.

This Society, founded in September, 1795, by a number of Episcopalians, Presbyterians, and Congregationalists, on a broad and catholic basis, from which it has never departed, is about to celebrate the completion of its

among the heathen and unenlightened races of the earth.

The Society has had the honour of sending out more than a THOUSAND MISSIONARIES, not reckoning their wives, among them such distinguished men as John Williams, Moffat, Livingstone, Morrison (the first Protestant Missionary to China), Medhurst, Ellis, Mullens, Gilmour, of Mongolia, and Dr. Mackenzie, of Tientsin. In pioneering work in lands little known, in translating the Bible (some forty versions of which in whole or in part have profited by their labours), in the preparation of Christian literature and educational manuals, the Society's representatives have always occupied an honourable place, while their contributions to science have been generously acknowledged by scientific men.

Its Chief FIELDS OF LABOUR are:—China, from twelve chief centres; North India, the Madras Presidency, and Travancore; Madagascar; South Africa; Central Africa; West Indies; Polynesia; and New Guinea.

It has on ITS PRESENT STAFF 258 missionaries, 17 of whom are qualified medical missionaries; 1476 native ordained pastors and evangelists; over 12,000 other native helpers; 94,192 church members; 404,795 native adherents; 1891 schools; 125,984 scholars; 10 hospitals, in which 98,992 patients were treated during 1893.

Never did the Society possess a stronger, abler, or more devoted band of agents than to-day; never had it such openings for work or such promise of success as now. Money is the great need. "The possibilities of going forward are simply limited by the means of going forward."

A Centenary Fund of £100,000 has been opened, £43,000 of which has already been promised. Donations are earnestly solicited, and may be made payable to the Rev. A. N. JOHNSON, M.A., 14, Blomfield-street, London, E.C.

ACUTE SUFFERING!

The most distressful cases are still being found. Suffering of an acute character silently borne by those whom it is a real joy to assist. The details of some of these would be too distressful to publish, while the crowds of hungry ones always waiting when the tickets are served are still much too large to help even with a little soup. Funds to continue this ministry will be gratefully received by Mrs. F. A. Bevan, 59, Prince's Gate, S.W.; or the Director, N.E. London Gospel Missions, William Chorley, 6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, London, N.; or to the Offices of The Christian. Parcels to Miss Gulliver, 25, Glengall-road, Millwall Docks, Isle of Dogs, E.

Without Food, Fire or Clothing!

The terribly cold and inclement weather recently experienced has greatly added to the difficulties of our Workers in the East End of London and elsewhere in dealing with the poorest part of the population. Not only is to supply the wants of the great family of nearly 5,000 Children now in Dr. Barnardo's 82 distinct Homes, but also to aid the large number of worthy adult poor dealt with by his 24 Mission Branches. For the former, 15,000 MEALS have to be provided DAILY, whilst for the latter Relief is supplied in various forms and carefully given, after personal visitation of the destitute and starving poor living principally in slum districts, many of whom are without food or firing or sufficient clothing, and cannot obtain work.

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED FOR FOOD & MAINTENANCE.

Donations and Subscriptions gratefully received by the Treasurer, William Fowler, Esq.; by the Chairman of Committee, Samuel G. Sheppard, Esq.; by the Vice-Chairman, Howard Williams, Esq.; by the Founder and Director, Dr. Thos. J. Barnardo; or by the Bankers, London and South-Western Bank (Bow Branch), and Messrs. Prescott, Dimsdale, & Co.

CONSUMPTION,
AND
ALL CHEST DISEASES.
INTERVIEWS WITH OLD PATIENTS, AND NEW CASES.

By MR. CONGREVE'S COMMISSIONER.

EIGHTY-FOURTH INTERVIEW,

With Mrs. EMILY HAYTER, Cwmffoes, Cefncribbur, near Bridgend.

CASE OF SEVERE BRONCHIAL ASTHMA.

See reference to this Case in the Appendix of Mr. Congreve's work on "Consumption," p. 48.

The complaint from which Mrs. Hayter suffered was a severe form of bronchial asthma. So she told me when I called upon her recently at the address given above.

"I had been ill some time before I applied to Mr. Congreve in 1882. For four years before that, I had suffered with shortness of breath, which gradually got worse, with violent cough and offensive expectoration; I was losing flesh and getting weaker. The medicine I got from my doctor did me no lasting good. If I was a little better one day I was worse the next."

"What was your condition when you applied to Mr. Congreve?"

"I was as bad as I could be; quite unable to get out of bed."

"I see it was in December of 1882 that you first wrote. How long was it before you felt decided improvement?"

"I took the medicine all through the winter, and in the following March I was very much better. By July I was quite well again."

"In 1887 (about four years afterwards), I believe you wrote to Mr. Congreve saying you had continued well from the time you felt able to give up taking the medicine. Will it be correct to say the same up to the present?"

"Yes; from that time I have never had the slightest touch of bronchial asthma—in fact, I have never had a doctor since."

"Tell me, please, do you think you would have got well again without Mr. Congreve's treatment?"

No, I don't believe I should ever have got better again."

Mrs. Hayter had seen the account of her case published in the Appendix to Mr. Congreve's work on "Consumption," and said she should be pleased for this Interview to be similarly published.

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S work on CONSUMPTION, &c., in which are detailed THE CAUSES, SYMPTOMS, PROGRESS, AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF THIS SCOURGE OF ENGLAND.—WITH NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED CASES OF CURE. ALSO ON COUGH, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c., &c. The Book will be sent, post free, for ONE SHILLING by the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

Notes and Comments.

We learn from Mr. Charrington that, since our last issue, it has been decided to provide some work for the unemployed by having the Great Assembly Hall repaired and re-painted. It is, therefore, necessary to postpone the Meetings for Thanksgiving and Prayer until the end of April. We hope to be able to notify the precise date in our next issue.

The next quarterly conference of the Evangelical Alliance, on Friday (to-morrow), will assume the character of a special meeting for united prayer for the persecuted Stundists. It will be held (D.V.) in the council room, 7, Adam-street, Strand, at 11.30 a.m. Dr. Baedeker, who has lately returned from another journey through Russia, has kindly promised to be present, and will give an account of his visits to the prisons, and of his meetings with the Stundists. Ladies are always gladly welcomed at these meetings.

Dear Sir,—Some sentences in Notes and Comments (page 6, second column) of last week's number of The Christian, constrain me to lay before you the question, "Have we any warrant for supposing that God would consider that heart sound which, having his infallible Word, yet holds unsound views on any cardinal truth of revelation?" I also am constrained to submit that in the last sentence of the paragraph, the reverse is the true order, viz., "Sound wholesome healthy doctrine is the essential foundation of love to God and our neighbour."—I. A. S. (a constant reader of The Christian for fully thirty years).

We are much obliged to our kind correspondent, but we still hold that what we wrote is right. Comparatively few Christians have any views at all of many important doctrines, The thief on the cross can have had little knowledge of doctrine, beyond the promise of the Messiah. He heard Jesus pray, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," and his heart was won. He believed on Jesus at his weakest, and prayed, "Lord, remember me when Thou comest into thy Kingdom." That day he was with the Lord he loved in Paradise. "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness." "The eyes of your heart being enlightened" (Rom. x. 10; Eph. i. 18., R.V.).

The milder weather, for which we are thankful, must not allow us to suppose that the unemployed are busy again and the distress is over. That there is a mitigation of pain; that is all we can say at present. Gradually men, or a portion of them, will get into work. Thousands will still remain idle. Arrears of rent and debts owing to tradesmen will have to be paid; everything will be behindhand. Therefore let aid still flow in.

The inhuman harpies who cater for continental vice are ever on the look for fresh unwary victims whom they may entrap and enslave. A case has come to light in which a young Englishwoman, through a pretended professional engagement, found herself in the power of an Amsterdam music-hall proprietor, and she had to leave without her belongings. The British Consul in that city does not appear to have done his best in caring for the interests of our young countrywoman. It ought to be widely known by all young people seeking engagements in these continental cities, that they can freely avail themselves of the knowledge and help of the National Vigilance Association, 267, Strand, in ascertaining the bona fides of any such occupation proffered to them.

Bookmakers and gamblers have small reason to thank The Times for its utterances on the recent judgment with regard to betting at Newmarket. It says :—

> In so important a matter, and one fraught with such far-reaching consequences, it is well for every reason that some final authoritative judgment should be pronounced, so that the parties concerned may know where they stand.

After describing the practices of bookmakers in the betting ring, it adds, "That this gives encouragement to gambling is clear enough. It is gambling made easy and accessible to all comers." The bookmakers, we see, have been in conference as to how to safeguard their interests, and The Licensed Victuallers' Gazette stigmatises the trial as "to the last degree an unmanly attempt to crush out and extinguish the great national sport of horse-racing, which no man or body of men will be able to prevent so long as swift horses are bred, and there are good courses to run them on." This is a misrepresentation; the attempt is to crush out gambling on horse racing, or on anything else.

The Christian mind of London seems to be steadily settling down to the conclusion that no man must be returned to the County Council who will go against the policy of restricting the drink traffic, or who will attempt to undo the work of purifying our places of amusement. The moral aspects of the struggle are coming more and more to the front. That the rich should bear the burdens of municipal life equally with the poor, that an owner of land whose property has been increased in value by public improvements should pay his just share of the cost of the improvements, that the life of the people should be humanised, that amusements should be free from the allurements of vice, and that no public-house should be owned by the Council—these are the considerations which have placed the Methodists as one body on the side of the Progressives, and which have roused earnest men of the Church of England, together with Baptists and Congregationalists, to rally to the same side. A writer in The Rock says :

> Let Christian Unionists show that they refuse to allow party politics to fetter their action in merely municipal affairs. And let them show those who have committed the "Moderates" to a reversal of the licensing action of the present London County Council, that by so doing they have rightly brought defeat and disgrace to their party.

The long delay in the publication of the report of the Opium Commission has been referred to in the House of Lords by Lord Cross. So far as we can gather from the conversation which took place, there is a confident expectation that the report will be in favour of a continuance of the present state of things. The Marquis of Lansdowne said that it was awaited with the greatest interest in India, because the subject was one which concerned not only the finances of India, but also the private lives and domestic habits of the people of that country. He declared that with regard to the cost of the Commission the general feeling in India among natives and Europeans, official and unofficial, was, "We did not want this inquiry, and if you wanted it you ought to pay for it yourselves." The costs of the trial, he thought, might very fairly follow the verdict. The whole question, it seems to us, was raised for the purpose of saying just that word, whatever effect may be hoped for from it. The report is promised by Easter.

It is said that whereas there were 25,000 brewers in the United Kingdom fifteen years ago, now there are less than 10,000. The small brewers have declined. This must mean an enormous increase of trade among large brewers and brewery companies. We have, per contra, also to remember how many thousands of persons are shareholders in these companies. The struggle is with a huge vested interest in which persons of every class have a share.

Metropolitan Unitarianism is trying a "forward movement." At the door of every house in some districts an announcement has been left of a course of simultaneous lectures, to be given in twenty places on five different Sundays; there appear to be only twenty-six Unitarian Churches in all London. With the announcement is "A Brief Account of Unitarianism," which is partly expository of Unitarian thought and partly historical. Of course, it claims adherents far beyond the boundaries of formal and confessed Unitarianism :—

> In England there are broad thinkers in the ministry of almost every orthodox denomination, who, if not formally giving up the old doctrines of the Trinity and the other corruptions to which it led, are yet preaching essentially the same simple spiritual thoughts of God and Christ, and of man and the eternal hope, for which Unitarians specially stand, but for which we have so long had to stand alone. . . . It is often said that there are many more Unitarians in other churches than there are in our own. We are thankful if it is so.

We have no means of estimating how far this claim is true, but the assertion of it is enough to raise serious thought. Looking down the list of the names of preachers, we observe that of a gentleman whom we once heard conduct "a devotional meeting," and yet neither in his prayers—no one else was asked or given an opportunity to pray—nor in his address, nor in one of the hymns sung, was the name of Christ ever mentioned. This may be "free Christianity," but it strikes us as free with the Christianity left out. And whatever it may boast in the way of adherents, we have no fear of any forward movement from it. It never moved forward; it cannot; it has no sufficient motive power. In its growth from other churches it represents, not motion forward, but a decline in the life of those that have fed it. From which the inference is plain, that those who love and worship the Saviour must preach Him with greater fulness than ever, not forgetting that it must be in the power of the Spirit.

History has a valuable lesson to teach us on all that class of questions which have been raised by the correspondence in our columns on "Advancing Apostasy." When Martin Luther and others brought in the Reformation they did it rather by preaching salvation by grace than by exposing and denouncing the errors and abuses of Rome; the latter had to be done, no doubt, because Rome was in the way, and was always obtruding herself. But the power which drew men together, which united them into one body, which made them a separate body from the dead body of Rome, was the Gospel held by a true faith. The Nonconformist Churches were originated in a similar way, and so were the Methodist Churches. Life must have room and freedom. Let life, abundant life, come upon the Church of England, and it will settle all difficulties in its own way. Let life, abundant life, come upon the Nonconformist Churches, and it will not only save them from internal troubles and dangers, but also adjust their external difficulties as nothing else can. A revival clears away rubbish as a "spate" sweeps the bed of a river clean.

The death of Frederick Douglass removes another of the foremost American abolitionists. Is he the last of all? We do not remember another. His death recalls the saying of the aged negress, when Douglass was once describing in his own graphic way the sad condition of his people as if it were hopeless—"Fred. Douglass, is God dead?" Her simple faith in God could see no impossibility in the deliverance of her race, desperate as it appeared to the eyes of sense. That God lives is the true hope of every good cause.

When Douglass travelled in the old days he could obtain none of the comforts of the white man. On board a steamer he must sleep on deck at night. To mark his disapproval of this unjust and cruel custom Wendell Phillips, America's greatest orator, when he travelled with Douglass, would fold himself in his rug and share the coloured man's hardship and shame. This was the true spirit of Jesus, who came to share our conditions and to carry our sorrows. From the time of his conversion as a youth to the day of his death Phillips was never afraid or ashamed to copy his Lord.

The Venice correspondent of The Rock declares that it is difficult for people in England to realise the extraordinary propaganda that the Papacy carries on in Rome among English visitors. "Not a stone is left unturned to get access to them, and to disarm their hostility towards the Papacy. All visitors of any note are called upon by emissaries from the Vatican, who offer them all kinds of services." The Crown Princess of Sweden has long been a coveted prize. Generally, the blandishments fail, because the tempted see Rome too near; the real effects of the system are too apparent to be mistaken, and too bad to be any commendation.

A Presbyterian minister reports that he was recently at a public dinner in London for the benefit of a charitable institution, at which, among others, an English Bishop attended. A certain Cardinal Archbishop was present—and when he rose, all the guests, including a prince, rose also. The Presbyterian kept his seat.

Rev. A. Lukyn Williams, Principal of the Hebrew Missionary College, says that the chief temptations of a converted Jew arise from the great change in his social life, from material difficulties, and from the Jewish tendency to rove. He is no longer a member of the most exclusive and most interdependent society in the world, no longer sure of a kindly word and a helping hand from every fellow-believer. Whereas he never felt lonely as a Jew, as a Christian he is merely one of a vast society. His changed condition is hard and bitter. On the day when he is baptized his relations put up a memorial card of his death. Instead of encouraging Jews to work, except through one society, "in the present state of English society every Jewish convert is assured of a sufficient living if he will only take the trouble to beg decently. . . . The good folk who give money without making inquiries little realise the harm they do to the many poor struggling and true-hearted converts." From the roaming propensities that the Jews retain, even after baptism, a convert is apt to be a very changeable quantity, moving from one church to another.

That is a strange change which railways are working in India; on the one hand quietly breaking down the old caste distinctions, and on the other extending pilgrimages. The Times says:—

> The railways have popularised pilgrimage, and converted what was always a dangerous and often homicidal enterprise—a supreme act of self-abandonment and faith—into a vast system of cheap annual excursions with return tickets. When a new Indian railway is contemplated its probable pilgrim traffic often forms a more prominent feature in its prospectus than its mineral or food-grain freights. Indeed, more than one pushing shrine has a railway of its own, and minor temples are working their way up to first-class sanctuaries by the help of a wayside station. While the number of pilgrims has enormously increased, the number of deaths among them due to preventible causes has greatly diminished.

It will be curious to see what change will pass over these pilgrimages when the shrines are spoiled and the idols forsaken. They will be sure to continue in another form after they have ceased to be idolatrous.

We understand that it is becoming the practice of some of the younger and non-denominational foreign missions to locate missionaries of the same denomination together. Thus missions claiming to be non-denominational form centres which are distinctly denominational. We suggest that this is not in harmony with their professed attitude. Many of their supporters think that it is one of the unsatisfactory developments of missionary enterprise that British sectarianisms, the growth of centuries, should be transferred to the virgin soil of heathen lands. They think that our responsibility is to evangelise the world, to preach the Gospel to every creature; but not to inoculate those communities with the lymph of our divisions.

We venture to hope that this comparatively new departure may be reconsidered. It seems incongruous and anomalous that while the air at home is full of pleas for union and reunion, those who put no confidence in any union but the oneness of the body of Christ should deliberately graft upon the Gospel these parasitic plants, and transmit to others inheritances from which we are endeavouring to liberate ourselves.

A cheering report of work done in Hyderabad during the last year comes from Rev. William Burgess, the Wesleyan Methodist missionary. He writes to The Methodist Recorder that there is progress all along the line. Four hundred and forty converts from heathenism, nearly 100 of whom are women, have been baptized. Large numbers are waiting for baptism. "Thirteen new villages have been captured for Christ, bringing up the number of villages in which Christians are found to 107."

It is not long since we said that whatever the troubles of China in this war, Japan would inevitably reap a bitter harvest even were she conqueror, indeed just because she is conqueror. Our words are soon coming true. The pride and self-confidence which are born of success are already showing themselves; with these comes a bellicose spirit which likes fighting for fighting's sake. For some reason or other it is (says the correspondent of The Daily News) the fashion to speak disparagingly of England, against whom a great deal of antipathy is felt. A Tokio official even informed the American Consul-General that Japan would have to fight England. This is the delirium of the war fever, a bad and dangerous symptom. We see at the same time that Japan is compelled to obtain another loan. Debts, which will mean permanent taxation and demoralisation, which again will mean delay of the nation's progress towards a real civilisation, will be the heavy price paid for the struggle. Would that Japan and all other nations could be got to see that righteousness is the strongest bulwark.

EVANGELICAL SOCIETY OF FRANCE.

The following incident affords an idea of the darkness which prevails in a country where the Bible is practically an unknown thing:—There is a great stir in the little town of Arpajon, three miles from Aurillac, the principal town of the Cantal (Auvergne), on the Sunday nearest the patron's saint day. Opposite the church, in a café, a public dance attracts many; before the church there is quite a little fair, and inside the church worse still is going on. It is the day of "rénage." Pastor Borel-Brun, one of the workers connected with the Société Evangélique de France, has been an eye-witness of the scene.

After mass the priest goes into the pulpit, simply to intimate that the sale will be proceeded with, and immediately another priest goes from rank to rank, asking every man or woman how many pounds of prayers he or she wants to buy. There is no mistake; the prayers of the church are sold at the rate of fivepence a pound! Do buy a pound of influence with God for your dead friends! A pound! How can they weigh it? This is a mystery which these impostors alone can explain, but it does as well for the living as for the dead, to heal the sick, to procure a husband for an elderly maid, or to send some of their deceased friends out of the flames of purgatory!

Is it not written that they shall make merchandise of the "souls of men"? So is it fulfilled; but, alas! that publicly, before six or seven hundred persons, such things should be possible in dark France! Yet the light shineth in darkness. In Aurillac I was privileged to begin work nine years ago, and Pastor Borel-Brun, who now has charge of the work, writes: "On Christmas Day, 1894, a stoker who attends our meetings, while driving his engine fell on his knees, asked God's forgiveness, and came home rejoicing. His wife was so struck by the change in him that she was led to God the same night. The Holy Spirit's work spreads, and fifteen have already been brought in. A peculiar feature of this movement is that the converts, filled with joy, asked to have meetings in their houses, where they can invite their neighbours and give their testimony, and much good is done. Thus there are now meetings in five different houses in the week."

Much do the committee of the Société Evangélique de France desire to extend their work here and in other places; and urgent is the call for helpers everywhere; but they are at the present time much hampered for want of funds.

THE UNVEILING.—9.

THE SEVEN-SEALED ROLL.

"The secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but the things that are revealed belong unto us and to our children for ever, that we may do all the words of this law" (Deut. xxix. 29).

During all the ages, from the first promise in the garden, the secret things have been passing over into the category of things revealed. While faith has anticipated them, and interpreted them, and saluted them from afar, and embraced them as its own, unbelief has always been and still is deaf and blind to the promises of God, which in his Son are Yea and Amen, to the glory of God by us. "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day, he saw it and was glad." "But this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed: lest haply they should perceive with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and turn again, and I should heal them."

At the end of four thousand years, although everything had been foretold, everything relating to the great salvation remained in mystery, "which none of the princes of this world knew, for had they known it they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." "Of which salvation the prophets inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: searching what or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ and the glories that should follow... which things the angels desire to look into."

On the right hand of Him that sitteth on the throne John saw a roll, a writing, closely sealed with seven seals. The margins of our Bibles refer us to Isa. xxix., which, to a degree not always apprehended, seems the key to the present chapter. Isaiah said that God had blinded the prophets and covered the heads of the seers, so that all vision had become unto them as the words of a sealed book, which the learned cannot read because it is sealed, nor the unlearned because he is untaught. But John sees that the roll is closely sealed even from the angels round the throne, and from the saints, the excellent of the earth; and he weeps much because no creature, human or angelic, is found worthy to open the roll or to look thereon.

But Isaiah's chapter had begun with "Ho Ariel, Ariel! Woe to Ariel! Alas for Ariel! The lion; the lion-like man; the lion of God [so are the words variously rendered]: the city, or, of the city, where David dwelt, or encamped, or which David besieged. Add ye year to year; let the Feasts come round: then will I distress Ariel, and there shall be mourning and lamentation: and she (Jerusalem) shall be unto Me as Ariel, (or) it shall be unto Me as the hearth, the bosom, of the great altar."

A very obscure passage, as all the commentators agree, but of which I think the key is Jesus, as He is the key to many another difficult portion. Ariel is generally understood to represent Jerusalem. So it may, for Jesus represents Jerusalem. Jerusalem is embodied and personified in Him. She has received at the Lord's hand, in Him who died in her stead, double for all her sins (Isa. xl. 2).

And who is Ariel, the Lion of God, but the Lion of the tribe of Judah? And did not Jehovah distress Ariel, when He laid upon the Lamb the iniquity of us all?

In the preceding paper reference was made to Ezekiel's stringent appeal (xliii. 7-12) to Israel to be ashamed of their iniquities and to measure the pattern. The very first measurement which he defines is that of the altar, which is called (15) Harel, the mountain of God, and Ariel, the lion of God: "So the upper altar (Harel) shall be four cubits, and from the altar hearth (Ariel) and upward shall be four horns." (v. 15, R.V.)

Earlier in the chapter Ezekiel says, "And behold the glory of the God of Israel came from the way of the East: [the wise men from the East saw his star in the East:] and his voice was like a noise of many waters; and the earth shined with his glory." Compare Hab. iii. 4. —"And his brightness was as the light; and He had horns coming out of his hands; or bright beams out of his side; and there was the hiding of his power." Yes, the altar has horns of power; the power is hidden in his pierced hands and wounded side.

Through weakness and defeat
He won the meed and crown;
Trod all his foes beneath his feet
By being trodden down.

The Little Lamb is the Lion of the Tribe of Judah. When Samuel offered a sucking lamb for a burnt-offering, the Lord thundered with a great thunder upon the Philistines and discomfited them. "The foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men" (1 Sam. vii. 9, 10; 1 Cor. i. 25).

"Add year to year: let the Feasts come round" (R.V.). John in his Gospel shows how at each successive Feast, in Jerusalem, the net was drawn closer and closer round Arnion the Little Lamb, round Ariel the Lion of God, until He came to the hearth, the bosom, of the great altar of God—the Cross of Calvary.

In the first year of his ministry He was in Jerusalem at the Feast of the Passover, but did not commit Himself unto them (John ii. 23-25). In the next year, there was a Feast of the Jews, and Jesus went up to Jerusalem and healed the impotent man on the Sabbath; and the Jews persecuted Jesus and sought to slay Him (v.). In the following year at the Feast of Tabernacles they sought to take Him, but his hour was not yet come. In the great day of this Feast He looked onward to the Feast of Pentecost, when He promised to them that should believe on Him the outflow of rivers of living water of the Spirit, who was not yet outpoured because that Jesus was not yet glorified (vii.). A second time they would have laid hands on Him, but still his hour was not yet come. Then after further conversation they took up stones to cast at Him (viii.). Again, "the Feast of the Dedication, and it was winter." He said, "I and my Father are one." Then the Jews took up stones again to stone Him (x.).

In the next year, the Jews' last Passover drew nigh, and they ask one another, "What think ye, that He will not come to the Feast?" He came. Mary anointed Him for the burying. This angered Judas, and Satan put it into his heart to betray Him. Before the Feast He washed the disciples' feet, and at the Paschal Supper the devil entered into Judas, and having received the sop he went immediately out into the black and dark night. Caiaphas had given counsel that one man should die for the people. Judas kissed him. The band took Him. The disciples forsook Him and fled. Annas sent him bound to Caiaphas, and they led him from Caiaphas into the hall of judgment: but they went not in lest they should be defiled: but that they might eat the passover. Peter denied Him. The people cried, "Crucify Him. Not this man, but Barabbas." Pilate scourged Him, and delivered Him unto them to be crucified. And it was the preparation of the Passover, and he said, "Behold your King!" The soldiers cast lots for his garments. One of them pierced his side; but the typical passover had provided that a bone of Him, the true Passover, should not be broken. He was laid in Joseph's new tomb because of the Preparation.

Surely John had in his mind Isaiah's words, "Let the Feasts go round. Then will I distress Ariel, and there shall be heaviness and sorrow; and she shall be unto Me as Ariel, as the hearth of the great altar."

After his resurrection John notes another Feast—the waving of the Sheaf of Firstfruits before the Lord. This explains his word to Mary, "Touch Me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father and your Father, to my God and your God" (compare Lev. xxiii. 9-14 with John xx. 17).

The incarnation of the Son of God and his victory over death by means of death and resurrection are the commanding subjects of Old Testament prophecy.

He hell in hell laid low,
Made sin He sin o'erthrew,
Entered the grave, destroyed it so,
And death by dying slew.

The seven-sealed roll would seem to have contained those things which the trumpet voice that had called John up through the opened door of Heaven had promised to reveal when he said, "I will show thee things which are about to come to pass hereafter."

None but the Lamb of God, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, could open the roll and look therein, for He was himself the key to it: the roll would have been non-existent apart from Him. But for Him the fallen creation must have been smitten into nothingness His redeeming work was the subject of Old Testament prophecy, and its results are the subject of the closely-sealed roll. None but He had any title to open it, just as no one has a right to open another man's title-deeds.

Therefore, when He comes forward, He that sitteth upon the throne admits his claim, and then all created intelligences acclaim Him worthy. Observe the prominence throughout of the living creatures and the elders. The Lamb is seen in the midst of the Throne and of the four living creatures and of the elders. When He takes the roll they sing the new song of redemption, because they are the redeemed. And they close the vision. "The four living creatures said 'Amen.' And the elders fell down and worshipped."

When we regard these ideal beings as representing the redeemed everything concerning them falls into harmony; for they sing, "Thou art worthy to take the roll, and to open the seals thereof: because Thou wast slain, and redeemedst us to God by thy blood, out of every tribe and tongue and people and nation; and Thou madest them unto our God a kingdom and priests; and they reign on the earth." It is these only who praise for redemption. The angels say, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and might, and honour, and glory, and blessing." And the other creatures say, "Unto Him that sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb, be the blessing and the honour and the glory and the dominion, unto the ages of the ages." And the four living creatures conclude the triumphal song with a solemn "Amen!" and the elders fall down and worship. M.

The New Creation.

The New Creation may with justice be said to be the Be-All and End-All of Christianity. It comprehends all Christian experience; it interprets the whole sum of Christian hope; and it supplies the final cause of all the endeavour that is Christian indeed. But while this is so in point of fact, it is very far from being so in current estimation. One might almost imagine, from the tone and temper of much of the Christian profession of these days, that the New Creation had mysteriously disappeared, like some buried city, the very site of which is unknown. There is but little reference now to the New Creation as the ground of Being, and still less reference to it as the ground of hope or action. Attention to this theme is neither pressed on the individual, nor is it made to bulk before the public mind by any commanding witness.

Men—Christians—are occupied with their schemes of improvement, with their moral and social nostrums, with their grafting of new methods on the old stock. The belief gains that man is working out his own millennium by way of strikes, county councils, and charades, that the difference between the Old Creation and the New (if such a thing there be) is more complexional than real, and that the promised land of the future is clearly sighted in the New Journalism and the New Humanity.

Still, it must be confessed that the sum of human care does not lessen; nor does the onward march of democracy relieve the gloom of the present outlook, or lighten the gravity of the prospective view. There is need—all the more that it is so dimly perceived for the most part—to re-affirm the vital bearings of the New Creation in the great realms of experience and endeavour.

There has been far too much of earthly admixture in the spirit and policy of the Church of late years. It would almost seem as if the salt had become sugar; and as if the end for which the Church existed were to flatter, rather than to abase, the flesh before God. Materialism, reinforced by the widely-accepted hypothesis of Evolution, has shed what is taken for new light on the old creation, and superseded, in the scientific mind, the need for any other ground of Being than the scheme of nature supplies. This notion has struck deeply into the heart of modern Christianity. Hence, instead of the despair of the old creation, its conquering march is hailed, while "man's ascent" is proclaimed as part of a universal law which includes alike the dateless past and the boundless future. It is time to call a halt, and to display the banner which God has given because of the truth.

The New Creation is "the strange device" which is superior to "Excelsior," the bearing of which is not more objective and future than it is subjective and present. Why should we be concerned with the old order when in the New Creation lie the glory of the Christian's hope and the riches of his present possessions? It is not simply that the Christian sees the New Creation by faith as from afar; he substantiates it, as a heavenly reality, in his own heart. His own consciousness is the monument and evidence of its existence. Faith's prevision has a sure ground in experience itself, giving birth to a living hope of a good time coming, in comparison with which the dream of a golden age is without form and void.

For "if any man be in Christ he is a new creation; old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." The Christian, therefore, who is one indeed, dwells inwardly in a different world from that of others, he breathes a different atmosphere, belongs to a different régime, has new tastes, principles, hopes, tendencies—in a word, he has a new outlook altogether, a new spirit and a new mind. In no respect is the New Creation to be identified or in anywise mixed up with what a man was originally. "All things are become new."

Nor is this all. The New Creation is called new for the further reason that it can never become old. The New Creation can never know the sere and yellow leaf. There is no autumn, far less winter, in this region. The new life in Christ is incapable of ageing, for though the outward man perishes, the inward man is renewed day by day. Outside this interior kingdom all is languor, waste, decay, death; but within, everything wears the bloom of immortal freshness and everlasting youth. The Kingdom of God is not without but within thee—that is, if thou art in Christ. Art thou a Christian, then, in this sense that thou art a new creation? Is the pearl of the New Creation thine? Make no mistake; and count nothing as gain save this treasure.

The delusion in the case of many is a salvation that is objective, a Saviour that is but notionally apprehended. Be not misled. "He that hath the Son hath life." The blessing is experimental and altogether unique in quality, so much so that the natural heart has never even formed the conception of it. The New Creation is Eden in the heart; it is heaven epitomised; it is life crowned; it is glory begun. But what words can express half the worth of this Divine realm in the human heart? Seek heart-union with Jesus (for this is faith), and count all things loss to secure it, and thou shalt know what the New Creation is as an experience that language is impotent to describe.

But this theme has bearing on endeavour as well as experience. How few see this! How few put the flesh aside altogether, believing that the New Creation is all in all! Yet nothing avails in Christ Jesus save this one thing (Gal. v. 15). The circumcision of the flesh and the uncircumcision of it are on a par, and valueless alike. The old man is none the better for all the religious effort expended on his improvement, and he is none the worse for the absence of it. The culture avails nothing; and Mr. Worldly Wiseman's counsels total in their sum but a cypher. Would that, instead of knowing men after the flesh, their likes and dislikes, their sociology and politics, the Church of to-day had the Pauline wisdom to view the scene through a spiritual lens, seeing that nothing avails in the Christian sphere save the activities which are expressive of the new life, and which bear emphatic witness to the need of a New Creation!

The bearing of this on the whole subject of externalism is evident enough. Why wear a badge? Why hanker after an ornate place of worship? Why insist on a showy ritual? Why trouble about the music or the rhetoric? What is there in it all? Canst thou worship better in a cathedral than in a barn, or in a plain meeting-house? Then it is thy flesh that worships, and not thy spirit. Dost thou need art to aid thy devotions, and the swell of the organ to subdue thy soul before God? Know then, that thou hast never yet entered the interior kingdom where the Father, Son, and Spirit dwell. Alas! for the Christianity of insatiable desire, which must have the flesh rigged out and adorned! Popular doubtless it is, but apostate also. Stand clear of the leaven of it. Live the interior life; for it is the New Creation which counts; externalism profiteth nothing.

"STUDIES IN THEOLOGY."*

The plan of Dr. Denney's book is suited to these busy times; in a crown octavo of 272 pages he has given us ten chapters on some of the most important questions of theology, and has handled each question in the light of present-day thought. He has shown how old things may be made new. If a "study" be "a work undertaken for improvement in any art or science and often left incomplete," we have here a book which is well calculated to improve any man's theology, though, of course, whole kingdoms of truth are not entered at all. Thoughtful men, who have no time to read the large volumes which are issued on every separate phase of religious truth, will find, by reading this small volume, that they are placed in possession of some of the most popular ideas, and will be shown wherein oftentimes lies their inadequacy or positive danger.

For while Dr. Denney thoroughly understands current theories, he is essentially a man of the old faith. He rejects, e.g., as altogether inadequate the favourite notion of many, that Christ has for the Christian consciousness the religious value of God. This seems to avoid certain controversies and difficulties concerning the person of Christ, but in reality it lands us in the Unitarian position. Jesus did not ask his disciples what religious value they attached to Him, but "Whom say ye that I am?"

We could have wished that in the lecture on "The Apostolic Doctrine of Christ" Dr. Denney had traced the rise and progress of that doctrine in the minds of the apostles as it is sketched in the Gospels, and then followed it to its full development after the resurrection of our Lord and the descent of the Holy Spirit. To us it has always seemed that the spirit, and tone, and works of Jesus awakened the thought that He "had come out from God," and that that thought contained the seed of the whole Evangelical faith. The first ray of light heralded a perfect day. Nevertheless the chapter is full of teaching of the highest order. He truly says:—

> All the writers of the New Testament think of Jesus a He lives now, on the throne of the universe, with angels and principalities and powers put under Him. His sovereignty in glory is not a thing which may, or may not, as one pleases, be added to the religious appreciation of His life on earth as having the value of a revelation of God; it is the first and last and dominating element in the Christian consciousness of the New Testament.

This volume is very powerful on the ethical side. The evil of sin is not minimised; the Bible way of dealing with it is the way here. Chapters iv., v., and vi., treat of "Man and Sin," "The Work of Christ in Relation to Sin." "The New Testament Doctrine of Atonement," and "Inadequate Doctrines of Atonement," are full of precious truth conveyed in perspicuous and convincing language. Dr. Denney is solemn and searching in insisting upon the reality of the Divine condemnation of men on account of sin; and thus the necessity for the death of Christ on account of sin is clearly brought forth. Here he is splendidly true to the Biblical way of representing the Atonement as the proof of God's love, and makes short work of the specious but misleading idea that love needs no propitiation; love and propitiation are not contradictories. In favour of the doctrine of atonement, that God's way of removing sin is to lay it upon his Son, he adduces two considerations: (1) It can be preached. A doctrine of atonement which is unintelligible, which cannot be told out by simple folk to all classes alike, is not true, is not "the word of the Cross which Paul describes as the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believes." (2) It binds men for ever to Christ by making them for ever dependent on Him.

The chapter on "Holy Scripture" will occasion some questioning. The author evidently is not so much at ease in it as when he is unfolding the teachings of the book. "One cannot help feeling at the close of such a discussion as this, that the Scripture may sometimes be prejudiced by our best-intentioned attempts to serve it. It has a greatness and power of its own which are most free to work when we approach it without any presuppositions whatever . . . Words which provoke antipathy and disputation, like 'authority,' 'infallibility,' 'inerrancy,' and so forth, had better be let alone by the preacher." And so had some other words which disparage and lower the very Book which the preacher seeks to expound.

Spiritual Blindness.

By MAJOR SETON CHURCHILL.

In the book of Zephaniah (ch. i. 17) the prophet says that "They shall walk like blind men because they have sinned against the Lord." He was here foretelling the doom of the enemies of God's ancient people. The Assyrians attacked Jerusalem in the reign of that good king Josiah, and God used them to humble the Jews for their many national sins, but He sent a messenger by his prophet to foretell the doom of the proud conqueror. But how true are those words for all ages, and for all nations. Sinning against the Lord, and against light, begets blindness, and this is true whether we consider the case of the unconverted or of the believer.

How often we see able, clever men, misleading the people. Their intellects are all right, their brain power is unquestionable. Whence, then, this fatal blindness? The answer is, "They have sinned against the Lord." I once heard of a very intelligent man who was spreading error, and one who was defending him said, "But you must admit he is a clever fellow." "Yes," said an old clergyman, "I will admit that, but let me ask you in return, When did you ever find the devil employing a fool to do his work?" Never was there a time when God's people had more need to consider this than at the present time. What with cheap literature, and largely-circulated newspapers and magazines, combined with a certain smattering of education, we are terribly exposed to the temptation of intellect worship. Anything that is original, and anything that is clever, can obtain a hearing, utterly regardless of whether the truth is being advocated or not. It is well then to remind ourselves that clever, intellectual men, who have wilfully sinned against the Lord, may become blind leaders of the blind, and the abler they are, and the nearer they have come to the truth, so much the more dangerous are they in their teaching.

The conscience is a tender thing, and can be easily injured. A man may know a certain course to be right, but he may also know that it is not popular. He is ambitious and wants to get on, coute qui coute, so in spite of his knowledge, he deliberately sins against the Lord in choosing, for the sake of present gain, the wrong path. How many young men of ability, starting in life, have to choose for eternity! God tests their reality by permitting the temptations of money, fame, honour, distinction, glory, and even fleshly sins, to assault the higher nature. To a man conscious of ability, it is so hard to resist the path which will bring the smiles and approbation of the many, and, like Moses, to choose "rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season."

But even in this life God attaches penalties to wrong-doing, and the man who deliberately persists in going the wrong path will find that by degrees the conscience becomes seared and hardened, and he loses the power of spiritual perception, and a fatal spiritual blindness sets in. It is inexpressibly sad to watch a man growing blind by degrees through some internal form of disease which does not affect the outward appearance of the eyes; but how much more sad is it to see this fatal blindness setting in spiritually. Externally the appearance remains the same, but the false steps and the sad blunders indicate the melancholy fact that spiritual blindness has commenced.

How often we see able people making fatal blunders, even in temporal things. They have taken the reins of guidance into their own hands, and so "they shall walk like blind men." The right path seemed a hard one on which to walk, and the wrong seemed so attractive, and so God permitted them to choose for themselves, as they would have "none of his counsel." Blindness even to their own temporal interests is the inevitable result of such wilful action. "Nay; but we will have a king over us; that we also may be like all the nations; and that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles," cried Israel of old. They wearied with the restraints of God's leadership, and longed to be like the surrounding nations. God answered their rebellious prayer, and, through the action of those kings "who made Israel to sin," they were dragged down to the level of the nations around them, and finally were taken into captivity. How the angels must have wept at this fatal blindness, so contrary to the true interests of the nation! "Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples; and they are written for our admonition," and yet, alas! how often we fall into the same blunders, and we see, as Baxter well puts it, "How often does worldly wisdom prove the height of human folly, when its dictates are substituted for God's Word and will!"

How watchful believers should be to guard against this spiritual blindness. How often temptation comes to God's children to lower their high standard, and to compromise with God's truth. If the temptation is yielded to, the results are certain. Sooner or later the keen, spiritual perception ceases, and they who once were strong as giants in the cause of truth, become like Samson, blind, and in their blindness cause sport for the enemies of God. These are sometimes the best friends of the Evil One, as they are trading on their past reputations, and thus they lead others astray. The time was when none had so clear a vision of spiritual things as they, and spiritually they were "a head and shoulders above their fellows," and of course they could see further. But imperceptibly they have taken lower ground, and instead of clearer vision, they have become "blind," for how can they see when surrounded by the mists and fogs of a worldly atmosphere? Ambition, love of ease, desire for wealth and comfort, love of popularity, and many similar temptations, account for many of the falls of God's people, as they have been the means of begetting spiritual blindness. It is not intellectual ability that can save any, but simple obedience to the leading of God's Word. "If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine."

PALESTINE IN BRIXTON.—In the Brixton Hall, Acre-lane, Rev. James Neil (formerly of Jerusalem, the well-known authority on Oriental manners) proposes, from March 5 to 15, to exhibit his diorama of Palestine life, which is at once artistically beautiful and realistically true. At Brighton some fifty thousand people viewed the Exhibition when it was not nearly so elaborate. Mr. Neil writes to us:—"All who wish to help in this unique and important Bible teaching and defence mission, should communicate with me at Hamilton House, Goldsmith-gardens, Acton, W., and I will send them programmes to distribute among their friends. The exhibition includes a raised map of the Holy Land, the first time an accurate model of an entire country has ever been shown. Among other sights is a series of helioscopic views, and a representation of every known Bible plant and tree; also a bird's-eye view of Jerusalem."

PIONEERING IN COREA.

A friend forwards to us a most interesting letter received from a lady missionary in Corea, descriptive of work in the country. After telling of important advances in temperance work, and giving an example of reclamation, the writer says:—

"Miss M.'s Corean teacher, who was baptized last April, died very suddenly a month ago. His funeral, and that of a little baby, were the first Christian burials there have been here in Fusan among the Coreans. The Coreans here place their dead above ground in straw cases, resting on a stand of wood. There they are left until the sorcerer has found a place in which he says the spirit will rest in peace; then the skeleton or the body is placed in a box and buried. These burying places, and straw cases, are always on the hillsides, and the country presents a sad appearance wherever you go.

"This teacher was buried according to Christian custom, the mother, the wife, the brother and cousin following. This funeral had a great effect upon the people here. Instead of the heartrending cries that take place at Corean funerals, the coffin was borne to the grave covered with wreaths, children walking in front carrying flowers. At the grave crowds assembled, and looked on in wonder to see all so peaceful. Afterwards we heard that the people said that the religion of Jesus must be true, to give such comfort at such a time. The wife and mother, instead of tearing their hair and howling, as is the custom at such a time, sat quietly down on the grass by the graveside while the service was read, and we sang several hymns—'The light of the world is Jesus,' and others in Corean.

"Since then, people who have been coming to the services day after day for months have had a great awakening, and our brother's death has done more than ever his life could have done. We have now eleven applicants for baptism. God has been so good.

"When we first came to live among the people two years ago they were very cautious about having too much to do with us, as foreigners had never lived in the midst of them before. But gradually they got to know us, as day by day we came into contact with them, and God has blessed and owned our work.

"It was a long time before we could get them into attending meetings regularly, as their only division of time is from one market day to another, and they know no Sabbath. Now our Sabbath services average in number, men, women, and children, fifty-seven, and we have a Sabbath school with thirty-five children attending regularly. This school is divided into three classes, the first class taken by myself, and the two other classes taken by Corean young men, both Christians, and both of whom have signed the pledge.

"I expect you have heard all about the war trouble here. There has been no fighting here in Fusan, but the Japanese soldiers were landed here on their way to the north. We have been too busy to take heed much, even of the reports that have been cheap and plentiful, and we have been much amused to see the different views different newspapers take as to this trouble in the East. The war in Corea has ceased. The Japs have driven the Chinese out of this country, and now they (the Japanese) have gone on to China, and seem to be carrying everything before them.

"What the result of all this may be it is hard to tell. We are praying that one great result may be that these Eastern countries may be fully opened up to the light of the Gospel of Christ."

THE BARCELONA PROTESTANT COTTAGE HOSPITAL is for the members of Protestant congregations and churches, for whom in the general public hospitals in Spain no privileges exist apart from the intolerant exactions of fanatical priests and nurses. The report for last year says: "As our Spanish patients, with a few exceptions, are members of our churches, we are able to report comparatively few cases of conversion or earnest inquiry. The truths of the Gospel and the Saviour of sinners have already been embraced. We have had a busy year. Fifty-one patients have been under treatment; 31 Spaniards and 20 foreigners, representing seven different nationalities." The work has increased, but the funds have fallen considerably short of meeting the year's expenditure. There should be no lack of help to keep the doors of the hospital open for the poor sick Protestants who seek its shelter. Communications should be addressed to Miss von Miecka, Thornton Hall, Stony Stratford.

The late Dr. A. J. Gordon.

A little more than a month ago Dr. Gordon celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his pastorate over Clarendon-street Baptist Church, Boston. The most distinguished ministers of all denominations in Boston, and the prominent Baptist ministers of the State were present. It was a fitting tribute to a princely man, and there was not a fulsome word spoken from the beginning to the end. Dr. Gordon was called upon at the close of the meeting, and spoke with his usual modesty, earnestness, and simplicity, and with an unusual degree of solemnity. He gave the whole of the glory to God and to the goodness of the people of the church for any success that attended his ministry. He deprecated very much the utterance of so many kind things about himself. He was not dead yet, and no one could foretell the dangers of the future. He only knew that in the past—and he was profoundly grateful to God to be able to say it—he had neither made shipwreck of himself, nor of the faith. Grateful as he was for the sustaining grace that had kept him in the path of obedience, he was still more grateful that, in these days of apostasy, he had been able to keep the faith once for all delivered unto the saints. The shipwreck of self was the loss of self, but the shipwreck of the faith might be the loss of untold numbers.

THE SHADOW CAST BEFORE.

At the time of this meeting, no one but himself thought of anything but a long life, and many years of increasing usefulness. Indeed, a proposition was made by Dr. Pierson at this very time to free him from the cares of his church for a year, that he might visit the mission fields of the world. Plans were laid, and some of them put into execution. It now transpires that at the time of the anniversary he had a very deep and solemn presentiment that his work was ended. This he made known to the strong, brave, and noble woman who has been such a help to him, and of whose goodness and loyalty he often spoke with evident delight. But her hopefulness of heart, and confidence in the message and mission of her husband, led her to attribute this impression to a worn-out body and an overtaxed brain. Not until the sudden collapse on Thursday, the last day of January, did the family entertain any thought of danger, although Dr. Gordon from the beginning calmly asserted his belief that he would never be permitted to serve his Lord on earth again.

He has occupied many positions of trust for years. He published the following, among other, books:—"In Christ," "Grace and Glory," "The Two-fold Life," "The Ministry of Healing," "The Holy Spirit in Missions," and "The Coronation Hymnal." Two books are ready to be issued from the press, "The Holy Spirit," and an Autobiography. His hymns will live as long as the English language continues a channel of worship. "My Jesus I love Thee" is almost as universally used in America as "Jesus, lover of my soul." Besides all these books he has been a constant contributor to various magazines and religious papers, and has edited The Watchword, one of the choicest religious monthlies in America. Every one of his books is of lasting value. The writer, having gone over nearly every point in the book on "The Holy Spirit" with the author, ventures to predict that it will prove to be the most exhaustive, the most suggestive, the most original, and perhaps the most startling work, on the blessed Spirit that has ever been written.

SHORT-CUT COLLEGE.

Dr. Gordon has been criticised for teaching "faith healing." The marvellous way in which he was led to preach and practise these things will be fully unfolded in the record of the Lord's dealings with him, soon to be issued from the press. He was also much blamed for establishing what has been called the "Short-cut College," to prepare men and women for Christian work. Now that he is gone, the facts connected with the founding of the college can be made known. It was not of his devising or choosing. It was thrust upon him, and was entirely of the Lord. The strangest part of it all was the way in which the money was provided. Up to the time of beginning the school, and especially the founding of Cary Home, he told the writer that he did not remember ever having had a single dollar given him for Christian work—indeed, no money had been given to him in any form whatever. But, strange as it may seem, as soon as the Lord laid the burden of this work on his shoulders, the money came pouring in from every quarter and even from persons whom he had never known, but who had become interested in him through his writings.

The Home that had been established when Mr. Moody was in Boston, for the benefit of reformed men, was a great burden upon his heart. He was much troubled about it, and laid the matter before the Lord in prayer, and immediately a letter came from a gentleman asking him to call. The writer of the letter was an entire stranger, an aged man who had been seeking in vain for a satisfactory place in which to put a large sum of money for benevolent purposes. The temperance work was provided for, the pastor's heart was released, and his hands were free for his college, pastoral, and evangelistic work.

Then the "Training School," as he modestly called it, became thronged with students at both the day and evening classes. These students began mission work in Boston, but during vacation went out into rural districts in New England, and God blessed their testimony in a marvellous way. Old church buildings, long neglected, were opened and repaired, school-houses and private homes were thronged, and conversions followed in numbers exceeding all expectation. When this unassuming man was urged to make these facts known, he turned with that emphatic look which he had when his course was decided, and said:—"No, I don't want that. If that were done, the men who do not believe in this work would say it was a method of getting money. It is the Lord's work, and as long as He wants it to continue He can supply the means. I did not begin it. I was crowded into it, and it is all in the Lord's hands." The way in which similar schools have sprung up all over the United States shows how the Lord was leading him, so that multitudes of labourers could be made ready to preach the old Gospel without modern marrings.

STUDY OF PROPHECY.

Dr. Gordon began the study of prophetic truth when at Jamaica Plain. As soon as he saw the Lord's coming as the great hope of the Church, it changed his whole point of view, gave him new motives in Christian work, made the Word of God throb with life and interest, and fired his heart with missionary zeal. His "Ecce Venit" is a clear statement of his views on this and kindred questions of vast magnitude. To him it was a matter of pity and amazement that men who professed to believe the Bible could not see the fact, the meaning, and the utility of this doctrine. His favourite expression was: "We are on the eve of this great event, and the leaders are as blind as bats. God has given us these truths to make them known. We must preach them." It was because of his study of prophecy that he has detected the evil lurking behind so many heresies that spring up in the vicinity of Boston. Many years ago he saw through the fallacies of "Christian Science," and wrote a tract upon it that has never been surpassed.

Dr. Gordon was not an organiser. He had no plans. He lived by the moment. He trusted to the Holy Spirit to organise and energise the church. He was a man of constant prayer. He would not undertake the slightest public service without first being alone with God. Many of his people had learned this blessed secret. Hence they all seemed to be led and guided by the one Spirit, and so it seemed that no important thing was forgotten. In all of its activities the church seemed to be marching in obedience to an unseen but everywhere-present commander. He believed in the Holy Ghost here and now; hence Clarendon-street became a centre of evangelisation for Boston and vicinity. Over forty-five revivals in neighbouring churches are clearly traceable to labourers from this church during the ministry of Dr. Gordon. Only a few weeks ago he continued the evangelistic meetings at Lowell, which had been conducted several weeks by Mr. D. L. Moody. In fact, he was always about his Master's business, and now he is in his Master's presence.

He was a great believer in the Bible. Its types and prophecies, its histories and numbers, were all alike inspired and full of meaning to his devout and reverent mind. Hence the freshness and attractiveness of his sermons and the power of his ministry. Few men in private conversation gave evidence of greater scholarship, broader culture, or wider reading than he: but in the pulpit he had such important duties and such a divine message that these things were never allowed to displace the One "whom he preached" — Jesus Christ and Him crucified. Scripture was compared with Scripture, doctrine was illustrated by type and Scripture history, until the Word of God seemed, under the alchemy of his mind, a treasure-house of spiritual gems. His striking paradoxes, illuminating antithetic statements, and terse Saxon simplicity, made the heart glow with gratitude, and it all came from his lips so easily, simply, naturally, and unconsciously that the hearer was impressed that it was the heart of a man unfolding its secrets, and not a heart parading its attainments. Surely "the lips of knowledge are a precious jewel."

Since the death of Bishop Brooks, no death has created such profound emotion in our city. His sympathies were broad, and his power for co operation with others seemed to be limitless. There was scarcely a benevolent or religious organisation of Boston that was not officially represented at his funeral. Few men had a kinder heart or a more helpful hand towards the poor, and in him the bravest, boldest, and most believing advocate fo foreign missions amongst us has passed away.

THE FUNERAL SERVICE.

These services were in keeping with Dr. Gordon's life. It was a rare occasion, both in its largeness and spirit. For three hours before the service the people of Boston, to whom he was so dear, surged like a river through the spacious church to obtain a last look at his beloved face. At 1 p.m. the vast congregation of friends gathered, some of whom had come hundreds of miles, a large proportion being ministers of the Gospel of all denominations.

The first address was given by Dr. Mabie, sec. of the American Baptist Missionary Union, indicating Dr. Gordon's relation to Missions. This relation had been most intimate and useful, and was properly presented first as showing the spiritual root and quality of Dr. Gordon's Christianity. His pulpit was in Boston, but his congregation and parish was the world. His church was saturated with the missionary spirit. In the vestry hangs a list of the missionaries now on foreign fields, who have gone out from this church, supported by its prayers and contributions. As indicating this missionary spirit, a company of young men in the church the day after Dr. Gordon's death subscribed several hundred dollars as an expression of regard for their pastor. For fifteen years this busy pastor, with the care of a large city church upon him, was chairman of the executive committee of the Baptist Missionary Union, whose record and influence place it in the forefront of this missionary age. But though far-sighted he did not overlook those near at hand, as shown in the many city missions which radiated from his church, which had come to be the embodiment of his own self-sacrificing spirit. Not only the name of the great missionary Adoniram Judson was his, but his missionary mantle as well, and nobly did he bear it.

Dr. Andrews, President of Brown University, presented another important side of Dr. Gordon's character, viz., his evangelistic influence over college students. For several years Dr. Gordon has been called to conduct evangelistic meetings in the principal American colleges, and few possess the intellectual as well as spiritual gifts and tact, which made him successful in reaching students.

Dr. Joseph Cook, so widely known for intellectual as well as spiritual power, gave a most effective address on Dr. Gordon's defence of the central truths of the Bible. His position in this respect was so conspicuous as to be almost unique in this age of Bible-belittlers.

Last came Dr. A. T. Pierson, who seemed filled for the occasion. His long and intimate spiritual fellowship with Dr. Gordon fitted him to interpret his character. And well did he improve his opportunity.

The services were three hours long, but the vast congregation was apparently ready for as many more hours, so inspiring was every word and moment. The proof of God's presence was manifested in two remarkable ways—first, in the desire intensified in every heart present to live a more consecrated Christian life. There was a special expression of this desire by a large number of preachers present. After the addresses the ministers retired to the vestry, and there, in confession and prayer, rededicated themselves to a more spiritual ministry. The second proof of the presence of the Holy Spirit was the support given to the bereaved family. The widow and children were the centre and focus of the large assembly, in which every heart trembled with tender sympathy. And yet scarcely a tear dimmed their eyes, and even a bright radiance wreathed the face of the noble woman, who during more than thirty years has stood beside Dr. Gordon, his equal, in her sphere, in every good word and work. This seemed unaccountable to many, but the explanation came in answer to a friend's question to her: "How could she bear it?" in these words: "What is Christ for, but to sustain in such an hour as this?" The last whispered word of Dr. Gordon was, "Victory." But after all, it was not a greater victory than the same Christ gave his noble wife and children over sorrow too great for human words to express. W. M. Lisle.

Another correspondent writes:—"For some little time before Dr. Gordon's departure he realised that the end was near, and gave instructions accordingly. To Mrs. Gordon, among other things, he said: 'I would like these hymns to be sung,' and they were. First came, 'Abide with me, fast falls the eventide'; second, 'Lord, if he sleep he shall do well'; third, 'The sands of time are sinking'; lastly, came the one he himself had written and so many thousands have sung:

My Jesus, I love Thee, I know Thou art mine.

As this was sung the audience were fairly melted to tears, especially as they struggled through that beautiful last verse:

In mansions of glory and endless delight,
I'll ever adore Thee in heaven so bright;
I'll sing with the glittering crown on my brow,
If ever I loved Thee, my Jesus, 'tis now.

The remains were placed in a receiving vault until the spring, when they will be removed to New Hampton, N.H., the little town where Dr. Gordon was born in 1837. The Doctor's son Ernest had been busily engaged superintending the creation of a summer residence for the family there. At first he said concerning his father's removal by death, 'I shall never want to go there again,' but the thought of the doctor being buried there changed that decision, and added new interest in the place."

SOUND WORDS.

Dear Sir,—Of late years, and among many teachers in the Church of God, there has spread abroad certain uses of important pivot words, which tend to confusion, and, in various directions, lead to low and unworthy conceptions of high and spiritual realities.

Among these words I select the following as most frequent and very harmful:—"Incarnation," "Inspiration," "Christ," "Divine."

It would tend to clearness of teaching if such words were used in a strict manner.

Let Incarnation be used always for the indwelling of the Word in human flesh. Then we should know the intention and meaning of our preachers and teachers. Let us cease to speak of the indwelling of the Holy Ghost as "incarnation"; let us for ever drop the misuse of the word—very commonly heard nowadays—as representing the dwelling of Christ in the individual believer. Both these conceptions confuse men, and detract from the uniqueness and grandeur of Emmanuel—the Word Incarnate.

As to "Inspiration," ought not Christian teachers to limit its use to the inbreathing of the Holy Spirit, and even to that inbreathing in Holy Scripture?

In our common parlance the word is now applied to wellnigh every warning, encouraging, or guiding influence, which comes to us from music, pictures, words, examples of heroism, or endurance. Even good men speak of "inspiration" as possessed by Byron, Browning, or Shakespeare. This lowers the conceptions of multitudes and detracts from the unique grandeur of the inspired Word of God.

Again, ought not a far more distinct use of "Christ" than is now common, be insisted on? Let it be applied only to the blessed Christ of God, Men speak of Christians as "Christs" as "Christ men" as "multiples of Christ." In time it comes to pass that "The Christ" is measured by so much of his power and likeness as are seen in Christians; and, once again, comes in confusion, and the minimising of our thought of "The Anointed One."

Once more, ought faithful men in their teaching, ever to diminish the force of the word "Divine" by using it to qualify persons or things—efforts of genius or outpourings of human speculations? It is very commonly done, and I fear is never done except to the lowering of thoughts touching the character, attributes, and majesty of God.—Very faithfully, John Gritton

Trinity Chapel, Hackney.

THE TEACHING OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

The usual way of explaining the words, "Lay not up for yourselves, etc.," is to place the emphasis upon "yourselves": but it is hard to see how a man can have a fortune laid up in his own name, on which he lives in a certain style, which gives him status and worldly influence, and say that it is not laid up for himself. If for wife and children, and he manages, though a rich man, to be as humble and trustful as if he were poor, then is it a good thing to pass on to them something that was dangerous to himself? Experience goes against it. Clarkson said: "There is no greater calamity that that of leaving children an affluent independence. The worst examples in the Society of Friends are generally amongst the children of the rich." Further, if "for yourselves" be interpreted so as to admit of the accumulation of wealth, there still remains the whole of the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount, with which that interpretation has to be reconciled, and the task seems to be a hopeless one.

To go on to other passages, they all seem to agree better with the literal view than with any other. "Give us this day our daily bread" agrees with it; so does "Leave all and follow Me"; so does "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the Kingdom of God"; so does "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things that he possesseth"; so does the commendation of the widow who cast into the treasury all that she had; so does the command to the apostles and disciples to go forth on their missionary tour with no money. The parables of Dives and of the Prodigal, and the expulsion of the traders from the Temple are, in spirit and scope, rather on the same side. The parable of the talents is not in point.

The distribution of goods at Pentecost was surely made under the influence of intense brotherly love, and of a strong persuasion that it was according to the will of Christ; and although, at a distance of 2000 years, we can coolly discuss the action, and prove that it was a mistake according to the laws of political economy, and due to ignorant enthusiasm, perhaps Barnabas, could we but have a talk with him, would be well able to vindicate what was done. Had not the Holy Ghost, who had more to do with framing and guiding the Church at the beginning than He perhaps has ever had to do with the writing of economical treatises, really some share in inspiring it? That the widows should afterwards have been jealous as to the fair distribution of the common fund proves nothing against the fund, but possibly proves something against its management or against the widows themselves. That Ananias and Sapphira pretended to a generosity they did not feel only proves them to have been what they were—false.

It may be argued with some force that if it was an appointment of the Holy Ghost for everyone to give up all his property, the apostles would have insisted upon it. Is not this, however, one of those higher things in the divine life, to which men have to be led by a deep enjoyment of the redemption which we have in Christ Jesus? The high standard of the first church may be an indication of what has been done, and shall yet be universally done.

THE EPISTLES.

Turning to the Epistles, we have 1 Tim. v. 8. "If any provideth not for his own, and specially his own household, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an unbeliever." Dr. Harris thus expounds—"The sacred writer, in giving directions relative to the maintenance of widows, distinguishes between such as the Church should relieve, and such as should be supported by their own relatives. And concerning the latter he makes the statement in question. Whence it follows, first, that the provision contemplated by the apostle is not a laying up beforehand for future contingencies, but a present supply of present necessities, a simple maintenance of needy relatives from day to day. And, secondly, that instead of countenancing parents in the accumulation of great fortunes for their children, he is speaking of the maintenance which children, if able, should afford to their aged and destitute parents. With the subject of providing for families, therefore, the text in question has nothing to do. Rightly interpreted, we see that it enjoins, not accumulating, but giving."

2 Cor. xii. 14: "The children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children," are words used in illustration of Paul's contention that as he was the spiritual father of the Corinthians he had a right, an obligation was upon him, to live and spend himself for them: they are not used in relation to temporal things.

Again: "Godliness with contentment is great gain; for we brought nothing into the world, neither can we carry anything out; but having food and covering we shall be therewith content. But they that desire to be rich fall into temptation and a snare and many foolish and hurtful lusts, such as drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is a root of all kinds of evil, which some reaching after have been led astray from the faith, and have pierced themselves through with many sorrows. But thou, O man of God, flee these things." Contentment with the necessaries of life and laying up hardly agree. Then again: "Be ye free from the love of money, content with such things as ye have; for Himself hath said, I will in nowise fail thee, neither will I in anywise forsake thee." This absolute dependence upon God and laying up hardly agree.

OUR SAVIOUR WAS POOR.

Whatever be the right interpretation of the various passages quoted, it is certain that our Saviour and all his immediate followers of whom any account is given in the Scriptures, lived a life of poverty. "The Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." "Poor, yet making many rich," was the boast of all the apostolic school. One quotation from the Fathers may be given. Cyprian says: "Each one studies how to increase his patrimony, and forgetting what the faithful did in apostolic times, or what they ought always to do, their great passion is an insatiable desire of enlarging their fortunes."

Nevertheless, there are distinct traces of rich men—not many—in the churches of Paul's days. The rich man, with a gold ring and fine clothing, spoken of by James, was probably only an idle dandy, looking in to see the Christian synagogue. But Paul writes to Timothy:—"Charge them that are rich in this present world, that they be not high-minded, nor have their life set on the uncertainty of riches, but on God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, that they be ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on the life which is life indeed." How came these rich men into the Church? By conversion. Why were they not obliged at once to surrender all that they had? Because, for one reason, they would only have done harm by such wholesale and indiscriminate squandering, unless the churches everywhere had continued on the original foundation of that at Jerusalem. They were therefore called to the task of lightening the load of their riches by liberal, wise, and constant giving. They were now to be taught that neither they nor their money belonged to themselves, but all to their Lord, in whose service they were to be spent. Christians, however, were not to become rich while in the fellowship of the Church.

Missionaries and ministers are not expected to profit by their calling; the huge mass of men are poor; the best work of the world has been done by the poor. Where, then, is the advantage of hoarded money? J. P. Gledstone.

NEW FOREST GIPSY MISSION.—Mr. W. Bullen, of Heathfield Farm, Bransgore, Ringwood, writes that one day last week he visited twenty-four gipsy families within a radius of thirty miles, finding most of them suffering from the severity of the weather. The visits were welcomed, the Word of Life was willingly listened to, and gifts of clothing and food were highly appreciated.

QUA IBOE MISSION.—The annual meeting of this society, which is doing useful work in West Africa, was held in the Young Men's Christian Association Hall, Belfast. Mr. Lawson A. Browne, who occupied the chair, referred to the splendid work that had been done during the year that had passed. The society was in a very flourishing state. Mr. Hamilton, the secretary, read the annual report, which stated that a second mission station had been established on the banks of the Qua Iboe River. The town of Okot has been chosen, and it is within easy distance of ten towns of 500 inhabitants each. The little flock at Qua Iboe has remained steadfast during the year, and at present no less than forty-two members are in actual communion. The society reported with pleasure that Mr. John Kirk had been appointed to be the third missionary in the district during the year. The financial state of the society is pleasing, there being a balance to its credit in the bank.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MARCH 3.—ROM. II.

Without Excuse (1-16).—Rid yourself of the beam in your eye ere you essay to rid another of his mote. God judges according to truth, not by appearances but by essences. He is not less long-suffering than just. Let his goodness work towards thy repentance. The Lamb is in the midst of the Throne. (7) Our redemption is by the precious blood, but the rewards of the after life, and our enjoyment of all that God means by life, are conditioned on our obedience. Be patient in well-doing: work good: obey the truth. (14) There are two classes; the one has the law disclosed in the Revealed Word, the other as transcribed in conscience. There is only one law, the basis of God's throne, but its transcript is different, recorded either on the granite slab and the printed page, or on the conscience and heart. At the last, therefore, God will judge all men by the same standard.

The Profit of the Outward (17-29).—The Jew rested upon the position given him by the privileges and rites of Judaism. But his religious life had shrunk within these externals, as a seed rattles in its pod. The Apostle shows that personal irreligion or unbelief will neutralise all the benefit which outward rites might confer: whilst humility and faith will compensate for all the disadvantage which would accrue from a heathen origin and environment. The Jew will become as a Gentile, unless he have the spiritual counterpart to outward rites, and Gentiles will become as the chosen people of God, if they have the circumcision of the heart, and the devotion of the soul. Let us ask for that grafting into the true olive-tree which shall enable us to partake of its root and fatness.

MONDAY, MARCH 4.—ROM. III.

What Advantage hath the Jew? (1-8).—The Jewish people had a great treasure entrusted to them for the world. This position as stewards for mankind conferred on them special privileges, but also exposed them to searching and awful discipline for their unfaithfulness. (5) It is wonderful how human sin has brought out the qualities of God's love, as we could not otherwise have known them, but we must surely remember that this cannot excuse our sinnership. We are still adjudged guilty, though our guilt be the foil for God's glory.

None Righteous (9-19).—These are quotations from the Psalms, which establish the sinfulness of the Jewish people, and if they are brought in guilty, how much more the Gentiles. Notice that the absence of right feeling towards God works out in evil feeling and action towards man.

God's Righteousness (20-31).—This passage is the Magna Charta of Redemption. The law is a looking glass and not soap. We mistake when we use it for purposes of cleansing. Through it we know sin. God's righteousness is God's way of putting us right. He first puts us in right relations with Himself and his holy law, and then brings us into a right condition. This way of peace is unto all, and may be the blessed portion of all, but faith in the Saviour is an indispensable condition. Directly we believe this is ours. (25) The propitiatory, or mercy-seat, was the meeting place between God and man. Such is the Lord Jesus in his atoning sacrifice. (28) The works of the law cannot justify, because we can never fulfil its holy demands. We must accept justification as the free gift of God's grace. But being justified, we become animated by love to the Justifier, and are filled by the Spirit, so as to do the very things which the law enacts. The law is excluded and yet established.

TUESDAY, MARCH 5.—ROM. IV.

Faith Reckoned for Righteousness (1-8).—This great principle was notably true in the case of Abraham. He was treated as righteous, and thus was admitted into the friendship and fellowship of God. But these great blessings were in no sense earned by his works. The stress is so completely laid on his believing God. There is no mention made of merit, or wage-earning deeds. Besides, it was all of grace, and there would have been no room for grace if Abraham had come to this position by any exertions of his own. David confirms this. And we may cheerfully learn that instead of painfully scaling the mountain by effort, we are borne to its summit on the wings of faith.

Upon the Uncircumcision also (9-17).—The reckoning of righteousness took place before the patriarch was circumcised. It is obvious, therefore, it is independent of the outward rite; and therefore the promise pertains as much to us as to the favoured people that sprang from Isaac. We may be blessed with faithful Abraham, and become the heirs of the promise which was given him for the world. The Jew and Gentile are therefore within reach of brotherhood, if they are sons of faith. This spiritual relationship shall yet belt the world with love.

Strong in Faith (18-25).—The man of faith dares to look at the apparent impossibilities of the case. (Note the omission of not, v. 19, R.V.) Thence he turns to the Divine promise, and as he does so, and considers the might and love of the Promiser he becomes strong. Ah! the might that flows from God unto the weakest through the slender channel of faith! Always reckon on God being able and faithful. He cannot be overborne by difficulty. He will not fail to come at the predestined hour.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 6.—ROM. V.

A Golden Staircase (1-11).—We stand in grace, we look for glory. Our standing is secure, apart from our feelings or works. It is ours through union with the living Christ. But being in the house, there are several storeys to which we may climb. The successive ascents are marked by "not only so" and "much more." Let us not be content with the foot of the ladder when all its rounds of light invite us. (3) In tribulation look out for the special grace which grows near, as the dock-leaf to the nettle, and exemplify the special characteristic to which you are called. (5) We have the heaven of love within, and this is the sure pledge of the heaven of fruition and vision. (6) If so much was done for us before we could co-operate in any way, how much more will God complete his work when we are no longer dead and hostile, but keenly alive and eager. (10) What music there is in that phrase, "saved in his life"! For "your life is hid with Christ in God."

The First and Second Adam (12-21).—A series of parallels and contrasts. The parallels, that each has affected the whole race, "the many," by one act of theirs. The contrasts, that the acts and results were so different. Disobedience contrasted with righteousness; and death with the gift of righteousness, which is eternal life. Mark the phrases used of the death of Christ; the grace of the one man; one act of righteousness; the obedience of one. Note also that our attitude must be one of reception. We receive the atonement, or reconciliation; we receive the abundance of grace, and reign in this mortal life as we hope to reign for ever (10, 17). (19) The many are made righteous in the sense of being delivered from the guilt of their father Adam, and being eligible to all the blessedness of His righteousness, if only they will believe in Jesus.

THURSDAY, MARCH 7.—ROM. VI.

Our Standing in Sanctification (1-11).—We are one with Christ by a living faith. Where He is, we are. Since He is living on the resurrection side of death, we are there also, in the sight and purpose of the Eternal God. The Head and members cannot be dissevered. (4) This union with Christ in death and resurrection is the meaning of the rite of baptism. (5) But a rite can give us no more than the sign and symbol of the spiritual blessing signified. (6) So far as our standing in Christ is concerned, the old man is entirely put away. It was left on the cross. The body of sin is no longer our bond and chain. But we must by faith, and the grace of the Holy Spirit, make real in actual experience and walk these blessed spiritual facts. (10) What a marvellous conception that the nature of the ascended Lord is ever turned towards God, to become the vehicle through which He may pour his life towards us. (11) This is the daily reckoning of faith, apart from emotion. Fact; faith; experience; walk.

Our Presented Members (12-14). — We must definitely present all our nature to God for his use, and that every faculty of our being may be a weapon in the great battle against sin which He is waging. Let your life be monopolised by God, and there will not be room for the ill use of it by Satan.

Servants to God (15-23).—All serve some higher power, the question is, Which? (16) Our true ownership, whatever our profession, is detected by our life. We belong to the One whom in a crisis we obey. Mark the gradations in service. Service to sin leads to uncleanness, iniquity, and death, Service to God leads to righteousness, sanctification, and eternal life. (17) Let us run our life into the mould of holy precept, as the obedient metal into the sand cast. (19) Each day present yourself to God; that is, maintain and accentuate the position you assumed when you first gave yourself to Him for the fulfilment of his purposes through your life. (23) We have our reward in the consciousness of the present possession of the life which is life indeed.

FRIDAY, MARCH 8.—ROM. VII.

The Parable of Marriage (1-6).—We were married to the law as our first husband, and seek through union with it to bring forth fruit unto God. Every convert endeavours, in the first impulse of the new life, to produce by the energy of his own resolves and efforts such a character as will please God. Cain brings the fruit of the earth, won by his own toils. (5) But we are very disappointed with the result. Our best endeavours result in failure. The sinful passions seem too masterful, and break through our members in outbreaks which cast us into the very dust. (6) Then suddenly we realise that the death of Christ has put the cross between us and the endeavours of our self-life. We see our self-life, in every form, even in its good endeavours, nailed to the cross with Jesus. We realise that death has come in between us and our first husband, and we are free to contract marriage with the blessed Lord, who, by his indwelling Spirit, effects that which our own energies had failed to secure. We are joined to Him that was raised from the dead, and bring forth fruit unto God.

The Efforts of the I-life (7-25).—Self is always our difficulty; before we find Christ we try to justify ourselves, and afterwards to sanctify ourselves. See how full these verses are of I, and how little there is of the Holy Ghost. The idea of what is good is always beckoning to the soul like a beautiful vision, but there is no power to realise it. It seems as though the spirit were bound to the dead-weight of the flesh, which forbids it soaring. We must learn by repeated failure to yield ourselves to the Holy Spirit, to realise in us the blessed ideal placed before us in Christ.

SATURDAY, MARCH 9.—ROM. VIII.

The Spirit of Christ within (1-17).—He makes us free from the iron yoke of the law, by substituting the incentive of love. We give ourselves to walk according to his promptings, and find that He enables us for all He commands. (8) The flesh may be in the believer, but the believer is not in the flesh. He reckons himself dead to it, but alive to each prompting from the Spirit. (11) Life and peace and righteousness, like white-robed priests, go to and fro in the temple of the spirit. (13) We shall say Yes to Christ and No to self. All the windows of our nature are open to the south aspect, and closed to the north. (15) The witness of the Spirit is not apart from our spirit, but with, and in, and through it. The ability to cry Father is the result of his blessed work. If you can look into God's face and only say Abba, with the lisp of a babe, it is certain that the Spirit is within, only let Him have unburdened scope and sway. (17) All that God has is yours, don't ask for trifles.

The Three-fold Groaning (18-27).—Creation groans for freedom from the serpent's trail; the saints groan for the resurrection of the body, and the full enjoyment of redemption; the Spirit groans within us for the saints—i.e., there arises from Him a perpetual yearning for the sanctification and unity of the Church, and this is the will of God. Let Him groan through your prayers.

Love that will not let us go (28-39).—We love God because He has loved us. Much may arise to weaken our faith and love, but our salvation does not depend on what we feel to Him, but on his feelings to us. These can never alter. He has done too much for us already to permit Himself to be robbed of the result of all his gracious dealings. If one link of the chain is in your hear it will draw in the rest.

REGIONS BEYOND HELPERS' UNION.—Dr. Harry Guinness and Miss Lucy Guinness have prepared a very attractive illustrated booklet, "Our Helpers at Work," giving a statement of the organisation of the Union, and describing its wide sphere, interest and work. Friends of the many operations which have Harley House, Bow, for their centre, will specially appreciate these pages. Those who are desirous of helping forward the work of the East London Institute, or the Congo Balolo Mission, should procure this little work. Another issue in connection with the Union pamphlet series is "The Outstretched Hands of Lololand," by Peter Whytock, of the Congo Balolo Mission. (Publication Department, Harley House, Bow, E.)

The Rich Young Ruler.—Mark x. 17-27.

Golden Text Matt. vi. 33.

By comparing the three accounts given of this incident we learn that this man was young (Matt. xix. 22); that he was a ruler (Luke xviii. 18), a term "which probably signifies here, president of the synagogue"; and that he was a man of beautiful moral character (Mark x. 21). Young, religious, moral, he is a type of many to-day. All such may learn from this story what they need, and the peril to which they are exposed; especially if, like this young ruler, they have the advantage of riches also.

His Hopeful Approach to the Saviour (17).—In this his example is worthy of imitation. He was anxious about eternal life. His great possessions did not satisfy him. There were deep spiritual needs which wealth could not meet. His morality and his religious service in the synagogue were equally powerless. There was a lack (Matt. xix. 20), which he longed to have removed. Was he not wise? Is not any man unwise who forgets the future in the enjoyment of the present?

His Anxiety brought Him to Christ.—In this, too he is an example to others. To whom can we go but Jesus for the settlement of such a question? See John vi. 68. He was no trifler, for he came "running," as one in real earnest. He was humble, for he "kneeled to Him," as to a Great Teacher, whose directions he was eager to learn, and thought himself willing to follow. By such an approach he showed that he was willing to brave the scorn of others. There were very few rulers who were willing to kneel to this Teacher. And he showed an eagerness to use a passing opportunity. Jesus was on his way to Jerusalem. The question must be answered now, or not at all. Are we prepared to imitate him in his courage and promptness?

Our Saviour's Treatment of Him (18-21).—The form of the reply is determined by the character of the question. The ruler was the victim of a threefold mistake, which our Lord corrects. First, he supposed that there was good in mere man. That is the explanation of our Lord's strange words (18). To call Him "good," and yet to think of Him as only man, is a foolish and empty compliment, which He does not care to accept. And they who pay the compliment are the victims of the delusive idea that eternal life can be the reward of good in man. Next, he thought to attain this goodness by works. Hence our Lord's quotation of some of the commandments, and the promise in Matt. xix. 17. He was not contradicting his own teaching as to salvation by grace through faith. But a man who hopes for salvation by works can only learn his mistake by having revealed to him what the law actually requires. And, lastly, he thought he had kept the law (20). Possibly he had in its mere letter. But all such profession must be tested. Our Lord applies the test (21); with the result that the man stands convicted of breaking both tables of the law. His wealth was evidently occupying God's place in his heart; and his boasted love to his neighbour was disproved. He thus has light concerning his true condition—will he accept it?

The Result (22-27).—Two alternatives have been before him. On the one hand his wealth; on the other Jesus, eternal life, treasure in heaven. Did he ever make the wise choice? The story does not tell us. All we know is that he went away sorrowful, and, at that time, unwilling to forsake all for Christ. The teaching our Lord gives after his departure does not mean that a rich man cannot be saved. Alike in the Old and New Testament there are instances of men who have been wealthy yet godly. But He does teach that a rich man is exposed to peculiar difficulty. There is such a tendency for the heart to be set on money, for the possession of wealth to engender a spirit of pride, for a man's riches to be a kind of hedge around him, that his salvation is difficult, and only possible to God, to whom nothing is impossible. The camel was the largest animal with which the Jews were acquainted. To speak of such an animal passing through a needle's eye (25) is to represent an impossibility.

But it would be a mistake to suppose that there are no other hindrances. Whatever binds men to a life of sin is as the riches of this young man. Desire for wealth, ambition to be great, and to be held in esteem by companions, some form of pleasure or of sin—any of these may as effectually keep the soul from following Christ.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.—In the February issue of Night and Day a prominent place is given to an announcement of a proposed self-denial week on behalf of the Homes, to be held from March 10 to 17 next.

HARRY'S NOTE-BOOK.

One day, while Harry Winton was playing with his sister Alice, a curious thought came into his mind. Stopping suddenly in the middle of the game he was playing, he ran up to where his mamma was sitting on the garden-seat, and climbing up beside her, exclaimed, "Oh, mamma, is it really true that the great God who lives away up in Heaven, keeps an account of all we do? Does He hear every wrong word we say, and see every time we are disobedient? This morning you read in the Bible that at the last we are to be judged by the things that are written in God's Book, and ever since I heard about it I have been so frightened lest I do anything wrong."

Mrs. Winton was greatly astonished to hear her bright little boy speak in such an earnest manner, but glad that the good seed of God's Word had sunk into his young heart. "Yes, Harry," she answered, "God does keep a strict account of all our words and actions, and were we to be judged by what is written down against us, we could never hope to enter Heaven. But, do you not remember that we read about two books? Though one book contains a record of all our sins and failures, yet the names of all those who believe that the Lord Jesus died to take away their sin, and who therefore love and trust Him, are written in the other book, 'The Lamb's book of life.' Thus, no matter what is written down against them, they are safe, because they have been redeemed from sin and its consequences."

Harry looked much brighter, and felt more happy after this conversation with his mamma, and shortly afterwards said, "Mamma, you might give me a little note-book, so that I could write down all the naughty things I say or do. I'm sure it will help me to be good, for, you know, I do not want to have to write down many bad things." Mrs. Winton could not help smiling, but readily promised to give Harry what he wished for. So next morning, after breakfast, Mrs. Winton gave him a neat little note-book with pencil inside, saying, "Here is the little note-book you asked me for, Harry. I have written your name on it, and also this verse on the front page:—

> My thoughts, before they are my own,
> Are to my God distinctly known;
> He knows the words I mean to speak,
> Ere from my opening lips they break.

"Remember, you must let me see what you write in it every day." "Yes, mamma, I will," answered Harry, as he took the book, and politely thanked her for it. All that day Harry was most watchful of his words and actions, being kind and obliging to everyone, and quick to do as he was bid.

When evening came, he went into a corner of the parlour by himself, and took out his pencil to write down his day's shortcomings. How puzzled he was! He could not remember having been rude to anyone, nor of having said or done any wrong thing. Yet he tried hard to blame himself, so that he might have one entry at least, for he did not feel altogether happy in having no sin to record. He at last resolved to write down something, but conscience checked him by whispering, "No Harry, that won't do; it is quite wrong to write what you know is untrue. It is much better that you should not write anything." Harry was a straightforward little fellow, so, heaving a sigh of regret, he slowly slipped his pencil into the side of his notebook, and went to find his mamma.

As he entered the room, Mrs. Winton looked up, and said brightly, "I see you have brought me your note book." Harry seated himself beside her, and without saying a single word, placed the book in her hand.

Much to her surprise, when Mrs. Winton opened it, she saw no writing save her own, the clean white pages were as unsoiled as when she had given him the book in the morning. "Can it be possible," thought Mrs. Winton, "that Harry has too good an opinion of himself to write down even one single fault?" "Has my little boy been perfectly good to-day?" she asked. "If so, he must be very happy." Harry felt uneasy, and looking up into Mrs. Winton's face, said earnestly, "Mamma, I cannot keep an account of myself. I am not aware of having said or done anything wrong to-day, yet I know that God is perfectly holy, and wishes us to love Him with all our heart, and He may have seen many wrong things in me. So, after all, I will leave Him to take note of all my doings, and pray to be forgiven for all the wrong I've done."

Harry expected to see a smile on his mamma's face, but instead of that she answered gravely, "I'm glad, Harry, that you've come to such a wise conclusion. You never could have been able to write down every erring thought, foolish word, or wrong act; because the human heart is deceitful above all things. But those whose names are written in the Lamb's Book of Life will ever strive to live pure and holy lives; and then we have the precious assurance that 'The blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, cleanseth us from all sin.' He who will be our Judge is our loving Saviour. Be brave and true to Him, Harry, and ever strive, in his strength, to overcome evil, first in your own heart, and then in the world around you, remembering the Lord's encouraging words to his faithful servants, 'He that overcometh shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the Book of Life; but I will confess his name before my Father and before his angels.'"

A YOUNG BELIEVER'S A.B.C.

A All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all.—Isa. liii. 6.

This is our Alpha. We must start here, realising that we have "strayed," and because we would have our "own way" are lost; and having disobeyed God's law we are under condemnation—wretched and despairing. God, loving us even in our sins, provides a substitute for us in the person of his Son Jesus Christ, and "lays on Him" our iniquity—the Just dying "for the unjust to bring us to God" (1 Peter iii. 18).

B Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid.—Isa. xii. 2.

Then if "the iniquities of us all" were laid on Christ, mine were included; and, believing this, I too can say, "though Thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and Thou comfortest (R.V.) me." "God is my salvation." I must rest here.

(a) My salvation is of God. (John iii. 16.)
(b) It is a personal salvation—"my."
(c) It is a present salvation "is."

Past—"Thou wast angry."
Present—"God is my salvation."
Future—"I will trust, and not be afraid."

C Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in Him; and He shall bring it to pass.—Ps. xxxvii. 5.

I am now a pilgrim and stranger (Heb. xi. 13), seeking the "city" that is "to come" (Heb. xiii. 14). I shall need a guide, and the Lord has promised to guide me with his eye (Ps. xxxii. 8), and guide me always (Isaiah lviii. 11); and as I must "walk by faith and not by sight," I will "commit my way unto Him," knowing that He will "order" my "steps" (Ps. xxxvii. 23), for "He knoweth the way that I take," and will guide me "even unto death" (Ps. xlviii. 14).

The above are the first three sections of a booklet by S. E. Burrow, entitled The Young Believer's Alphabet, in which all the letters are made pegs on which to hang Scripture counsels, accompanied by very helpful reflections. (1d. W. G. Wheeler, 51, Paternoster-row, E.C.)

SACERDOTALISM.—A Synodical Committee of the Presbyterian Church of England, in a letter to church members, rehearses Evangelical teachings regarding Christ and His Church, and the authority of Holy Scripture. The committee concludes:—"Since true spiritual life is the best guarantee for the preservation of sound doctrine, and the surest safeguard against error, we most earnestly request the ministers, elders, and members of the church, to unite heart and soul in fervent prayer for the Holy Spirit, and in other endeavours for the promotion of genuine faith and holiness throughout all our congregations, to the end that we may all 'grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To Him be the glory both now and for ever. Amen.'"

VICTORIA HOMES FOR WORKING MEN.

Twelve years ago a few servants of God, observing the opportunities for Christian testimony and helpfulness to be found among the stream of emigrants passing through the port of London from the Continent, and all parts of the United Kingdom, opened at Blackwall an Emigrants' Home. Having had the privilege of being present on the occasion, I well remember the earnest prayer made that many might be saved. Abundant have been the answers. Numbers have been led to see Jesus as their Saviour and God, and a very remarkable work has been done at the Home. Now, however, emigration has practically ceased, and consequently the Home is in abeyance, as an emigrant resort—although it is still in full use as a centre of work among the poor.

Out of this Emigrants' Home grew the Victoria Homes for Working Men. These stewards of God, burdened by the sad condition of the common lodging-houses, resolved to provide, on a Christian basis,

A MODEL LODGING-HOUSE FOR MEN.

The first was opened eight years ago, in Commercial-street, Spitalfields, and this proved so successful that, four years ago, a second was opened in Whitechapel-road. Each of these accommodates 500 men, and they are usually full. From the outset, the whole work has been under the charge of Mr. Wilké, who seems to have been raised of God for such service. To talk with him is to feel that he knows his men—their trials, difficulties, and dangers—and understands how to deal with them and rekindle fresh hope. It is encouraging to find that, once started, these Homes have been self-supporting. Not only have they afforded comfort and a chance of cleanliness and restoration to thousands of unfortunate men, but God has used them to the salvation of very many. Gospel and other services are held on Sundays, and almost every night in the week, as well as Bible-classes. Attendance is not compulsory, but it is very general. The Sunday meetings are crowded. Moreover, an East-end nursing sister, Miss Baskett, aided by Miss Keeley, voluntarily give three evenings a week to attending, bandaging, and ministering to the residents, many of whom, from want and neglect, are suffering from sores. While the idea of charity is very emphatically disclaimed, every care is taken to show Christian kindness in ways these poor men appreciate. Not only have many been won to God, but not a few have been restored to independence and to their families.

Yet further a new departure has been made this winter at No. 1 Home (Commercial-street), in opening, on the lines of the People's Kitchens in Berlin and Vienna, the large hall as a restaurant, providing FOOD AT THE CHEAPEST POSSIBLE RATE.

I have seen and tasted the soup, bread, meat, and vegetables, and, at the prices, these are simply wonderful. This again is not a charity, but self-supporting. About 1100 of the very poorest come here daily (besides the 500 lodgers) for shelter from the terrible cold, and invest in halfpenny and penny meals. It is heartrending to see mothers with two or three children coming in, sharing a pint of soup (one halfpenny) amongst them, or able-bodied men going halves on a penny dinner. During the hours from 12 to 2 p.m. there is a continual stream of the poorest working men and women coming in to rest, to escape from the cold, and to eat their dinners instead of hanging in and about the public-houses.

Much might be added and many thrilling stories told—but the work is a personal effort to aid the poor and commend to them the Gospel. Those who opened the Homes desire so to leave them, as a personal service for God. There is, however, one way in which all might aid—by sending gifts of clothing. Books, periodicals, anti-infidel tracts, Hospital and Surgical Aid Society Letters are much needed. Many cannot obtain work for want of decent attire, and to such cast-off garments are a real boon. Mrs. Wilké would be glad if two or three additional ladies would come now and again to speak individually to the people, or to sing the Gospel. Such quiet testimony has again and again been blessed. Will readers also pray that the way may be made clear to the committee for the opening of a similar place for poor unhappy women who need sadly such a Home? Communications should be addressed to Mr. A. Wilké, Emigrants' Home, Blackwall, E.

THE FEMALE ORPHAN HOME.

Here again I find another outcome of personal sympathy and service. In 1855 a Christian man, who spent much of his time in visiting the poor, found a young family left orphans by the death from cholera of father and mother. There seemed nothing for them but the workhouse, from which he resolved to save them. The two elder girls he got into a Home, but could find no place for the youngest, unless he was prepared to contest an election. He preferred to put the child in a Christian family, paying himself for her support. This act of Christian love led by-and-by to the reception of others, and the founding of the Female Orphan Home. First opened at Walthamstow, this was, after several removals, settled on freehold premises at Tangley Park, Hampton. On the death of the founder, Mr. Joseph Stevenson, in 1869, the care of the Home was undertaken by Mr. Daniel Cooper (widely known in connection with the Rescue Society), under whom it grew and developed. Since he was called to his rest his son, with a strong committee, has carried on the Home. It may be interesting to note that Chignell's "Guide to Charities" assigns the Home the first place on his list for economy, the cost of maintaining an orphan being shown to be but £14 per annum. This is largely owing to careful management, freedom from rent charge, and the simple country life the little inmates lead.

The Home has room for seventy girls, from four to sixteen years of age. There are now sixty-five in the Home. All the inmates have lost their fathers, many their mothers also; all are most needy, some being cases of great urgency. It is to be regretted that the committee find it necessary to say that "Many suitable candidates have had to be rejected through insufficiency of funds in hand. Where have those deserving cases gone to seek a more open door? If only some surely they could not have resisted the cry of the widow and the orphan!" This Home provides Christian care and training; ensures suitable education; and prepares most of the girls for domestic service, placing them out in situations as they attain a suitable age. The superintendent reports that the testimony received as to the Christian life and satisfactory conduct of the majority of the girls who have gone out to service is such as to fill her heart with thankfulness.

This brief notice of a quiet Home, of which little is generally known, may stir some fresh helpers to come to its aid, and thus enable those in charge to gather in more little ones who sorely need a home and loving care. The secretary, Mr. J. D. Cooper, 79, Finsbury Pavement, E.C., will gladly afford any information desired.

DISTRESS IN LONDON.

Dr. Harry Guinness, of Hanley House, Bow, E., sends some very sorrowful details of cases of destitution found in that neighbourhood by the lady visitors. They are anxious to relieve this distress as far as possible.

Mr. Charles Montagu, of the King Edward Schools and Mission, Spitalfields (4, Bedford-square, E.), has been making great efforts to cope with the want and privation in his district caused by the severe weather. Soup dinners have been given daily, and relief provided in the shape of bread, grocery, coal, blankets, etc. He desires special help in these efforts.

Mr. Ned Wright, 19, Greenhill-Park, Harlesden, N., has opened in Herron-road, Willesden, a refuge for destitute men, where they can get temporary relief, combined with Gospel instruction. Many men tramping from London into the country in search of work pass that way, and these receive special attention. Mr. Wright is in need of funds for maintaining this effort.

During the last fortnight Rev. F. B. Meyer and his helpers at Christ Church have given dinners to 2840 children and relieved 400 adults, carefully visiting those who were not personally known.

A GOOD TEMPLAR officer on board H.M. ironclad Hawk says that seventy-three seamen stopped their grog allowance to begin the year on teetotal lines.

Y.M.C.A. ADVANCE IN GLASGOW.

Extensive additions to the Christian Institute, 70, Bothwell-street, Glasgow, are proposed to be erected on vacant ground on either side of the present Institute. The central pile in the enlarged building will remain as the headquarters of the Glasgow United Y.M.C.A., where the daily noon prayer-meeting is held, the home of the Sabbath-school Union, and the Glasgow Foundry Boys' Religious Society. It is a busy hive of Christian work. The Institute owes its existence very largely to the efforts of Mr. D. L. Moody in 1874, and since its opening in October, 1879, it has been the centre of much of the Christian work in the city.

During Mr. Moody's last visit to Glasgow in 1892, he inaugurated the work of the Bible Training Institute. The following year Mr. John Anderson accepted the Principalship, and has carried on the work with marked success. A large house has been rented in Blythswood-square, where there are twenty-eight students in residence. The work has developed so much that it has been found necessary to erect premises capable of meeting the growing demands of the Institute. Before Mr. Moody left Glasgow he pledged several friends to help, should such a building be erected. Lord Overtoun has generously given the site, which is valued at about £15,000, and there is in hand for building a sum of £12,000. The building will cost £18,000 and the furnishing about £2500, so that fully £8000 is still required to open free of debt, which it is desired to do.

The Bible Training Institute forms one wing of the new building, and will have accommodation for ninety young men and forty young women. The object of the Institute is to train for home and foreign missionary work, and the course extends for two years. It is proposed to add an additional year for students who desire to have a slight knowledge of medicine. The bedrooms will all be single, so that the students will have quietness for private devotion. Ample accommodation has been made for class-rooms, dining-rooms, study, and reception-rooms. Provision has been made for comfortable quarters for the principal, and the matrons and servants. The offices of the United Evangelistic Association will also be found here.

The other wing will form a "Y.M.C.A. Club," or boarding-house for men. There are 1500 members of the Glasgow United Y.M.C.A. living in lodgings, and hitherto the Association has not been able to make provision apart from the recommending of ordinary lodgings. The desire of the promoters is to help young men when they first come to the city. Those who have passed through the experience know something of the loneliness of being in lodgings with no one to speak to and few friends to visit. These first few weeks of a young man's life in a large city are a time of great temptation. A limited company has been formed with Lord Overtoun as chairman, and it is intended to launch the scheme on a sound commercial basis. The capital is £25,000, and in a private way nearly half that amount has been subscribed. The chairman is taking all the ordinary shares (5000). These will not bear dividend, and will ultimately fall into the hands of the Y.M.C.A. when they are able to take the property over. £6500 are being issued as preference shares, with a dividend limited to 5 per cent. £13,500 of debentures bearing 4 per cent., are being offered to the public. Christian friends having unused money which they desire to invest should write to Mr. W. M. Oatts, Christian Institute, Bothwell-street, Glasgow, for a prospectus.

The building will have about 200 bedrooms (mostly single), which will be let to young men from 5s. per week and upwards. There will be four large handsomely furnished sitting and writing rooms. The dining-room will occupy the basement floor, and will be open to the public during the day. There will be a lift on both buildings, and they will be lighted throughout with electricity. The directors have agreed that, for the present at least, there will be no smoking-room in the new club.

MISSION OF HELP TO THE SUFFERING POOR.—Under this name a little mission has been started by Miss A. F. Perram, whose touching sketches of work among the poor have appeared in our columns. She sends out her first report, which contains many pathetic details of suffering and of relief ministered. We hope Miss Perram will find many helpers in her good work; her address is 38, Westbank, Stamford Hill, N.

A DANISH COUNTESS.

While recently the guest of Pastor Carl Viggo Dukert, Minister of the large Methodist Episcopal Church at Copenhagen, it was my privilege to make the acquaintance of the Countess Adeline Schimmelmann, whose labours for the lost, and whose consequent persecution, has been widely discussed in Danish and German newspapers. Readers cannot fail to be interested in episodes of a life partly spent as a favoured guest in the Kaiser's palace, and later as a sane prisoner in a lunatic asylum. Perhaps no event has for years so stirred the hearts of the friends of the Evangelical Missions in Central Europe as have the revelations now brought to light in reference to this amiable and devoted labourer in the vineyard.

The Countess is the daughter of the late Lehnsgrave (Count) Schimmelmann, who was of Danish birth, but who also had large estates in Germany and in America. He resided mainly on one of his German estates. His daughter, the subject of this sketch, is now about forty years of age, is of noble feature, and of a tall and commanding figure. I have heard her speak the German, Danish, and English languages with fluency—her utterance in the latter, though marked by a continental accent, showing a surprising facility of choice of the most appropriate expressions.

When a lovely girl of about seventeen years of age she was brought within the sphere of the German Court, and of the old Emperor William, and became a favourite lady of honour to the Empress Augusta. During succeeding years she had no settled religious convictions, but not unfrequently had serious thoughts about her soul. Yet she saw no way of life but that included in a scrupulously careful observance of the stated religious formularies and of the most careful proprieties of life—a task which she performed to the satisfaction of all except her own inward monitor, which at times told her that something was lacking.

Talking with the Empress about the submerged tenth, she obtained Her Majesty's influence to allow her to go to visit some of the prisons. It was while seeing the miserable state of the prisoners that her heart swelled with the feeling that even these were fellow-creatures who had souls to be saved; and this led her to look into her own spiritual condition and to seek to love Christ in spirit and in truth. Eventually, as she herself told me, she found salvation; not through the love she felt for Christ, but through her acceptance of the love Christ had manifested for her—and for all sinners. From that time her disposition and influence led her to labour for the reclamation and conversion of the poor and the lost, and it was in the performance of this Divine mission that she, while blessing others, became herself a victim.

About ten years ago the Countess went to spend a few weeks for rest on the Island of Rugen, which constitutes the north-east part of the Prussian province of Pomerania. This was when she was some thirty years of age. Here her kindly disposition brought her into close contact with the fishermen from the opposite shore, and ultimately with their families, most of whom lived in a miserable manner, largely owing to their irreligion and intemperance. Gradually she was led to minister among them, to compete with the local taverns by providing coffee and lemonade free for the boatmen, to rebuke and eliminate their habit of using profane language, and to point them to the Saviour of souls.

Her influence so deepened and widened that her stay was extended into years. With her own moderate portion of her father's fortune—which, of course, mainly went to his sons—she created facilities for mission work. She got the two nearest public-houses reduced to one, and sought to get the authorities to close that, but they would not, so she took the house over and became the licensed innkeeper—albeit she put the remaining intoxicants away in the cellar, and daily dispensed coffee and other temperance beverages. She built a seamen's home, with day and sleeping rooms, adding stables, etc., for visitors' horses. The praise of God took the place of the profane word, till no improper utterance ever reached her ears.

The work spread till, in a few years, over thirty villages round—including the neighbouring Islands of Greufswalde-Oie—became permeated with her reforming influence. The provincial authorities heard of it, and came to see and to wonder. Her desire to see additional and more suitable buildings erected and the work extended met with a warm response, and a considerable fund was raised, to which she added from her own already reduced means—for she had spent much, while she denied herself all luxuries, and lived mainly upon the bread and fish as used by the common people, who loved her and called her "mother."

The Countess had in the meantime adopted some orphan children—including twins of six years old—and she took about a dozen boys to her Sailors' Home and School to educate them, and utilised some of them later as helpers in her mission.

The news, however, of the beautiful Countess who had gone from the sunshine of the Imperial Court to the drudgery of a life among the island fisherfolks, and had become a common innkeeper amongst them, had created an indescribable feeling of amazement and disgust in the noble circles amidst which she had previously moved, and most of all in the minds of her relations, notably of a brother of hers, who was quite convinced, or appeared to be quite convinced, that she was hopelessly mad. Some who had heard of her work (but not those who saw it) said they had thought her mad, and should still think so but for the marvellous results. Her new would-be helpers urged that when the new buildings were erected the sale of beer must be resumed, and they could not understand her—to them—insane objections to this proposal.

During an interval, however, the Countess, after nine years' sojourn on the islands, came across to Denmark to visit a little estate she had there, and it was while in this neighbouring country that a startling experience awaited her. Her brother is younger than herself, and inherited more property, and is a Danish subject. He had her seized as being insane and imprisoned in a cell, and then removed to an infirmary. This was on February 21 of last year. Here she suffered such indignities as may not have seriously affected inmates of a different nurture, but which were most likely to drive her into the madness with which it was assumed she was afflicted. Her solicitude for her adopted children—the twins were now ten years old—was answered by assurances that they were put in charge of a woman who would give them a very different training.

After a time Dr. Knud Pontopidan certified to her insanity, and she was committed to the lunatic asylum by the Court, which appointed others to take charge of her property. She asserts that her brother paid the doctor 500 crowns out of her money for his certificate of her insanity, and that a pony and carriage which she had bought, and other of her belongings, were made away with during her incarceration.

She was forcibly removed from the infirmary to the lunatic asylum on March 20, and the medical superintendent gave full attention to her case. When she told him of her work among the fishermen, he said it was no wonder people thought her mad. In a few weeks, however, he was convinced she was perfectly sane, and he therefore certified her sanity and discharged her from the asylum. The Dowager Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg intervened for the adopted children, and got them restored to her.

The Countess is determined soon to return to her former field of labour, regardless of any possible future consequences. She, however, has reason to know that her work has been marred and mutilated by those who have sought to "improve" upon it. Her means have been lessened, and her strength overstrained—although her splendid physique appears unimpaired, and her complete self-possession seems to have only been increased by the heroic Christian fortitude with which she has met and triumphed over her terrible trials. She feels, however, that a work covering many villages and embracing many hundreds of families in its sphere of influence, needs the further aid of a male evangelical missionary, who must, moreover, be a determined opponent to the use of malt liquors and all other intoxicants. With such a helper—one well versed in the language—furnished by some society at its own cost, and working on non-denominational Christian lines, there is no doubt that many of the broken threads may be picked up, and the remarkable reformation of the past be even exceeded in the future.

The work of the Countess has been described in a pamphlet written by a German minister—Otto Funke—and published in Copenhagen, as have several small books written by her, including one entitled "Smaating" ("Small Things"), which contains religious essays and short poems composed by her while a prisoner in the infirmary, and subsequently in the lunatic asylum.

THE HOME OF INDUSTRY.

The workers' gathering last week was a specially symbolical gathering. Unexpected by us, toilers came from east and west, increasing lines of care and toil marked on every brow. The time was all too short to tell the wonders of God's grace and faithfulness, or of the deliverances from disease and death oft. We had a record of souls blessed in prison in Russia and in America; of the distribution of thousands of Bibles by one faithful follower of the Lamb; and then the touching tale of modern escape from slow martyrdom in the wilds of Siberia, from the lips of a young lady, a Russian Stundist, now sheltered by Sweden. We were besought to pray for the young Czar, that he might speedily hear of this crushing oppression in his newly-acquired territories.

It was like a leaf out of the Acts of the Apostles to listen to the veteran warrior, Dr. Baedeker, telling how the prisons in these northern lands were open to him for visitation. Then Mr. Charles Inglis testified to open doors in America among criminals.

Many of the listeners this cold evening were young candidates, preparing for the fields of North Africa, India, and China. There sat a young lady doctor, having just passed her final examination and gained her diploma. By her side was one, through her three years of hospital training; a third was last week "joyfully accepted" for India.

How good of the Lord to send us his true and tried handmaid, Miss Goodall, C.M.S. missionary from Lagos, now starting the third time for the Yoruba country. Her subject was mainly the results of much prayer offered by those of us who tarry at home by the stuff. No pen could describe the wondrous tracing of God-opened doors, the daily needs, the prostration of health, the souls delivered from heathen darkness into marvellous light. This message from a devoted heart was worth a thousand lessons of book-lore from those who have never known what it is to be co-workers with God.

The hour of nine was nearing when Mr. Eoll, from Port Said, thrilled us as he told of the terrible depravity of that field of service, and also of instances of conversion through reading the Scriptures. These messages from varied quarters of the globe were by no prearrangement of ours. They were surrounded and followed by prayers overflowing from many hearts, burning with increased love to their missionary brethren, present and absent.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

LABRADOR.

The report for 1894 of the work of this branch of the Mission shows many reasons for thankfulness and encouragement. The second or most northern hospital, at the entrance to Hamilton Inlet, was completed and in full swing all the season, under the care of Dr. Willway and Sister Williams. The previous year the severity of the weather and exposed position of Indian Harbour, i.e., the island on which the hospital is built, prevented the landing of the sections in which it had been sent up, until too late to get it into working order. However, all was left ready for 1894. Accidentally, early in the season the hospital caught fire, and but for the strenuous and timely efforts of the fishermen living near must have been destroyed. Fortunately, H.M.S. Cleopatra visited this year as far north as this port, and, through the kindness of the commodore, a body of bluejackets was landed, and they soon repaired the damages. The hospital was well used, and did excellent work, saving not only much suffering, but several valuable lives.

The influence it was able to exert over so scattered a population is of untold value: it forms a centre towards which all converge, and all try and visit at least once during the summer. One of these lonely settlers does not think 100 miles even too far to come for this, his only opportunity of getting skilled advice or help. So the Gospel reaches many who could otherwise but rarely hear it, and that in a way well calculated to reach the hearts of these poor people. As a centre for distributing the literature sent out, it was also greatly blessed. Many indeed were the fishing schooners, which going up and down the coast, visited the island for "some readin'." A room detached from the hospital for services is very badly needed. When dying patients were in the wards, Dr. Willway found it impossible to use the large room downstairs, from the well-known fervour with which fishermen use their great lung power in joining in the hymns and services—the mission earnestly hope to be able to send out some corrugated iron for this purpose. Battleharbour Hospital, standing on Carilon Island, is rapidly becoming the centre of this vast country. The fame of the hospital is spreading, and bringing patients not only from the East coast and from the Straits of Belle Isle, but also from Northern Newfoundland. Altogether 1306 patients were treated, including fifty-one in-patients, and twenty-five severe operations under anæsthetics.

In the face of the extreme distress which has overtaken the fishermen through the total collapse of the banks, and the failure of so many supplying firms, it will drain every resource of the mission and the colony as well to meet even the worst of the suffering that is now inevitable. Dr. Grenfell's visits to the farther stations were sadly curtailed by the unfortunate striking of the new mission steamer Sir Donald on a sunken rock. The steamer was the gift of Sir Donald Smith, who himself spent some twelve years of his earlier life on this coast. The hospital vessel Albert gallantly towed her 400 miles to St. Johns, where she is undergoing extensive repairs. It will be necessary entirely to sheath in the hull with hard wood, for the liability to strike drift ice or even the rocks, on so badly charted a coast, led Lloyd's surveyor to report her unfit for her special service till this should be done. This will involve considerable expense. Dr. Bennett and Sister Carwardine, of Battle Hospital, did this year the greater part of the distribution of the warm clothing so generously sent out. The fishermen are all alike very poor, and while many were really unable to provide even sufficient food for the long winter, many more could not obtain anything like adequate warm clothing. These warm things were indeed sermons of practical love, and are now proving an inestimable boon to hundreds in the rigour of an Arctic winter—in some cases it was literally "naked and ye clothed me." At the present moment thousands of Newfoundland and Labrador fishermen are face to face with absolute starvation owing to the financial failures. The nurses and doctors hope to leave early in May and rejoin Dr. Willway, who has remained in Labrador all the winter. He is travelling north with dogs and sleigh, as far north as Hopedale, the southernmost Moravian station. The Moravian missionaries and their Eskimo on the northern coast very keenly felt the loss of Dr. Grenfell's visit this year, and many poor sick and injured had to go untreated on account of it.

Thus in many ways the Gospel is being spread among these our own kith and kin in the isolated and far-off stations of this Arctic coast, and the workers were allowed to see again some at least take that definite step before their comrades, which announces to the world in which the fishermen move that henceforth they "are not ashamed," and intend by the Grace of God to live for the Lord Jesus Christ, not only as their Saviour in death, but also as their King in life.

The Evangelist.

THE ANONYMOUS GIFT.

Five years ago a man entered a London saleroom, where an auction was going on. He wanted to purchase two or three things, and after bidding for several, only one of which was knocked down to him, he thought he would leave. "Not much use my staying," he said to a small old man who was standing by his side; "there seems to be a favoured 'ring' of buyers. Have you been successful?"

"I am not here to buy or to sell," said the little old man. "Thirty years ago I attended a sale in this very room, and I bought something by accident then which made my fortune."

"What!" exclaimed the other. "That interests me. I shall stay."

"No need to do that," was the other's reply. "Here, without money and without price, is the very thing you want. As often as I can I come here and offer to strangers what I found that day in 'Lot 72' when I had got it home." The old man held out a square parcel as he spoke, and the other, seeing the shabby coat he wore, and noting the mild expression of his countenance, at once set him down as a harmless lunatic.

"Very kind of you," said he. "Not dynamite, is it? And is it to be an anonymous gift—this source of all true riches?"

"How strange!" said the other. "You have given it its true name. It is the source of all true riches, and though the donor wishes to be anonymous, you will find the gift is not. It is a signed draft, made payable to you on a bank that will never break."

Something in the speaker's earnest tones convinced the other of his sanity; but now he questioned the gift, not the giver.

"I wish you would speak plainly," he said. "If it is a thing of value to yourself, you have no right to part with it. If it is of value to me, you should prove that I may safely take it."

"It is of value, inestimable value to me, but the more I prove its worth, the more I wish others to share it. Its value to you will depend on your use of it. I am aware I speak ambiguously to a stranger, but I do so because the offer of a free gift involves a certain amount of delicacy. You might have profited by this gift as I have done; therefore, my first words were guarded. Your reply assured me that I might offer it to you, and now I tell you that you may safely take it. It is the Word of Life."

The other looked disgusted; he spoke contemptuously.

"Pooh! I might have guessed it was a tract, or something of the sort. I call it a liberty to deceive a stranger as you have done, and I shall not take the book. Give it to one who needs it."

"Then I again offer it to you, and wish you good day."

The stranger slipped away, leaving the parcel on the other's arm, where he looked at it askance muttering,

"Look here! What shall I do with it? Well, I suppose there will be no harm in taking the rubbish home to look at."

He took it home and showed it to his wife. She laughed.

"What fools there are in the world," she said. "I find I've plenty to do when I mind my own business, but they must be after everybody else's. But it looks a sensible enough book," she continued, turning over the pages idly.

"Just like a woman," laughed her husband; "judging by the outside."

"No, I am judging by the inside this time," said the woman; "judge if these are not good, sensible words: 'No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other.' That's just how you felt when Barber asked you to work for him in Mr. Holt's time; you despised Barber, and you saw you couldn't do it and be true to Mr. Holt."

The man was smoking. He took the pipe from between his teeth:

"Here, let's have a look at it," he said, guardedly, as became his superior wisdom. "I've always thought the Bible so unpractical."

"How could you know unless you've read it?" asked his wife.

"Well, I'm going to read it; then I shall know," he snarled.

"Here, Ellen!" he called out, an hour later, "I believe this Book is a regular 'find' after all. I believe the old chap was right, and that it's going to make our fortune, too. I've gone back to that chapter where you first looked, and this is what it says," and he read aloud verses 30 to 34 of the sixth chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel. The man and woman looked at each other.

"I see; we've got to seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness first," said she; "that sounds unpractical, after all."

But the man saw farther than the woman. "Not if you want to live a good life," said he, "and that is what this Book makes you want. The old chap was right—its value to me, personally, depends on my use of it."

"Don't leave me out in the cold, Harry," said the woman.

And now I must shorten my story. Many things in the Book puzzled these two, and as they did not yet go to church, chapel, or meeting, the puzzling grew, until the woman suggested that her husband should go and find the "anonymous donor" at the auction rooms. This he did, and found the old man at his business of soul-winning. He readily consented to help them, but when he had heard from them how they stood, he simply said,

"You want no help of man. Just take these things to God—prayer will bring the answer you need."

God is his own interpreter,
And He will make it plain.

Which He did. These two found it was unconfessed sin that stood in the way, and that the King of Righteousness could reign in their hearts only when all the unholy traffickers of sin and Satan had been expelled.

When they found that they had really become children of God in Christ, they did not sit and coddle their souls until they grew morbid and fearful (at such times clamorous doubt finds an entry); they just set about doing as they had been done by, so that many more rejoiced in the knowledge of God and the salvation of Christ through their instrumentality.

Much more could I write of their faith and works and joy; but those who know God will understand; and those who know Him not I would most earnestly invite in the words of his servant, Psalm xxxiv. 8:—

O taste and see that the Lord is good:
Blessed is the man that trusteth in Him.

THE SCRIPTURE GIFT MISSION.—In a notice of the work of this Mission last week, it was stated that Mr. Walters is "prepared to deliver five thousand copies of John's Gospel in Spanish, carriage paid, to any address in Spain or South America for £5 5s." The number should have been one thousand. The books, beautifully illustrated, are published at cost price at one penny, and then there is the freightage. Further particulars may be had from Mr. Walters, 84, St. Paul's-churchyard, E.C.

NOTES FROM MELBOURNE.

About the middle of December a conference for the promotion of spiritual life was held in Wangaratta, a pretty central town in the North-Eastern District of Victoria. It was organised by Mr. Pearson of that town, who, with others, received much blessing at the Geelong Convention this year. For several days the town was lively with visitors, and the very sight of so many people several times a day, from early prayer meeting till evening gatherings, marching about with Bible in hand, it is said, was made a blessing. It was a time of real spiritual quickening to many in the town and district, as well as to others who came from all directions to the convocation. So the work begun by Mr. Grubb is not likely to die out in Victoria.

Rev. John McNeill, who has done much to carry out the Geelong programme started, or at all events stirred up, by Rev. G. C. Grubb, has recently returned from a missionary tour in Western Australia, in connection with the Presbyterian Church of Victoria. He is spending a couple of months in evangelistic mission work in Victoria, after which he will probably return to Western Australia. His booklet, "The Spirit-filled Life," with an introduction by Rev. H. B. Macartney, of Caulfield, seems to be well disseminated through the country. It will, doubtless, be the means of leading many to a more devoted Christian life.

Rev. John McNeill, after a six months' tour through the Australasian Colonies, left Melbourne by the Himalaya on January 19, intending to visit some places in India and do evangelistic work there. The new penny undenominational religious newspaper, The Australian Weekly, gives an account of an interesting interview with the Scottish evangelist, prior to his departure, from which it appears he had been well received throughout the colonies, and had, generally speaking, been well assisted by ministers and laymen. I quote one comforting sentence: "We might speak of hundreds upon hundreds of definite testimonies as to conversion and recovery from backsliding."

Miss Sutherland, who has long been engaged in rescue work among the waifs and strays of Melbourne and the fallen sisters in the slums there, in connection first with Scots Church, and later as agent for the Presbyterian Assembly, has recently made a fresh start on undenominational lines, and carries with her the sympathies, prayers, and monetary assistance of the community generally.

It is pleasant in travelling to meet with Christian workers going about the country to stir up Christians or awaken the careless. Mr. William Wishart, a Melbourne business man, is frequently on the move, either holding services among the Sunday scholars or wakening an interest among the people to have Bible lessons reintroduced into the reading-books of the State schools of the colony.

Rev. W. G. Marsh, who, when visiting London in 1879, was general secretary of the Melbourne Y.M.C.A., has for some years past been connected with the Church of England in Victoria as a clergyman, having been settled for some time in one or two charges. For the past year or two he has been travelling throughout the dioceses of Victoria, preaching on behalf of the Home Missions of the Church. Although in these depressed times it is a most arduous undertaking, Mr. Marsh keeps up his bright, happy style, and seems to be successful in securing the help required for carrying on the work.

Some eight weeks ago, Mr. Field, barrister, from Sydney, held a week of special services in Albury, N.S.W. It was very successful in its results. Ever since a daily early morning prayer-meeting in the Episcopal Church has been held and attended by members of various denominations and their ministers. Several young people were definitely led to Christ, or so aroused at the meetings as since to decide, and go on in a quiet and constant profession of godliness.

The Y.M.C.A. of Melbourne has, like nearly every other institution there, passed through a time of "tribulation" of late years, and some little time ago were compelled to leave their magnificent premises in Bourke-street, being unable to meet their engagements in regard to it. They have retired for the present to more limited accommodation in Collins-street. Meanwhile, the Salvation Army has been enabled to secure the Association buildings, and hopes to obtain the money to purchase it shortly, having got it at a price far below its original cost. It will be a magnificent headquarters, and is to be opened with great ceremonies.

Mrs. Harrison Lee, of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, continues to carry on mission services in the Colonies. She has recently returned from a successful tour in South Australia. Calls come to her from all directions. Her evangelistic addresses are much enjoyed. She has a particularly earnest and impressive manner, and preaches a complete salvation through Jesus Christ our Lord. Addresses on temperance and the Lord's return are also delivered by her.

MONMOUTHSHIRE'S BITTER CRY.

That men, women, and children are not starving by thousands in the eastern valleys of Monmouthshire is largely due to the magnificent work of relief which is being done by the Pontymoile Undenominational Christian Mission, under the honorary superintendence of Mr. T. M. Wintle. Never before has such disastrous depression affected the tinplate industry, upon which the great majority of the population depend. Beside the present gloom the darkness of past days is as the shadow of smoke compared with a thunder-cloud. A year ago a representative of The Christian visited the eastern valleys, and put before our readers a picture of the helplessness of the people. Again came the cry, "Come over and help us." I have been up and down the valleys; I have questioned men on the snowy mountain-side; I have listened to the sad story of wives whose bare homes are eloquent of privation; I have gathered the independent testimony of shopkeepers and public men, and the burden of their wail is: "Times were never so bad; work is unobtainable; hunger and cold are the abiding guests in the homes of the unemployed."

The immediate cause of this terrible condition of things may be briefly restated. Since the great Welsh coal strike of August, 1893, some of the tinplate works have never restarted, and as the trade is sadly depressed in every quarter, there has been no chance for more than the merest handful of men to get fresh employment, either in their own district or in distant towns. Thus some of the men have been out of work the whole time, hoping against hope that the works would restart, picking up what casual employment they could, but in the main fighting a hand-to-hand battle with hunger and death, in some cases to succumb, too proud to parade their suffering, killed by hunger and despair.

WORK UNOBTAINABLE.

The difficulty of the situation has been accentuated by the fact that the works at Pontnewydd, which have given partial employment to about 600 men, were stopped completely a week before Christmas. Pontymoile is idle, Pontnewydd is idle, Pontypool is idle. There is no work in the district; and women have told me, with tears in their eyes, that their husbands have tramped through Monmouthshire from morning till night without food, and have failed to obtain work of any kind; while a man whom I questioned at one of the free meals said he tramped to Staffordshire through the snow, hoping to find work in his own county and among his own kin, but found no chance of employment, and therefore came back to the wife and bairns.

ARE THE MEN WILLING TO WORK?

Verily. One told me with delight that he had been able to get a job clearing snow from a mountain road, and added, "Hundreds would be glad of the chance"; another, with beaming face, said he was about to start in one of the pits. He was indeed happy, for it should be mentioned at this point that about 150 workers at the Torpentwys Pit had been added to the ranks of the unemployed by the closing of one vein. The men would help themselves if they could; they are all honest, intelligent, and respectable; many of them are God-fearing and patient, though their worldly lot is hard. If our hearts ache for the sufferings of these poor folk—and who could listen unmoved to the simple pathos of their stories?—we cannot but feel a glow of spiritual elevation as we thank God for the noble unselfishness which He has implanted in them. Go where you will, you may learn of deeds of self-sacrifice—of the weak aiding the helpless, of the hungry feeding the starving. It is because these poor folk have done, and still do, all they possibly can for each other that with earnestness, with confidence of a ready response, I plead their cause.

THE WORK THAT LIES NEAREST.

One case is very much like another; there are little variations, but the main details are the same. The husband has been out of work perhaps two months, perhaps twenty months; there is no work to be had; the rent is heavily overdue; credit is exhausted; and days sometimes go by without a bit of bread passing the lips of the parents. Fortunately the children have been able to obtain daily meals, for these have never ceased at Pontymoile since August, 1893, and they have also been in operation at Pontypool and Cwmffrwdoer for some time past. Three weeks ago parents' meals were started at Pontypool and Pontymoile, on alternate days; but they will be continued daily so long as funds are forthcoming and the acute distress continues. In many cases the meal given by the Mission is the only meal that fathers and mothers get; therefore I was justified in opening this article by saying that the Mission relief alone is saving many people from death. Nothing can be more economical, nothing can be more effective, nothing can be more sympathetic, than the methods of the Mission. I have visited the free meals to children and adults, and with regard to the latter, am bound to say that they are good not only for the feeding of the body, but for strengthening the hearts and reaching the souls of the people. It is possible to give bread and break the recipients' heart, but here we feel that the true spirit of brotherhood is abroad, and the words of cheer and spiritual comfort, the heartfelt prayer and the look of sympathy have done what food alone could not do—saved them from despair.

Avonus.

Mr. Wintle writes:—"Several letters are to hand showing that readers of The Christian are under impression that a strike is on here. Please remove this impression. There is no strike in Monmouthshire. The men have been given greater concessions than any in the trade. There is no demand for tinplates, even at present prices, which are lower than ever known before."

THE GOSPEL IN MEXICO.

I have invited all the missionaries in Mexico, of all denominations, to meet in Toluca, April 3, 4, and 5, in a conference on the Holy Spirit. I expect a large attendance. We offer free entertainment to all, and I have secured unusually low rates on the railroads. I am just in receipt of a letter from Mr. D. L. Moody saying that he and Mr. Sankey will be with us. Our hearts are greatly rejoiced. We need and are seeking an enduement from on high. We long to see a revival throughout Mexico.

I have been receiving many Gospels from different friends in England. I have also received thousands of tracts and Scripture cards. These I have used with good effect, and already I have seen the blessing of the Lord on this work. I could use thousands more of Gospels, tracts, and cards if I had them. Let our friends continue to pray for us and to help us. I would be glad to have some good spiritual tracts or books bearing on the work of the Holy Spirit, to give to the different missionaries who come to our meeting in April.

The Toluca Orphanage has been open since January 1. The Governor of the State is the president of the board of directors. We take only children without father or mother. This is the only orphanage in the Republic that is non-Roman Catholic, and supported by private contributions. The first church I organised when I came to Mexico has become self-supporting. They have a native pastor whose salary is paid weekly. I was with them the other Sunday, and four were received for baptism. Words of cheer come from every direction.

Slowly Mexico is receiving the Gospel truth. Mr. Pascoe, an Englishman, formerly worked as a missionary in this city. He did a great work with his pen and in preaching the Gospel. He died a few years since, leaving a son now some seventeen years of age, who longs for an education to fit him for preaching the Gospel. He is not a member of my church, but is an exemplary youth, and any friend who feels like helping him would be doing a good work. I would agree to look after the matter in any way possible. I can secure him free tuition in the State College; £2 sterling per month would cover all his expenses.

We very much fear that war will be declared between Mexico and Guatemala. We are praying that peace may continue. Wm. D. Powell.

MEDICAL MISSIONARY TRAINING.

In a lengthy communication Dr. Valentine, of the Medical Missionary Training Institute, Agra, sends particulars of the work of the Institute. We make some extracts :—

We train native Christian young men. These are sent us from various missionary societies. At present we have students from the Church Missionary Society, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, the American Presbyterians, the Scotch Presbyterian (I.U.P.), the American Episcopal Methodist, and the Reformed Lutheran (or Gossner's) Mission. These young men are with us for four years, or sometimes longer. During that time they study medicine in the Agra Medical College, which is a regular medical college, like medical colleges at home. At the end of their course they receive a regular diploma, and they become doctors.

During the four years they are with us there is daily and systematic reading of the Word of God, morning and evening, with explanations. I wish I could let you see the bright, intelligent faces of the lads, as they sit on our carpet and drink in the exposition, threading their way through the difficulties, until the solution is before them. With each new session we commence a new subject of study. At present we are going over the texts in the Bible bearing on the Lord Jesus Christ, proving that He was God, "the Son of God, the Son of David, and the Son of Man, our Saviour." The students write out these lessons fully in their note-books, so that in the course of four years they have the elements at heart of many things that will be useful to them afterwards.

Then we have a large number of poor people, halt, blind. Many are very old, many are covered with leprosy. It is one of the saddest sights you could see. Afflicted with all these terrible diseases, and covered with rags, and without a piece of meat to put in their mouth. Sometimes from 300 to 400 of these poor people come up to us on a Sabbath morning. We have taught them to sing our hymns and to pray. I think the singing of these poor, afflicted ones is the most touching thing you could listen to. Most of our lady visitors break down under it. Apart from the comfort imparted to the poor people, our students are in this way being trained also as village and bazaar preachers.

These young men are supported during their course by the society sending them, partly by friends who adopt them and give us a scholarship for them. We have now arranged that £10 a year for five years is sufficient for the support of a student. If this sum is sent to Dr. Fry, Medical Mission House, George-square, Edinburgh, a student will be accepted. I place myself in communication with the friend who adopts the student, and during his course I keep the friends advised as to the progress of the students.

The Beggars' Church is purely an undertaking of my own, and I am very thankful to anyone who assists me in it.

After our young men become doctors they either return to the Mission from whence they have come, or to any other mission requiring their services. We have now a considerable number of our men scattered about in different parts of India, and doing good service for the Lord Jesus Christ.

NORTH AFRICA MISSION.

Mr. E. H. Glenny, of the North Africa Mission, recently visited Edinburgh, where he addressed eleven meetings, and made many friends. At a meeting in Mrs. Kalley's drawing-room, General Nepean Smith proposed that some permanent effort should be made in Edinburgh to keep up interest in the work, and, as a result, it is expected that an auxiliary will be formed. It is proposed that a meeting should be held on the first Saturday in every month at Dr. and Mrs. Copplestone's, where friends can assemble to hear about the work and pray over it. Friends in other centres willing to form auxiliaries should communicate with Mr. Glenny at 21, Linton-road, Barking.

HOPE COTTAGE is intended for the rescue of endangered girls, who are disciplined, trained, and sent out to service. The total number who have passed through the Home in twelve years is 103, and many are doing well. There are now twelve in the Cottage under the care of Sister May. The hon. superintendent, Miss C. Johnston, Forest Lodge, Woodford Green, would be glad to hear from friends willing to aid this quiet useful work.

MR. HERMANN WARSZAWIAK.

While on a visit to London last week, Mr. Hermann Warszawiak, of the American Mission to the Jews, addressed meetings in connection with the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. On Tuesday afternoon, he visited the Central Hall, Philpot-street, E., where some three hundred women, members of the sewing class, were assembled. To these he spoke in sympathetic and earnest tones, trying to awaken an interest in the Gospel. First he called their attention to Israel's dispersion and its meaning—God is visiting His people in judgment for their sins and perversity. Then he showed them that Christ saves women as well as men, and demands their equal and consistent service. In conclusion, he asked them to occupy their minds with God and his love, and to pray to Him in the name of Jesus the Messiah. It was an audience such as would by no means please an ordinary preacher; fits of restlessness being alternated with derisive laughter in various parts of the spacious hall. Yet on the part of many there was rapt attention. The speaker knew how to deal with his audience, and a snap of his fingers sufficed to secure order. The address was in German, and delivered with much freedom and natural eloquence. The women were of the poorest class, very few of them being properly clad.

In the evening a large company of interested friends gathered in No. 6 room Mildmay Conference Hall, to hear this fluent advocate plead his people's cause. Rev. John Wilkinson, who presided, opened the proceedings with a few brief thoughts on the signs of the times, and of the nearing advent of our Lord. Mr. Warszawiak began his address with a passing reference to troubles he had lately experienced. The name of Jesus, he said, had been his comfort, while the promise "The Lord is good, a stronghold in the day of trouble, and He knoweth them that trust in Him" (Nah. i. 7) had been his strength and stay. He was every day more and more thankful that God had honoured him to declare the love of Jesus to his kinsmen after the flesh, over whom his heart yearned as in days of old. "This people have I formed for Myself: they shall show forth my praise." When Israel shall become God's witnesses, then thousands will be born in a day. During the past five or six years the speaker had seen, in a very remarkable manner, the hand of the Lord touching the hearts of the Jews, awakening amongst them in all parts of the world a keen concern to inquire whether it be possible that, after all, Jesus of Nazareth, whom their fathers crucified, may not have been the promised Messiah of Israel? Wherever there are Jews, there this question is being raised and debated; only, in many cases, to be put aside as inconvenient, or to be negatived, "It cannot be possible." While, however, the vast majority thus reject Christ; there are many who are now accepting Him, and seeking in the love of their hearts to commend Him to their brethren. For these and for all missionaries to the Jews he besought earnest and incessant prayer.

"BEHOLD, I AM WITH THEE."

Can I forget thee, child of mine,
Who dost o'er-burdened plead?
My thoughts thine every step entwine,
I know thine utmost need;
Shall He who ruleth earth and sea
Be helpless now to aid?
To set thy soul from prison free,
And lift the midnight shade?

Is there not strength within the Hand
That doth creation guide?
Doth He not sorrow understand
Who bowed his head, and died?
Pray on, beloved—plead the Word,
Ask, and ye shall receive.
Yea, even now thy prayer is heard,
Oh, fear not, but believe!

Fear not, for though no eye can see
The load 'tis thine to bear,
Thy burden all is known to Me,
And every touch of care;
Oh, could'st thou but this moment trace
The daybreak hues that shine,
The nearing help and joy, and grace,
The lovelit plan Divine.

HOSPITAL AT TIBERIAS.

A correspondent writes :—"Just a year ago the hospital of the Free Church of Scotland Mission to the Jews was opened in Tiberias, on the shores of the Lake of Galilee. Dr. Torrance had been carrying on medical mission work for eight years here, but had only a few beds in a native house. On New Year's Day the hospital was formally declared open by the Turkish Governor, and since then a great number of patients have been received, and many very serious operations have been done. The people have great confidence in Dr. Torrance, and come from great distances, sometimes three days' journey, to see him.

"Every Sunday morning we have in the hospital waiting-room an Arabic service for all who like to come, and we take as many in-patients to it as care to go or are fit to sit and listen. We have Arabic hymns, and the people listen so attentively, and discuss the subject afterwards up in the wards. We take Jews, Christians, and Moslems, and all get on well together; every day they hear part of the Bible read, and we try to show them the reasons for our belief and faith in Christ.

"A few of our beds have been endowed by some friends in memory of a lost loved one, and that seems such an excellent way of perpetuating their memory, a constant relieving of suffering in their name. £20 sterling supports a bed, and £10 a cot. If your readers could see the destitution and misery of some of the cases who come to us, it would make their hearts ache, and they would wish that we could do much more. Dr. Torrance is now at home on furlough, having this spring suffered a great loss in the death of his young wife, and Dr. George Wilson, of Edinburgh, is carrying on his work."

A TRAVELLERS' PENSION IN PARIS.

Dear Sir,—On my way from Bombay, viâ Marseilles, this month, I found myself obliged either to spend a Sunday in Paris, or, contrary to my usual practice, to continue my journey on that day. Not knowing where to go in Paris, I consulted The Christian which I had with me, and found an advertisement of a W.C.T.U. restaurant at 205, Rue St. Honoré. I made my way to that address, and felt that I had reached the right place when I found it to be connected with Miss de Broen's Belleville Mission. I need not say that I received every kindness and attention, and I am sure that many women travelling alone would avail themselves of this place if they knew of it. The reading-room is well supplied with English papers.

Miss de Broen is anxious to make this house a still more definite centre of work. The house has a shop-front, part of which advertises the restaurant; the other displays Bibles in various languages. That these are read is evident; the pages are usually turned daily. On one occasion when this was omitted a man came in to remind them who was in the habit of coming to the window daily. The house has a nice meeting-room upstairs, where Miss de Broen holds a weekly Bible-reading on Saturday afternoons for any English friends who may choose to attend.

Miss de Broen would like to hold a daily prayer-meeting at the noon hour, which she believes would be a source of blessing to many in the hotels of Paris. The Belleville Mission, however, is so engrossing that she is unable to undertake this additional work, but would gladly welcome any well-concerned Christian couple who desire to devote themselves to the Lord's work in Paris, and would give them rooms in the restaurant. Miss de Broen would answer any inquiries about this. Letters may be addressed to her at 205, Rue St. Honoré, Paris.—Yours very truly, Uxbridge, February 21. Helen S. Dyer.

THE PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY held its usual monthly prayer meeting at 20, Berners-street, W., on the 21st inst. There was a good attendance. The meeting was earnestly addressed by Rev. W. R. Mowll, who took for his subject Phil. iv. 3-7. The keynote of that chapter is Joy. Our joy is closely connected with peace as in Gal. v. No soul can be joyful which is not justified. We must: (1) Rejoice in the Lord, (2) be forbearing and openhanded, (3) be careful for nothing, (4) be thankful for anything, (5) be prayerful for everything. Special prayer was offered for the missionaries of the societies and their work, also for increase of funds.

SOLDIERS' HOME, WINCHESTER.

THE new report of the Soldiers' Home and Evangelistic Mission, carried on so faithfully and successfully by the Misses Perks at Winchester, is of the most encouraging character. "The work of the past year has been wondrously blessed—God has graciously allowed us to be used to the conversion of many souls, and to the building up of many converts. Many who have gone away to foreign climes are there confessing by their lives that they have passed from death unto life. We are greatly cheered by the letters received.

"The meetings, of which there are many, have been well attended throughout the year, and the increased interest manifested in the Word of God, especially at the weekly Bible-readings, is a healthy feature of the Mission, showing the reality of a deeper spiritual life. The new arrangement of the troop-ships embarking from Southampton instead of Portsmouth affords us opportunities of visiting the soldiers and their families as they leave."

The varied evangelistic agencies, organised and supervised by Mr. Edwards, in Winchester and in the villages around are in fullest activity, including prayer-meetings, Bible-readings, lodging-house and open-air services, village work and Sunday Schools. The regular services carried on at the central hall are packed with 600 hearers every Sunday evening. The mission stations at Shawford, St. Denys, Twyford, Shroner Hill, Fulflood, and Canon-street are well sustained, and have been the means of blessing to many.

These devoted ladies ought surely to receive the heartiest support of all who value real and resolute mission service. They hold in Winchester a sale of work April 3, 4, and 5, and will be thankful for gifts of useful and fancy articles. Address, the Misses Perks, Soldiers' Home, Winchester.

GOSPEL TRIUMPHS IN MANCHURIA.

IT has been said that war is the best teacher of geography, and so, in consequence of the present war between China and Japan, Manchuria is becoming known to the world. For the last twenty years, however, another war of a very different kind has been carried on in Manchuria, and it is well that the Church at home should know what wonders Christ has been working in that country.

When the Scotch and Irish missionaries began their work there, they were the only Protestant teachers in all that vast region. From the first they had proofs that God was with them, and from that day to the present time the Gospel has been winning its way in a most marvellous manner, spreading among the villages like wildfire. "This is the doing of God's Holy Spirit" was the exclamation of a Chinese Christian. The number of Christians and inquirers has increased so rapidly that the handful of missionaries ever and anon send home a call for more labourers to come and gather in the harvest.

The first Manchurian convert, "Old Wang," was baptized by Mr. Ross in 1873. He at once began to preach the Christ who had delivered him from the opium slavery, and during his short life he won so many of his countrymen for Christ that he has been called the founder of the Protestant Church in Manchuria. Old Wang was the first of the great company of Manchurian evangelists who, having themselves tasted the water of life, have passed on the cup of salvation to their neighbours. One of the most remarkable of these is "Blind Chang." Dr. Christie, in his recently-published book*, narrates the story of his introduction to the Gospel, and adds: "He is now in a valley in the far east, where many have been brought in through his preaching. He receives no salary, but his flock there support him. He lives in each house in turn, and when he needs new clothes the women make them for him. When we first saw him he was but thirty-seven years of age, so that we may hope that he will witness for Christ for many years to come."

I would ask believers that in this crisis of China's history they would offer special prayer for Manchuria, that the thousands of converts who have been gathered in may be strengthened, so that they may bear persecution for Christ's sake; for China, that the humiliation which she is now suffering may be so overruled by God that the Gospel may have free course, and be glorified in every part of that mighty empire.

MISSION TO NIGHT CABMEN.

THE recent abnormal cold has made many think with pity of those who earn their living on the streets. Amongst these are cabmen,'bus drivers, policemen, and others, whose daily calling condemns them often to bear the touch of winter's icy hand, and at the same time debars them from vigorous exercise. For the night cabmen especially comforters and knitted cuffs would be gladly received, and anything in flannel or wool that hands can make or money can buy.

In the struggle for daily bread (and it is a struggle now) the men are too apt to concentrate their thoughts and mind on this, forgetting that if a man could "gain the whole world" it would profit him nothing if he lost his soul. Their temptation is to "make light of it" when religion is brought before their notice. There are, however, some godly men amongst the cab-drivers. It is much wished to swell the number of these.

The thirty-fourth year of the Mission to London Night Cabmen, in working connection with the London City Mission, is drawing to a close. Its objects are, briefly stated, to reform and to evangelise. Its agents are two earnest missionaries, who know their work well, and have the truest welfare of the cabmen as their aim and end. The latter find in the missionary a faithful friend, who visits them in sickness, or when disabled by accident, as well as on the stands, and tries to induce them to begin attending public worship, to lead sober, virtuous lives, to shun all that is evil. Much encouragement has been received.

Miss E. Hebert, Pembroke House, Oxford-road, Redhill, will be glad to forward a brief report to those wishing for one. The work is in sad need of more subscribers.

EARLSWOOD ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS.

THERE are upwards of 160 idiots and imbeciles now seeking admission, and scarcely a day passes that the committee do not receive applications on behalf of some poor creature who is mentally afflicted. Although the building is capable of accommodating 100 additional patients, the committee, through lack of funds, are unable to receive more than the 600 at present in the Asylum.

The institution is administered with every possible economy; the funds contributed by the charitable are applied solely to the assistance of the destitute. Those whose friends can pay for the advantages of Earlswood do pay. It is sad to contemplate the imbecile in a home where, from want of means, care cannot be given, though there may be much love.

POOR IN PARIS.

WORDS fail to describe the intense suffering among the English poor. During this severe winter, we know of many in the most abject misery, not only the aged and infirm, the sick and the suffering, but the young and strong, some of them gentle and well born, bravely struggling with poverty, hunger, and cold. Last Thursday we sat up with one poor woman, who passed away early in the morning. Help had come too late, and she succumbed to the cold and want of food.

Our soup dinners, which are given in the mission hall, 79, Avenue Wagram, Paris, are held three times a week, and are crowded with men, women, and children, who are allowed to bring their cans and take away sufficient soup for next day. Whole families have thus been kept alive.

We thank God we are privileged in some small measure to sympathise and minister to his suffering English poor, who but for our help would be uncared for and alone in their misery. May we beg for the sympathy and help of kind friends in England?

THE DEAN OF HEREFORD, presiding on Monday week at a Sunday Closing Conference held in the Library, Hereford, said that having been president of the Sunday Closing League in London, and having travelled Europe and America, he knew the benefits which were to be derived from Sunday Closing. Even if the laws as they now existed were efficiently carried out with respect to the control of the liquor traffic, there would be a deal less drinking and drunkenness in the land.

NOTES FROM ITALY.

THE February issue of A Voice from Italy gives statistics of the mission work of the Waldensian Church in Italy. There are forty-four churches, sixty-three stations, forty-three pastors, 5,018 communicants, 7,113 regular hearers. The Sunday and day schools are well attended, and there are efficient staffs of teachers, colporteurs, and evangelists.

Rev. B. Revel writes from Venice: "We work in the midst of great religious apathy. Material things occupy the thoughts of the people, almost to the exclusion of higher things, and progress is slow. Yet we have a good class of fifteen catechumens, of whom four are converts from Romanism, and the others belong to families of the Church. Among others there is a man, sixty-five years old, who has attended our services for a long time, but for special reasons had never asked to be received into the church until now. Another is the wife of one of our members. On principle I am against mixed marriages, that is, of Evangelicals with Roman Catholics, because, as a rule, they do not give good results; but this one has been an exception, the husband has gained the wife. What increases the interest in this case is that the father of the young wife was bitterly opposed to the step, and did all he could to prevent it. Among our catechumens also is a lad whose father was a Swiss Protestant and his mother a Venetian Catholic. The father died two years ago, and although since his death the lad has been entirely under his mother's influence, yet he has decided to join our Church, and is now under instruction."

Rev. G. Quattrini, of Leghorn, writes:—"The times are sad, but for this very reason we hope for better days for God's work. There are signs which lead us to hope for a religious revival which will bring our fellow-countrymen to the Gospel. Even in Leghorn I have observed that a greater interest is being shown in Evangelical religion. I have never seen so many Jews at our services as now, and they are very regular in their attendance, and listen devoutly to the preaching of the Gospel. They speak admiringly of what they have heard, and ask for explanations. Several Roman Catholics have asked to join our Church. One, Signor M——, has a good position in the town, and has accepted the truth which saves with all his heart. He is about sixty years of age, and his family are much against his decision, twitting him with 'changing his religion.' His wife scarcely speaks to him, and declares she would rather have seen him go to prison than enter an Evangelical Church!"

BIBLE CARRIAGE WORK.

"Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in." "Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters." These two injunctions are literally carried out in Bible Carriage work. Mr. Northcote Willy, 123, Victoria-road, Leeds, has been engaged in this branch of service for about fourteen years, and many can testify of the good received from his bright, helpful teaching in the various places he has visited. At times the work is specially directed to the children, either on the sea shore or in the busy street or village green, and scores of little earnest faces are turned to the speaker whilst he tells them of the children's friend and Saviour. The sweet singing draws others, and to the older folks an earnest, faithful word is spoken. Gospels and book packets are sold, tracts and papers given away, and into many a home these silent messengers find their way, weighted by earnest faith. On Saturday nights Mr. Willy often takes his stand in what is called "the pig market," a large open space, where both marketers and loungers are within hearing, and strong, rough men have been touched, and, with tears in their eyes, listened eagerly to the good news of salvation.

The workers in this Mission are all without salary; Mr. Northcote Willy, who devotes his whole time to the work, receives for his support and current expenses the profits from sales, and what freewill offerings and subscriptions are sent in by those who know the work. Unfortunately, there is a debt on the Mission of a considerable amount, and this is a great burden to the workers. Could this be removed the work would be wonderfully freed, and the good done greatly increased.

Letters to the Editor.

THANKSGIVING AND REVIVAL.

Dear Sir,—Surely God is about to open the windows of Heaven and send times of refreshing on His thirsty heritage. Any Sabbath evening when not actively engaged, I shall be glad to join in the hour of intercession, and will also try to bring it under the notice of Christian friends.

I heartily agree with the suggestion of "E. W." There is much need for confession and humiliation. May our eyes be unto the Lord, and our expectation from Him alone. May I be allowed to suggest that in our intercession, we specially remember the small villages, which are so apt to be overlooked by Christian workers. It is also laid upon my heart to ask prayer for young people, that Christians may be led to take a greater interest in the salvation of the children. Constant Reader.

ETERNAL PUNISHMENT.

Sir,—I read with great pleasure Mr. R. C. Morgan's reply to a correspondent on this subject in your issue of February, 14, (p. 9). The "thoughtlessness" with which this awful subject is discussed cannot be too strongly condemned. One meets with Christian people whose great idea seems to be to try and find out whether you are (as they would express it) "sound" or "unsound" upon this particular doctrine; they cross-question people at all sorts of unsuitable times. I think such expressions as "The Devil's Lie" are highly objectionable. Surely our great work now is to lead souls to the feet of Jesus, and not to propound our ideas as to "Eternity" or "Non-Eternity." "God is Love," and whatever He does, He will do it in a spirit of love and mercy—is not this enough?

A lady said lately to me, "Shall we know each other in Heaven? if so, how could we be happy, if we missed some loved one, and knew they must be suffering in the eternal fire?" I replied, I felt sure that we should know each other, and as for the other question I said, no matter how hard it might now seem to us, I was quite content to leave the future in God's hands, He will wipe away "all tears" from our eyes—is not this enough for us?—Yours, &c., Evangelist.

THE LATE MR. A. A. REES.

Dear Sir,—I was glad to see in your columns a notice of my late dear friend, Mr. Rees, of Sunderland, and that the hymn you quoted, "Oh, to be ripe and ready," had been set to music. His daughter wrote me about it, and I immediately ordered the music, and have heard it sung and played to me. The music is excellently suited to the words, and for its own sake, as well as for his daughter's, I wish that all who value the words would purchase the music. (2s. nett. Novello & Co.)

Some forty years ago I got a letter from Sunderland, signed "A. A. Rees," which said he regretted I did not hold with him the pre-millennial advent, but that in my "Commentary on the Gospels" there was such an aroma in all that I said of his Lord that he wished to know and correspond with me. I wrote then, thanking him for his letter, and asking who and what he was. He sent me a book giving an account of his life, not written by himself, but the truth. He had been brought up in the Navy, but when converted he studied for the Church, and when ordained was called to a church in Sunderland.

After a while the Bishop of Durham sent for him, and said, "Mr. Rees, I am sorry to hear you are using coarse language in the pulpit; you talk of hell and the devil, etc." "My lord, I thought that my Bible speaks of these, and I don't speak of them but when required." "That's all very well, sir, but if you don't change your way I won't give you what you require from me, if you are called to another church." "Good morning, my lord." At length he was called, I think, to Bath, and he went to the Bishop for what was required. "No, sir, you shall not have it, for you paid no attention to what I told you." "Good morning, my lord." So they parted, and he at once left the English Church, and was followed by most of his flock.

When a church had to be built for him, being a Welshman of good family, and having money, he lent it them, and to the day of his death he preached there to a considerable congregation. He often preached on public events when he had a large audience, and his sermons appeared next day in the papers (of which he sent me copies), and which were very telling. We corresponded for twenty years before I saw him, and we met only twice. He wrote hymns of varied excellence. But a few of them he sent me printed copies of which I kept for many years. The two I thought best were "The Blue and the Red," the one on a total abstainer, the other referring to the "scarlet thread," which saved Rahab in Jericho, referring to the "precious blood." But the best of all is, "Oh, to be ripe and ready," every word of which I, at my advanced age (in my ninety-second year), echo from the heart, non-premillennarian though I am.—Yours faithfully,

MARCH MAGAZINES.

In The Home Messenger (1d. Partridge & Co.) Dr. Thain Davidson treats quaintly and suggestively of "St. Paul's overcoat." There is a well illustrated sketch of "Land's End in March."

A new monthly candidate for the suffrages of the reading public is The London Home Monthly (3d. Windsor House, Bream's Buildings, E.C.). The articles are of a miscellaneous, but interesting kind.

In the new issue of The Boy's Own Paper a new story by Jules Verne is begun, entitled "Captain Antifer; or, His Excellency's Millions." This tale of buried treasure promises to be as entertaining as any that are now running in this wholesome serial for the young. (Religious Tract Society.)

The Missions of the World appears midmonthly. The new issue contains an excellent sketch of the London Missionary Society and its work. The news of missionary progress in various parts of the world has been diligently gathered and carefully digested. (Hornsby, 12, St. Bride-street.)

The Church Monthly opens with a hymn entitled "The Double Look," specially written by the Bishop of Wakefield for Sir Arthur Sullivan's tune, "Audite Audientes Me." There is a portrait and sketch of the Dean of Hereford, and an article by Archdeacon Farrar on St. Margaret's, Westminster, the church of the House of Commons. (F. Sherlock.)

In The Quiver for March Rev. A. R. Buckland opens a series of papers of "Heroes of the Modern Mission Field." Dr. Parker has an article on "Things that are God's." "In Heather Land," by Kathleen Watson, will delight many. Besides a full complement of stories, there are many other good things for old and young. (Cassell & Co. 6d.)

The Religious Tract Society's smaller publications have long been domestic institutions. Our Little Dots and The Child's Companion are as popular as ever. Light in the Home is a worthy successor of the "Tract Magazine." "An English Coalfield" and "Peeps at the Japs" are among the interesting contents of The Cottager and Artisan. The plate accompanying Friendly Greetings is an excellent reproduction of George Tinworth's terra-cotta delineation of the returned prodigal.

Messrs. Partridge's Monthlies are among the best. For the little ones there is The Infant's Magazine, and for boys and girls better able to read, The Children's Friend. "The Mothers of Russia, by B. McCall Barbour, is a good article in The Mothers' Companion. Mr. F. M. Holmes writes on Gas-making in The British Workman. In Our Own Gazette Mrs. Haycraft begins a new story, "At Aunt Verbena's." The Family Friend, and The Family Visitor are other excellent serials.

Good Words has many attractive papers and sketches. Mr. John Murray concludes his memories of authors he has known: There is a very readable account of the early home of the late R. L. Stevenson. Mr. Crockett's story, "The Men of the Moss-Hags," deepens in tragic interest. The Sunday Magazine has an illustrated sketch, with portrait, of Dr. Marshall Lang, ex Moderator of the Established Church of Scotland. "Geneva and its Memories" will be appreciated by many readers. (Isbister & Co.)

In The Sunday at Home, the excellent sketches of "Sunday in East London" are concluded, special mention being made of the agencies centering in the Great Assembly Hall, and Rev. T. Richardson's work at St. Benet's. Rev. James Chalmers describes missionary "Explorations in New Guinea." Canon Tristram's "Rambles in Japan" in The Leisure Hour has a special value at the present time. Dr. Macaulay writes of Maria Edgworth, the famous writer of children's tales, and Mr. W. J. Gordon gives much information about "New Oxford." The Girl's Own Paper has a wonderful variety of useful and well-written articles, suited to its special class of readers. (Religious Tract Society.)

Flowers of Hope is a little volume in which a choice poetic thought on Hope is given for every day in the year. (Marcus Ward & Co.)

The People's Life of Their Queen. By Rev. E. J. Hardy, M.A., chaplain to H.M. Forces. This is a readable outline of the life of Queen Victoria, the whole being admirably illustrated. (1s. Cassells.)

In the Master's Service, by Mrs. Harvey-Jellie (G. Stoneman. 1s.) A collection of pointed narratives and incidents, such as those which appear from the same pen from time to time in our own pages. These "stories with a purpose" must prove both useful and stimulative to the Christian worker.

God's World: and Other Sermons, by B. Fay Mills. (3s. 6d. H. R. Allenson.) A volume of fifteen discourses, expository and practical, by a well-known mission preacher. The style is direct, and as a goodly number of stories and incidents brighten the pages, the sermons are quite easy reading.

John Medley's Life. Story by a Prison Chaplain. (A. Holness. 1s. and 1s. 6d.) Here are some very remarkable records of men who had deeply fallen being saved by the power of God. The first—giving the title—tells of one who after a life of sin was laid hold of by God and made an instrument of blessing to many; besides, at a very critical moment in the Crimea, saving the life of the honoured Duncan Matheson.

Beautiful Joe; An Autobiography of a Dog. By Marshall Saunders. (Jarrold & Sons.) The worth of this volume is borne out by the fact that forty-two thousand copies are already in the hands of its readers, and a reprint has become necessary. The story is brightly written, and serves the useful purpose of inculcating into young minds a sympathy for dumb animals as well as practical hints as to their care and treatment.

New London.—The able and comprehensive series of articles appearing in The Daily Chronicle on the work of the London County Council, with illustrations by first-class artists, have been re-issued in book form. They constitute a noble and worthy memorial of London's Parliament and its work; as well as a pledge and promise of further benefits to this great community. (1s. nett. E. Lloyd, Limited, Fleet-street, E.C.)

Talks with Men, Women, and Children. Sixth Series. By Rev. David Davies, Brighton. (Alexander & Shepheard.) Those who have enjoyed the previous volumes will welcome this addition to the series, and it is sure to make new friends. Many will read it for their personal profit; workers will value it as containing much that they can adapt in their own way for practical use. It is full of good things which deserve to be passed on for purposes of wider utility.

Paris during the Commune, by the late Rev. W. Gibson, appears as a memorial volume, with a character sketch of the author. This sketch, from the pen of a loving wife, is well worth reading; the same may be said of the letters which Mr. Gibson wrote from Paris twenty-four years ago. Life in Paris during the second siege is graphically delineated. Mr. Gibson was an exemplary Christian worker, with his whole life devoted to the welfare of France. The volume has thus a peculiar interest, and its pages are calculated to make a good impression upon thoughtful readers. The illustrations include a portrait of Mr. Gibson. (Methodist Book-room, Castle-street, City-road.)

John the Baptist, Forerunner and Martyr, by Dr. Elder Cumming. (1s. nett. Marshall Brothers.) Though issued as one of the "Keswick Library," this little book is only in an incidental way explanatory of the doctrines of the "higher Christian life." It is a clear comprehensive and suggestive commentary on the public life and speech of the great New Testament prophet. We scarcely think that the esteemed writer can have intended what seems implied when he speaks of the Spirit, "in order to furnish Him for the ministry which had now begun," descending and abiding in fulness on Jesus, "permeating his entire being, so that every word and work done by Him in time to come is done in the power of the Holy Ghost." We have been accustomed to think that all the life of our Lord was lived in the power of the Holy Ghost, as much before his baptism as after, in his private life no less than in his ministry.

The Union Observer is the recently started monthly organ of the Junior Civil Service Prayer Union. Its contents are varied and full of solid interest. We wish it all success. The editor is Mr. E. W. Goodrich, 30, South-parade, Chelsea, S.W.

Rev. H. L. Harkness, Rector of St. Swithin's, Worcester, has issued a penny tract, "The Lord's Day! Do You Keep It Holy?" setting forth the Scriptural sanction and benefits of Sabbath observance. Copies may be had from the author.

Mrs. Ormiston Chant has prepared a striking pamphlet, "Why We Attacked the Empire" (2d. Horace Marshall and Son, 125, Fleet-street), telling anew the story of the great fight of last year for public morals in London's West End. We hope it will be freely circulated and carefully studied.

Y.W.C.A. WEEK OF PRAYER.

THE week of prayer commenced on Sunday, February 17, with praise for all young women brought to Christ, for progress in Y.W.C.A. work, for new branches formed and fresh helpers raised up; and with prayer for the entire consecration of workers and that all Y.W.C.A. plans may be for the glory of God. Each day has had its special subject of petition. At the Central Institute about eighty have been present each evening. The Hon. E. Kinnaird gave the opening address on Sunday. Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor gave the address at the Thursday meeting on "Christian Separation," and on Friday Mr. Montagu Beauchamp conducted a missionary meeting. Meetings were held at the Belgravian Institute, several ladies taking part, and on the evening of February 20, a special service for Belgravian and Princess House members was held at Eaton Episcopal chapel. About 200 young women were present. Rev. C. A. Fox preached an impressive sermon on Jer. i. 5, "Come and let us join ourselves unto the Lord in a perpetual covenant." At Percy Institute God is praised for his presence and power. The week has been a time of deep heart-searching and humbling, and at the invitation to yield all to God there were responses from not a few. A quickened spiritual life is the result. The meetings at the Cambridge Institute, Holloway, have been well attended. Answers to prayer have been received in the strengthening of the Lord's children and the leading of others to decision.

Miss Garrett, of the Brixton Institute, tells of meetings largely attended every evening, of definite conversions and backsliders restored. A three days' mission to children was conducted in the afternoons by Mr. G. Hodgson, of the C.S.S.M., the room being full each time, and many staying behind for personal conversation. The room at the Clapham Institute has been packed every night and much blessing has been received. On Tuesday, Rev. W. Pettman spoke, taking four words as descriptive of the Christian life —admit, submit, commit, and transmit. Mrs. Beresford Baker has taken a mission at Ealing. The attendance has been good and the meetings have been specially helpful to Christians. Well attended meetings have also been held at Finsbury, Islington, Sydenham, and other centres.

Miss Parker, of the Wimbledon Branch, writes:—The Week of Prayer will be a week to be remembered by our branch this year, as on Wednesday, the 20th, our new class-room, Gordon Lodge Hall, was opened. The building of this hall had become necessary, as the Sunday Bible-class, numbering over 100, could no longer find comfortable accommodation in the old class-room. The opening meeting was held in the afternoon, and was well attended by subscribers and friends. Rev. E. W. Moore took the chair. The local clergy expressed their sympathy and appreciation of the work of the Y.W.C.A. Miss Morley (London) gave an account of the aims and objects of the Association. The evening meeting was presided over by Captain Tottenham, the hall being full of members and their friends. Miss Rouse, from Putney, gave a most heart-searching and powerful address, which we are sure was blessed to many present. On Thursday evening we commended in prayer to God Esther Berry, from the Chelsea Mission Training Home, who is proceeding to Hebron next week for mission work amongst Mohammedans.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

THE C.E. Society at John-street, Holborn, is growing steadily.

The Endeavourers of Sarnia, Cal., have taken up the two-cents-a-week plan of collecting for missions.

The C.E. Union of South London had on "Endeavour Day" capital meetings in Peckham Rye Tabernacle.

At the first anniversary of the U.M.F.C. Society, Sheepbridge, Huddersfield, earnest addresses were delivered on various phases of Endeavour work.

The Tract Society in Auckland, N.Z., has done active and useful service in visiting from house-to-house and bringing the careless to come to hear the Gospel.

The North Finchley Mission Hall Society has held its first annual meeting. Addresses were given by Revs. Alfred Rowland and Thomas Hill, and Mr. J. Gobbett.

A Young People's Society in Trenton, N.J., have engaged a Bible reader at a salary of ten dollars per month, to visit non-Christian homes, telling the people the story of Jesus, and helping them with food and clothing when needed. The food is purchased with a fund that the missionary committee has established by self-denial and in other ways; the clothing is contributed by all the members of the society.

THE Y.M.C.A.

A NEW Association has been founded at Pinkafo, Hungary.

The Aintab (Turkey) Association has a total of 200 members, besides 150 juniors.

At Lincoln a Y.M.C.A. County Council has been formed for the purpose of promoting the work of extension in that county.

The Honiton Y.M.C.A. is arranging for the erection of new premises of its own. The annual meeting of the Association was held on Thursday evening.

The Bible class at Newport (Monmouthshire) was attended on the 17th by 200 young men, and 400 were present at a subsequent evangelistic meeting.

The Bukovka Association in Bohemia has just been permitted by the authorities to constitute itself under the name of the "Blahoslav Christian Association."

During the four months of its existence the Sittingbourne Y.M.C.A. has enrolled sixty-one young men, and at a meeting held the other evening, seven professed conversion.

"Individual dealing" was the topic for discussion on Wednesday, 13th inst., at a United Conference of Workers of the Plymouth, Devonport, and Laira Associations, held at Laira.

The Scarborough Association has commenced, after service hours on Sunday evenings, a People's Service in the Londesborough Skating Rink, with promise of very encouraging results.

A special effort is being made at Totterdown to clear the newly-acquired and well-situated premises of the Y.M.C.A., from debt. A number of conversions have recently taken place amongst young men attending the Association meetings.

There are indications of an awakened interest in the Rio Janeiro Y.M.C.A., and the secretary there, Mr. M. A. Clark, recently had letters from missionaries in Pernambuco, Juiez de Fora, and Bahia, telling of the desire to organise associations.

The Shrewsbury Y.M.C.A. is trying to reach young men who never come near, by means of social evenings for special classes. Two classes have been reached thus—soldiers and railway men—and it is hoped also to get hold of the Post-office workers.

Islington "Annual" was held in Barnsbury Hall on the 19th. Lord Kinnaird took the chair. Addresses were given by Rev. J. Lawson Forster, D.D., and Mr. Reader Harris, Q.C. The secretary, Mr. J. Nash Rees, presented an excellent report of work done during the past year.

The Associations in Basle, Switzerland, are already pre-occupied with the reception of the next International Conference. To prepare public opinion it has been decided to make better known the work of the Associations; for this purpose it has been decided to publish an Association paper and to sow it broadcast.

The forty-second anniversary of the New York Association drew together a large and representative audience on Monday, January 28, in the spacious hall. President C. H. Dodge presided. The report showed that no debt had been incurred, and that 39,762.68 dols. had been expended in the work of the Association. The present membership is 7582.

Devonport annual meeting was held on Tuesday, 12th inst. The Mayor (Mr. J. B. James) presided, and spoke of the world-wide influence for good the Association was exerting and the many advantages of membership, and the marvellous success the Y.M.C.A. had achieved in a comparatively few years. The report read by Mr. Mabin showed solid advance in all departments, especially in the Sunday afternoon class, which had increased from an attendance of 100 to 200 during the year.

Mr. J. Compton Rickett presided over the annual meeting of the Camden Town Y.M.C.A. held on Thursday evening. Dr. Monro Gibson and Rev. E. A. Stuart delivered addresses on "The Intellectual Difficulties of Young Men." The work of the Association, which is of a most varied and successful character, was reported upon by the general secretary, Mr. T. Swanston Smith; and amongst others who attended and took part in the meeting were Mr. John White (president), Revs. D. W. Vaughan, and Geo. Hawker.

The annual meeting of the Oxford Y.M.C.A. was held in the University Schools under the presidency of Sir William Markby, K.C.S.I., on the 18th inst. Musical drill in costume was given by members of the Association, and the orchestral society gave a selection of high-class music. A stirring address was delivered by Rev. E. J. Kennedy, who took as his subject "A Young Man's Ideal." The rector of Exeter College and Mr. Robinson Souttar followed. The meeting was altogether one of the best ever held in connection with this Association.

The Dublin Association held its forty-fifth annual meeting on Monday week. The Archbishop of Dublin occupied the chair. The Archdeacon of London gave an eloquent address on the successful work which the Young Men's Christian Association movement had achieved throughout the whole world. Concluding he expressed the hope that within the next few years they would hear of a new building for the Dublin Y.M.C.A., a suggestion which called forth hearty applause, it being well known that the subject of procuring new premises is exercising the minds of the committee of the Y.M.C.A. Altogether the meeting was a decided success.

A most striking movement in Association work has just taken place at Freeport, Ill. At that place a good building was erected a few years ago which was valued at 30,000 dols. On this there was a mortgaged indebtedness of 12,800 dols. During the business depression of the last two years other debts have been incurred, so that the total amount was nearly 16,000 dols. The company holding the mortgage gave notice of foreclosure. This notice was read before the pastors of the city, who had become interested in the Association through the good work accomplished during the last few years. A mass meeting of the churches was called, a canvass of the city was organised, and in three weeks the whole indebtedness was extinguished.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

MR. WILLIAM FORBES has been giving addresses in Glasgow at the Tent Hall, Grove-street Institute, and Waterloo Rooms.

The usual annual Conference of the Spiritual Life was held at Dundee last week, with good attendances and earnest addresses.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray, Welsh evangelists, are making a deep impression in a Gospel Mission at Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow.

Mr. Pittendrigh, of the Evangelisation Society, has been conducting Gospel meetings with considerable encouragement at Dornoch.

Mr. Macpherson, of Yetholm, has accepted the call to Trinity F.C., Glasgow. Mr. Simpson, of Turriff, declines the call to the Free High Church, Edinburgh.

Rev. Dr. J. Hood Wilson, of the Barclay Church, Edinburgh, has been nominated to the moderatorship of the coming Free Assembly, failing Dr. Miller, of Madras, whose health prevents his taking the office.

At the annual meeting of the Free Church Presbyterial Temperance Society in Glasgow, Principal Rainy expressed a strong aversion to the adoption of the Gothenburg system, and argued earnestly for the passing of a Local Option Bill.

There has just been brought to a close three weeks' evangelistic meetings in Free St. Stephen's Mission Hall, Stockbridge, Edinburgh. Crowds of men attended the meetings nightly, and many of these were of the roughest class in the district. Four social meetings were given; by such means many needy ones were helped, and many careless ones were attracted. A number of persons professed conversion, and many Christian people received quickening. The meetings were addressed by various speakers, chiefly laymen of experience.

IRISH NOTES.

A CONFERENCE on the Inspiration of the Bible and the Second Coming of Christ, similar to that held in Belfast the previous week, was held in Dublin last week, and was well attended.

The Irish Presbyterian Church has lost another of its oldest and most respected ministers in the person of Rev. Matthew McAulay, of Cahans, co. Monaghan, who has passed away, aged eighty-five years, deeply regretted by all who knew him.

It is stated that the Irish returns for the year 1894 to the Church Missionary Society show an advance of about £2700 over those of the previous year, a fact which seems to indicate an increasing love for missions on the part of the people of the country.

St. Patrick's Home, Dublin, is evidently doing a good work. It provides trained nurses, who paid 27,854 visits last year, to attend the poor in their own homes, and supply them free of charge, irrespective of creed, with the necessary medical appliances, comforts and nourishments needful for their recovery.

A remarkable united mission has been held in Rathdowny Concert Hall. The rector and curate of the parish and the local Presbyterian and the Methodist ministers took part in the proceedings, while Rev. McHoffe, rector of Kilbride, Arklow, was the principal preacher. The meetings were largely attended, and impression for good was made on the whole town and neighbourhood, as it is not too often in Ireland that there are such displays of brotherly feeling among the various denominations.

MR. LOUIS FENN, of the National Temperance League, has concluded an important series of meetings amongst Naval men at Portsmouth.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[From our own Correspondents.]

CAMBRIDGE.

On Thursday last a very largely attended United Temperance meeting was held in the Guildhall. Rev. C. J. Proctor, vicar of Holy Trinity, took the chair, and Mrs. H. W. Smith and Mrs. Bowney gave addresses.

Rev. W. Martin Hall was the speaker at the weekly meeting of the C.M.U. on Friday last. The deeply interesting account of the tour in India which he took with Rev. E. N. Thwaites last year was much appreciated by all who heard it.

OXFORD.

Two meetings were held last Friday in connection with the Evangelical Alliance, and were addressed by Rev. James Consterdine, whose subject was "The Stundists of Russia." Sir Charles Aitchison presided, and Dr. Fairbairn and Canon Christopher were amongst the speakers. The attendance was not particularly encouraging: the apathy of Oxford on Christian union and fellowship is very painful.

Rev. C. J. Casher preached on Sunday evening in St. Aldate's in aid of the Protestant Reformation Society. As the Oxford representative of the Society, Mr. Casher takes a great interest in the cause of Protestantism, and furthers it in every way he can.

The Greek Testament readings of this term by Mr. Chavasse are proving most helpful to the men who attend; they are based on Romans iv. and v.

The University preacher at St. Mary's on Sunday was the Bishop of Lichfield, who gave a very practical sermon on "Abraham's Call" (Gen. xii. 3). Canon Scott Holland was prevented by illness from preaching in the evening at the special service for undergraduates.

THE DAUGHTERS OF MISSIONARIES.

Dear Sir,—The Institution for the Daughters of Missionaries at Sevenoaks, while providing a thorough education, is a home for the children of missionaries of all denominations, from the age of five to eighteen. As the parents pay only about half the necessary expenses, the remainder has to be supplied by voluntary contributions, which are now much needed. The great outlay in disinfecting, cleaning, and medical and nursing expenses entailed by recent visitation of measles and scarlet fever impels the committee to make an appeal to friends for help in their scheme for providing a sanatorium for the eighty-three children under their care. About £300 have already been given, and it is further proposed to have a sale in the schoolroom of the Congregational Church, Bromley, at the end of May. Gifts towards this object may be addressed to Miss Unwin, Walthamstow Hall, Sevenoaks, so as to arrive early in May.—Yours truly, M. A. Pye-Smith.

Sevenoaks.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The City Temple was almost filled on Saturday afternoon with an enthusiastic audience of young people, gathered together to listen to several missionary addresses, the meeting being arranged jointly by the Baptist Young Men's Missionary Association and the L.M.S. Young Men's Missionary Band. In the absence of Mr. A. H. Baynes, Mr. H. M. Bompas, Q.C., presided.

The first address was by Rev. R. P. Ashe, the companion of Alexander Mackay and Bishop Hannington, who showed by contrast the condition of Uganda before and since the introduction of the Gospel. Rev. A. E. Scrivener vividly portrayed the needs of the immense populations of dark-hearted Africans on the banks of the Congo, and was followed by Rev. James Chalmers, who charmed and thrilled every heart by his stirring narrative of work and warfare among the cannibals of New Guinea. The meeting was closed with a few hearty words by Rev. Dr. Parker, pastor of the City Temple.

HOME OF ISRAEL MISSION TO THE JEWS, NEW YORK.—The February issue of Our Hope, the organ of this Mission, states that the Methodist Episcopal Committee on Hebrew work, while recognising that the Mission has a denominational basis and connection, is opposed to the work proceeding on lines that shall simply reduce converts from Judaism to members of a Christian sect. The committee has, in fact, endorsed the principle that converts to Christ from among the Jews shall not be asked to lay aside their national customs, save as far as these are contrary to the spirit and commands of the Gospel. The committee, moreover, invites other workers among Jews to co-operate in the effort to apply these principles in the evangelisation of Israel.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Mr. E. Warland is conducting a ten days' mission at Eastbourne, in connection with the pledge-taking crusade.

The Belgian Chamber has, according to the Times, been discussing seriously the alarming increase in Belgium in the consumption of spirits.

The West Norwood and Tulse Hill Branch of the B.W.T.A. has again elected Mrs. Woodford Fawcett as president. At the meeting Mrs. Henry Avery, secretary, read an encouraging report.

At Gloucester an eight days' mission, promoted by the united temperance societies has been held at Brunswick-road Chapel, public meetings being held in the week at the Raikes Memorial Hall.

The Leeds Working Men's Temperance League reports that 367 meetings have been held during the year, with an estimated total attendance of 180,000. The number of pledges had been 630.

Ald. Joseph Rowntree, of York, on Thursday evening addressed a meeting on temperance reform in the Friends' Meeting House, Woodhouse-lane, Leeds. Rev. A. E. Campbell, Vicar of All Souls', presided.

In anticipation of Lady Henry Somerset's return home next month, arrangements are being made for a series of large meetings, at which she is to speak, in connection with the National B.W.T.A. The London meetings will be held at the City Temple, Willesden, Old Kent-road, and Woolwich.

A Parliamentary paper issued the other day gave the total number of convictions for drunkenness in England and Wales in 1893, at 153,012. Of these 10,347 were in Wales. The total number of licence-holders convicted for permitting drunkenness during the same year was 918.

The largest meeting yet held in connection with the pledge-signing crusade assembled at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Tuesday week, when addresses were given by Mr. Ambrose Pomery, J.P., Mr. Josiah Nix, Canon Fleming, and Mr. J. H. Raper, interspersed with "crusade songs" by the Fisk Jubilee Singers.

The Chief Constable of Newcastle's annual report again draws particular attention to the drunkenness of the city. The official figures prove that Newcastle is not only the most drunken of all our large towns, but four times as drunken as others similarly situated, and nearly twice as drunken as the next highest on the list. The total number of cases of drunkenness subject to magisterial investigation during last year reached a total of 6042, being an increase of 703 cases over those of 1893. The 6042 cases represented 4807 persons, of whom 1347 were non-residents in the city.

A cablegram to the Temperance Press Agency states that it was on Tuesday last, at Washington, that the Polyglot petition against drink, opium, and vice, and containing no less than seven million names, was presented to the President of the United States, by the officers of the World's and National World's Woman's Temperance Union, by which bodies the petition has been promoted. As an immediate result, a Prohibition Bill has been presented to Congress, based on the clauses of the petition. The presentation was made the occasion of holding a series of meetings on the subject, and these were attended by immense numbers and marked by great enthusiasm.

The Sunday Closing Association held its annual meeting in Liverpool last week. The report showed that nothing had been left undone to secure the suppression of the Sunday liquor traffic in England. Operations had been directed, first, to increasing the already great volume of public opinion in favour of Sunday closing, and, next, to endeavouring to secure a more adequate form of legislative treatment than is provided in the Government's Local Option Bill. The experience of the past year had confirmed the executive in the conviction that England is ready and anxious to have the Sunday liquor traffic prohibited by an Imperial enactment extending over the whole country. The speakers included the Mayor of Liverpool, Revs. S. Pearson, John Watson, Canon Stowell, C. Garrett, and the Bishop of Liverpool.

The Bishop of Chester delivered on Saturday night an address to a crowded audience at Exeter Hall on "Licensing Reform," with special reference to the Gothenburg system. He saw many difficulties in the way of prohibition, though he would be glad to see the number of public-houses reduced. Under the Gothenburg system, the people managed and controlled the drink traffic, and the surplus profit of the trade went towards public objects. In Sweden and Norway the system had so far done its duty as to reduce the sale of beer in 120 towns by twenty gallons per head. Ninety per cent. of the evidence adduced was in favour of the substantial success which had attended the Scandinavian method, and he maintained that it would be most beneficial in this country. A number of questions were afterwards put to the Bishop, who replied.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. J. Reid Howatt has relinquished the editorship of The Presbyterian.

Mr. John Shrimpton, who left England in November, is now at Cannes. His recovery has been much retarded by the late severe weather in the Riviera, but every reasonable hope is entertained that he will be able to return to town in April.

Rev. Yung King Yen, whose visit to this country created some interest, has been giving addresses in New York on the opium question, and on mission work in his own land. At the close of one address in that city a dozen persons stood up to offer themselves for mission service in China.

Mr. John Groom, formerly of Hampstead, and widely known as a devoted labourer for Christ, is now in his eighty-third year, and too feeble for active service. He is staying at Brighton, and will be thankful for the prayers of the Lord's people. He is giving himself to constant prayer for the revival of the Church.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe announced on Lord's Day evening, greatly to the relief of his people at Onslow-square, that he had, after careful deliberation, declined the offer of the vicarage of Sheffield. He mentioned that it was the fifth appointment offered him during the last twelve months, the others being Holy Trinity, Cambridge; the parish church of Hull; Christchurch, Clifton; and Trinity Church, Tunbridge Wells.

A Memorial to the late Mr. Eustace Maxwell, of Pembroke College, Cambridge, who was killed in the Chelford railway disaster, is being raised in the shape of a fund to provide the support of a medical missionary in Palestine, in connection with the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. Mr. Maxwell had dedicated to this work his life, which was so tragically cut short. Mr. A. Mercer, 25, Lingfield-road, Wimbledon, is treasurer of the memorial fund.

SOCIAL QUESTIONS IN THE EAST.

Two successful meetings were addressed last week by Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell, at Bradford and Sheffield. In each case the mayor of the town presided, Alderman Willis Wood, J.P., at Bradford, and Mr. F. C. Skelton, J.P., at Sheffield. As at all the former meetings of the campaign, the greatest interest was displayed, and the addresses of the two ladies aroused marked enthusiasm. A pointed resolution was passed at both meetings. A virulent attack in a local evening paper, on both the ladies and the cause, was met in vigorous language by Mr. Edward Priestman, who moved the resolution.

Attention is again directed to the great meeting at Queen's Hall, London, on March 22. Information can be obtained of Mr. H. J. Osborn, 112, Fleet-street, E.C.

JEWS IN JERUSALEM.

Mr. T. J. Alley writes from Jerusalem:—"Thus far we have had a most propitious winter, and the suffering has been much less than in previous winters, though want of means has prevented my knowledge in that line to a very painful degree, for I cannot go into the abodes of suffering, to blankly look on, or talk a Gospel that I have no means to exemplify. There is always much suffering here; perhaps more than almost anywhere else. Any who may desire further information in the matter may learn more promptly from Mr. R. Scott-Moncrieff, 23, Mardol-crescent, Edinburgh, who was the agent sent here by the Relief Society, and with whom I was closely associated in the work during his sojourn here. Communications to me direct may be sent to the care of the British or American Consul here."

BOCA MISSION, BUENOS AYRES.

Dear Sir,—The past year has been to this work a time of real blessing in all its departments. Our Spanish and English congregations, although very poor, are enthusiastically doing their utmost in giving toward the support and extension of this work. The scope of the work has widened, and all around are numbers beseeching us to extend the activities so as to reach them. Dare we refuse to respond to these calls; and how can we respond to them unless the means are forthcoming to enable us to do so?

I trust soon to visit England, probably during May and June of the present year, and I am praying and expecting that opportunities may be given me to plead the cause of the Boca work in the Old Country. I will advise your readers later on of my address in England, and during my stay shall be glad to communicate with any who are interested in this work or in South American missions generally work. I shall be thankful to receive any help for this work.—Sincerely yours, William C. Morris.

OBITUARY.

M. LE PASTEUR F. PUAUX.

M. FRANCOIS PUAUX père, the historian of French Protestantism, has passed away in his eighty-ninth year. He retired from ministerial work in 1869, and was honoured in his old age as he was trusted in his more active life.

MR. DUGALD SMITH.

This brother passed peacefully into the heavenly home on Monday, February 11. Having suffered severely from fever, which developed weakness of the chest, he was obliged to return from the Zambesi Industrial Mission, arriving about Christmas last. After receiving much kindness at the Home for Missionaries at 16, Upper Hamilton-terrace, he was removed to Friedenheim, where every care and attention was bestowed upon him by Miss Davidson and the nurses until he fell asleep in Jesus.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS.

The sudden death of the venerable Frederick Douglass, the famous champion of the freedom of the slave, has excited memories of stirring times a generation ago. Born in slavery about 1817, he gained his liberty, and visited this country and advocated emancipation. His freedom having been purchased, he returned to America, and has ever since been the eloquent spokesman of the negro race. Mr. Robert Smith, writing to us from Hilldrop-road, Camden-road, N., says: "Let us hope that the demise of Douglass may help to awaken a powerful public sentiment in the States in opposition to the cruel lynchings of the coloured people, and to the maintenance of their rights in common with the white population."

DR. W. M. JONES.

The death is announced of Rev. William Mead Jones, D.D., for twenty-two years minister of the Mill Yard Seventh Day Baptist Chapel, Leman-street, E. Dr. Jones, who was an American, commenced his ministerial work among the mountains of Pennsylvania, and soon threw his energies into the cause of the emancipation of the slaves. In 1845 he was sent as a missionary to the negroes of the island of Hayti, where he laboured over six years. He was seven years in Jerusalem as a missionary, but returned through ill health in 1860. He occupied several pastoral charges in different parts of the United States, and in 1872 was called to London by the Mill Yard Church. He was a man of exceptional literary and linguistic attainments.

SIR WILLIAM COLLINS.

Sir William Collins, ex-Lord Provost of Glasgow, died a few days ago at Edinburgh, where he had removed in order to be under the medical attendance of Professor Sir T. Grainger Stewart. A native of Glasgow, Sir William was born in 1817, his father being a celebrated bookseller and publisher in the city. On his father's death he took up the business, which extended with great rapidity, until now it is one of the largest establishments out of London, the firm giving employment to 1900 workers. Sir William entered the Town Council in 1868, and five years later he wore a magisterial chain, while in 1877 he received the honour of the Lord Provostship of the city. This was hailed with great jubilation in the city by the teetotal party, Sir William being the first total abstainer who had the honour to be elected to the dignity of Lord Provost of Glasgow. He was chairman until the time of his death of the Scottish Temperance League. It was during his civic reign that the disastrous failure of the City of Glasgow Bank occurred, and he earned for himself much gratitude by the hearty way in which he threw himself into the work of relieving the distress. Sir William was a member of the Free Church, and a hearty supporter of aggressive effort, being also a director of the United Evangelistic Association.

REV. J. C. PRICE, CENTRAL AFRICA.

Yet another faithful witness has laid down his life for poor dark Africa; not this time a new and unacclimatised recruit, but one who had served 16 years in Eastern Equatorial Africa, although he was only in his fortieth year. Ever since his conversion Mr. Price seems to have had before him the desire to preach the Gospel to the heathen. After passing through the C.M.S. College, he was ordained, and sent to Africa in 1879. Arrived there, he settled at Mpwapwa—one of the chain of stations between Zanzibar and Uganda, working there with remarkable success. After acquiring the language, he reduced it to printed form, and translated portions of the Bible, hymns, leaflets, and tracts. These translations he printed, his knowledge of printing being specially useful in connection with this work. He also established schools for old and young and built a church, which was often filled to overflowing. And his work was not confined to the immediate vicinity of the mission station, for he often took long journeys for days and weeks together among the neighbouring tribes. After a year's furlough in 1886-7 he returned to his loved people, amongst whom he laboured till the end. According to the telegram he passed away on January 23, leaving a gap in the ranks of the witnesses for Christ in Africa which it will be hard to fill.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Moody, at latest accounts, was busy at San Antonio, Texas. The State Senate granted him the use of their building for several nights.

Major Cole has experienced a time of wonderful blessing in a ten weeks' Gospel mission at Wichita, Kansas. The local press speaks in the highest terms of the work and the workers, and of the spiritual upheaval that has resulted. The Major and Mrs. Cole have now taken up work at Paolo, Ka.

King's Lynn.—A nine days' mission has been concluded at Tower-street Chapel. During the mission the members helped enthusiastically. It was a heart-searching time for all. Some who were unconverted decided for Christ, but the special result was the one primarily sought—the quickening of the church and the endowment of new strength for service.

Miss McLeod, who has recently completed her course of studies in the Burnbank Training Home, has conducted a short mission in Ashley Hall, Castle Douglas, N.B. We have every reason to believe that this young evangelist will be richly used of God; her addresses and singing were much appreciated, and many are looking forward to her return in the autumn. A. DOBIE.

Derby.—Miss Radcliffe, daughter of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, has just completed an eight days' mission in connection with the Y.W.C.A. at Derby with most blessed results. The meetings were well attended, and the interest deepened as the mission went on. Miss Radcliffe spoke with much earnestness and power, and several professed to find peace, and others gave themselves up more unreservedly to the Lord's service.

Hawick.—Mr. J. Alexander Smith, evangelist, Aberdeen, began a series of meetings in this church on February 10, which were continued every evening, except Saturday, till the 20th. Though the weather was unusually cold, the numbers increased nightly. We fondly hope that several were not only impressed, but led inside the strait gate. Mr. Smith's addresses are clear, sensible, scriptural, and awakening, and he has much tact in conducting second meetings. D. STEWART.

St. Andrew's Free Church, Hawick.

New Beckton.—On Thursday last Mr. Richard Weaver concluded a very successful four days' mission at the Baptist Mission, a branch of the church at Parson's Hill, Woolwich. He came in the demonstration of the Spirit and of power, and many souls sought pardon through the blood of the Lamb. The word was much blessed to many of the young people. We pray that the work of grace begun in the hearts of the people of Beckton may go on, and that the young converts may be found faithful to the Lord's Christ in this sceptical and critical age. F. PENNY.

Louth.—We have concluded a twenty-eight days' mission in connection with the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Louth, conducted by Mr. Frank Holmes, of the Evangelisation Society. Although the severe weather continued the whole time, the attendance was far beyond our expectation. The influence has been far reaching, especially amongst our young men and young women, and many delightful answers to prayer for the conversion of the sons and daughters, have signalised the work. This scriptural and spiritual mission has left us longing to see greater things.—J. C.

Mr. Monro Collings has recently held a fifteen days' united mission at Fakenham, Norfolk, arranged by a committee of Episcopalians, Baptists, Congregationalists, Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, Salvationists, and Brethren. The services were held in the Town Hall, and excited much interest. Helpful Bible readings on the spiritual life were given each afternoon. A service for children each evening brought together from seven to eight hundred young people, and many of them decided for Christ. The evening meetings for adults were well attended, and the workers were often busy to a late hour dealing with inquirers. Messrs. Fuller Gooch and S. A. McCracken assisted the missioner for a few days.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has been holding meetings in Chatham and Brantford, Ontario, for the last few weeks. In the former place nearly seven hundred professed conversion, and in the latter some three hundred in one week. Ministers and Christians have been greatly rejoiced. Sixteen years ago Mr. Hammond held meetings in a dull shed in Brantford, and night after night souls were saved. It has been encouraging to notice how frequently in the meetings just closed men and women, converted sixteen years ago, rose to relate their experience. Some are now preaching the Gospel, and some are evangelists, who were converted in those days. N. J. DONNELLEY.

Brantford, Ontario.

Mr. Richard Weaver has been speaking the last two Sunday afternoons in the Town Hall, Stratford, to large and attentive audiences. On Sunday evening the hall was densely crowded, and many had to be turned away from the doors. This veteran in evangelistic service, speaking on the Lord's searching question, "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me?" set forth the Gospel with animation and vigour, recalling his earlier days. At the close many held up their hands to be prayed for, and there is reason to believe that not a few accepted Christ. On March 10 Mr. Weaver hopes to begin a ten days' mission at Rock Ferry, for which he will be glad of prayer.

Ireland.—Successful Gospel meetings have been held at Beragh by Revs. E. B. Cullen and P. E. Donovan; at the Curragh Camp by Rev. Wm. Smyth, of Tinahely; at Queenstown by Rev. Jno. Good, Methodist Conference Evangelist; at Ringsend, Dublin, by Rev. J. W. Ballard and others; and at Bethany Presbyterian Church, Belfast, where a remarkable work of grace has been going on for some time. In preparation for the mission the whole of one night was spent by some of the members in prayer, and as the result the neighbourhood was moved as it has not been in the memory of the oldest inhabitant. A very large number professed to have decided for Christ.

Gipsy Smith's mission in Dr. Maclaren's church, Oxford-road, Manchester, from Feb. 10 to 18, was very encouraging in results. The meetings were crowded, and there were inquirers from the first. Altogether, between five and six hundred persons were dealt with. The entire neighbourhood was stirred. This week Mr. Smith is conducting services in the City-road Congregational Chapel (Rev. J. F. B. Tinling), and next Sunday he begins a mission in Camden Town Congregational Chapel (Rev. H. Coley). Gipsy Smith is holding, this week, a special mission in City-road Congregational Chapel. The opening services on Sunday were marked by great interest, and there is a spirit of hopefulness that many souls may be won.

Manchester, Iowa, U.S.A. — A remarkable awakening has been witnessed in connection with a united mission held by Mr. M. B. Williams. At the close of three weeks' meetings over 600 publicly professed Christ. Rev. C. F. Lusk, Baptist minister, writes: "The most remarkable thing was that a very large proportion were men, young, middle-aged, and old, one having reached the age of seventy-three years. In one of the women's meetings seventy-one women arose, and testified to the fact that their husbands had accepted Christ during the meetings, some of them being professed infidels and sceptics. The hearts of strong men have been broken, and they have wept as a little child would weep, lost in the darkness of the night."

Mr. J. J. Sims has held an eight days' mission at Stratford Conference Hall. At the closing service on Sunday evening the droppings of blessing which were manifested at the earlier services culminated in a copious shower. Mr. Sims, who spoke during the week on "The Second Coming of Christ and the Book of Revelation," took as his closing subject, "The Two Great Prayer Meetings connected with the Lord's Second Coming; or, Shut Out." A solo by Mrs. Sims followed, "Too Late," resulting in a goodly number deciding for Christ. The lectures, illustrated by a large prophetic chart, have been abundantly blessed to a large number of Christians attending them, and at the same time the Gospel has been earnestly proclaimed. F. C. S.

Plymouth.—An eight days' special mission, conducted at Mutley by Rev. F. Church, has been a season of much blesssing. Diligent preparation was previously made, and the surrounding neighbourhood was divided into districts which were visited repeatedly before and during the mission. Preparatory prayer meetings were largely attended. Early morning prayer meetings were held on the two Sundays, a young people's service on the first Sunday afternoon, and an adults' "people's service" on the second. During the week, on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday afternoons, the missioner gave "an hour with the Bible," and on Tuesday and Thursday short mid-day prayer meetings proved times of blessing. At each evening service one or more decided for Christ, and went into the inquiry-room.

EXETER HALL.—Saturday, March 9, will be a "Grand Night" at Exeter Hall. The choir, handbell ringers, and instrumentalists from Spurgeon's Orphanage will contribute the musical portion of the programme, the address being given by the Rev. V. J. Charlesworth.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Canon Moore Ede, rector of Gateshead, has been appointed Hulsean Lecturer.

Rev. W. Page Roberts, of St. Peter's, Vere-street, has been appointed canon of Canterbury.

A missionary mission is to be held in Sunderland in May, conducted, it is hoped, by Rev. E. N. Thwaites.

Canon Bell has arranged for special sermons by leading men in St. Matthew's, Cheltenham, on Wednesdays.

Rev. F. Vivian Dodgson, curate of Maresfield, has accepted the charge of Tysoe-with-Compton-Wynyate, Warwick.

Bishop Knight Bruce, late of Mashonaland, has been offered the charge of Bovey Tracey, Devon, in succession to the late Canon Courtney.

Canon McCormick, D.D., is conducting a mission at All Saints', Southport. The mission was well advertised in the parish, and the services are being well attended.

The annual statement of the Bishop of London's Fund shows that it has suffered from the depression of the year. The receipts were £24,703, as against £26,415 in 1893.

The Evangelical societies propose holding Wednesday next (March 6) as a day of intercession for Home Missions, The C.A.P.S. has arranged a central service at St. Martin's, Charing Cross.

Much sympathy is felt with the Dean of Windsor and Canon Eliot, of Bournemouth, in the death of their mother, Mrs. William Eliot, who passed away on Sunday week at the ripe age of ninety-two, surviving her husband ten years.

The financial year of the S.P.G., says The Record, ended with an increase of income to the extent of £9248. This was largely due to legacies, but the parochial organisations had sent up about £1200 more than in the preceding year.

The Church Missionary Society last week accepted Rev. Charles Grant, curate of St. Philip and St. James's, Ilfracombe, for missionary service. The Committee also took leave of Miss Goodall, returning to the Yoruba country, and of Dr. and Mrs. Cropper, proceeding to Palestine.

Prebendary Whittington, rector of St. Peter's, Cornhill, has arranged for a series of special sermons on the Friday evenings in Lent. Canon Duckworth preaches the first of the series to-morrow (Friday). The subsequent preachers in order will be Canon Scott-Holland, the Bishop of London, the Bishop of Colchester, Canon Fleming, and Archdeacon Farrar.

The first of a course of three lectures on Friday evenings, by Rev. H. J. R. Marston, of Icomb, has been given at St. Augustine's, Highbury, under the auspices of the local branch of the N.P.C.U., the chair being taken by Canon McCormick. Mr. Marston's subject, "Martin Luther," was one upon which he is fully informed, and for which he has an intense enthusiasm.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Plaistow Church reports 629 members.

Stowmarket Church reports nearly 500 members.

Rotherham Church has had a net gain of twenty-two to the membership.

Arundel-square Church, Islington, reports progress in every department.

Baxter Church, Kidderminster, reports 383 members and 645 Sunday-school scholars.

Rev. F. Lansdown has conducted a week's mission services at Oxford-street Chapel, Leicester.

Mount Pleasant Church, Tunbridge Wells, reports 284 members and 122 in the village churches.

Turvey Church, which dates from 1829, when Rev. Richard Cecil was pastor, has been reopened after alterations.

An appeal to the congregation of Highgate Church to clear off a debt of £318 on North Hill Mission Hall produced £354.

Pevensey-road Church, Eastbourne, reports that 54 members have been received, making a total of 351. In the Sunday-school there are 630 scholars.

Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., will preside, on Tuesday, March 12, at the opening of the new schools at East Finchley. Dr. Horton will be amongst those who will deliver addresses.

New Court Church, Tollington-park, reports a membership of 888, 105 having been received during the past year, 32 from the Sunday-school. The Sunday-school has now 415 girls, 274 boys, and 200 infants.

Rev. F. D. Benison, vicar of Pokesdown, was present at the anniversary of the church of which Rev. H. Schofield is pastor, and expressed his pleasure in having the opportunity of showing his sympathy with other Christian workers.

During the twenty-seven years of Dr. Barrett's ministry at Princes-street Congregational Church, Norwich, £67,807 has been voluntarily contributed. The church has decided to release Dr. Barrett temporarily from his duties, so as to enable him to accept invitations to visit America, Jamaica, and British Guiana.

The deacons of Tottenham-court-road Chapel (Whitefield's Tabernacle) inform us that a pamphlet is being circulated soliciting funds to secure a hall and aid other work, the name of "Whitefield's" being associated therewith. They desire it to be known that the appeal in question has no connection whatever with Whitefield's Tabernacle.

At the annual meeting of Allen-street Church, Kensington (Mr. C. Silvester Horne), Mr. Edward Spicer reported that the total income was a little over £4000, in addition to which £1000 had already been promised to the Centenary Fund of the L.M.S. Sixty-two members had joined the church during the year, a net increase of 23. The guilds and Sunday schools include about 400 young people. The superintendent of the new mission at Olaf-street reported on the great success of the work there.

The public recognition of Rev. H. J. Shirley as pastor of Dawes-road Church, Fulham, was held on Monday last. Many ministers of the neighbouring churches of various denominations were present, as was also Rev. J. Calvert (Nottingham), the former pastor. Mr. Shirley resigned good prospects in the Inland Revenue Department to undertake the work of the pastorate, and the Divine blessing has rested upon his labours in a largely increased membership, and an augmented congregation since he entered upon the charge last June.

Calls.—Rev. W. Harrison Towle, to Strood, Kent; Rev. A. Forrester, of Billinghurst, to Napier-street, Deptford; Rev. W. McCubbin, to Dumfries.

Resignations.—Rev. D. O'Donnell, of Malvern, Victoria (N.S.W.); Rev. W. E. Day, of South Brisbane, Queensland; Rev. R. Williams, of Llangollen and Trevor.

BAPTIST.

A new church has opened at Croyde, near Barnstaple.

Blenheim Church, Leeds, reports 259 members and 544 scholars in the Sunday-schools.

A new church has been erected at Coombe Bissett, on a site given by the Earl of Radnor.

A series of evangelistic services has been conducted at Tiverton, by Rev. G. Frankling Owen.

Miss Esther Berry, a member of Sevenoaks Church, has been accepted for missionary work in Palestine.

Rev. W. Dickens, pastor at Herne Bay, has been accepted for missionary work by the North African Mission.

Rev. J. L. Near, of March, who has been very ill, is recovering. He is now at Wilton House, St. Leonards-on-Sea.

A site has been purchased, in the main road at East Greenwich, by Azof-street Church for the erection of a new Chapel.

The annual report of Ebenezer Church, Burnley, shows a membership of 415 and in the school 757 scholars. Fourteen organizations are in vigorous operation.

On Tuesday week the first anniversary of the settlement of Rev. John Spence was celebrated by an enthusiastic meeting at Chelsea Baptist Chapel. The success of the year's work has been encouraging, eighty-four having been added to the church, and fifty-nine have been baptized.

At their monthly meeting last week, the committee, in view of the serious financial condition of the Baptist Missionary Society, devoted the morning to prayer. The meeting was held in the library under the presidency of Mr. Rickett, the treasurer, and the transaction of the usual business was postponed until the afternoon.

The London Baptist Association, under its new president, Rev. Geo. P. McKay, of Stoke Newington, undertakes this year the purchase of two chapels, one at Stroud Green and the other at Hornsey Rise. The former was reopened on the 27th inst., Rev. A. Tilly, of Cardiff, takes temporary charge of the work. Hornsey Rise Chapel will be reopened about the middle of March.

The first anniversary of the opening of the new Bright on Chapel has been celebrated. On Sunday, February 10, sermons were preached by Rev. J. Culross, D.D. On the following Tuesday evening a public meeting was held. Mr. Francis Johnson, J.P., C.C., presided, and addresses were delivered by Revs. Charles Green and Henry Cordon, Mr. T. A. Leigh, and the pastor, Edmund Morley.

On Sunday week special sermons were preached by Pastor John Felmingham in connection with the seventh anniversary of the opening of Northcote-road, Wandsworth. On Wednesday a public meeting was held, presided over by Mr. E. Wood. Addresses were given by Rev. Douglas Thompson, David Llewellyn, and the pastor. The church secretary reported 455 members on roll—337 added during present pastorate—and all agencies flourishing.

The Year-book for the church at Woodberry Down, Stamford Hill, shows that additions have been made during the past year of fifty-seven, the membership now standing at 503. Since Rev. George Hay Morgan settled in 1891, 431 members have been received, 173 by baptism. The manual contains reports of many auxiliary branches of the work, including the Home Mission, with a membership of 230. The Sunday-school has fifty-six teachers and 543 scholars, and the Band of Hope 247 members. The Christian Endeavour Society, commenced just a year ago, has sixty-five members and is steadily increasing.

Calls.—Rev. Charles Joseph, of Portsmouth, to Dalston Junction; Mr. A. Griffiths, to Sweet Turf, Netherton.

Resignations.—Rev. T. A. Judd, of New Clee, Grimsby; Rev. T. Evans, of Tenby.

METHODIST.

A fortnight's mission held at Bugle, Bodmin, has been productive of great good.

The good work at Greenbank, Plymouth, is being carried on with vigour and enthusiasm.

Interesting special services have been held in Nechell's Park-road Chapel, Birmingham.

Three weeks' special services at Hayle have been the means of the awakening of many.

The work at the Wesleyan Chapel, Addiscombe, is reported as vigorous and flourishing.

At Blackhill, a series of evangelistic meetings, held by the minister, has been much blessed.

Special services conducted by Mr. Matthews at Penponds, near Redruth, have resulted in a great quickening, and the conversion of many.

Methodism seems to have made a new start in Scotland. Nearly every one of the Scottish stations is doing well—many of them remarkably well.

Several of the Primitive Methodist stations in London are now employing Biblewomen, and the results are leading others to adopt the same agency.

Mr. William Sampson has held a three days' mission at South Petherton. The services were well attended, and marked by much heart-searching power and blessing.

The Leeds Wesleyan Mission recently celebrated its anniversary, and a gratifying report of progress was given. Rousing speeches were made by Revs. H. P. Hughes and W. D. Walters.

Last week we mentioned the imprisonment of a Methodist minister in Guernsey for performing the wedding service. We are glad to announce that the Home Secretary, Mr. Asquith, has ordered the release of Rev. S. Harry.

A perplexing state of things is just now causing a good deal of anxiety in the Primitive Methodist Connexion. From the flourishing state of the educational institutions, it might be gathered that the life of the churches was never more awake than now. Yet this very year the circulation of the two principal publications of the denomination show a serious decline.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The annual meeting of the Blackheath Church showed steady progress in all branches of work.

St. Andrew's, Bolton, reports 38 new members added last year. The work is reported as prospering.

At Worcester, the Presbyterian cause is reported as in a flourishing condition, and a good work is being done.

At Belgrave, S.W., the cause is reported as having entered on "a new lease of activity and prosperity." The annual meeting just held was full of interest and hopefulness.

The first annivesary of the settlement of Mr. McQueen as pastor at East India-road was celebrated on Sunday week, when Principal J. Oswald Dykes, D.D., preached in the evening.

The annual meeting of Brunswick-street Church, Manchester (Rev. W. Rigby Murray's), has just been held. The membership (including 156 at the mission hall) was reported to have risen to 557.

The question of "leakage" with regard to Church membership has of late been the subject of much anxious debate in most of the English Presbyteries. The figures given in the Blue Book of 1894 put the question in a grave light. The number of communicants received by certificate in 1893 was 1,136 more than the number removed by certificate; but beyond these removals there were 3,355 lapsed cases reported in which no certificate was issued.

Calls.—Mr. P. Carnegie Simpson to Wallington; Rev. J. P. Williams, of Runcorn, to Plesnewydd, Cardiff; Rev. J. O. Thomas, to Menai Bridge; Rev. E. D. Finland, of Greenock, to Free St. Enoch's, Glasgow (accepted); Rev. H. M'Callum, of Nairn, to Thurso.

Resignation.—Rev. Dr. Smith, of Cathcart Parish Church, Glasgow.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Clapham-road, S.W., on 12th inst., Mrs. J. T. Olney, aged seventy-six, widow of the late honoured J. T. Olney.—At Sussex Villas, Kensington, on 18th inst., Rev. Samuel Bird, aged sixty-six, formerly well known as minister at Hornton-street and South Kensington Baptist Chapels.—At Sleaford, Rev. Mark Adams, aged sixty-four, a retired Baptist minister.—At Newport, Mr. J. G. James, aged sixty-five, honoured and loved as a Christian worker both at Newport and at Watchet.—At Skipton, Mr. Samuel Farey, aged seventy-two, an active helper in the Lord's vineyard.—At Pontlottyn, on 18th inst., Rev. J. Mathias, a faithful minister.—At Paulerspury, Rev. Joseph Buckingham, aged eighty-two, who retired from the pastorate twenty-five years ago, after long and fruitful ministry.—At Gipsy Hill, on 19th inst., Rev. Richard Allen, vicar of Christ Church, who was for many years closely identified with Evangelical work in London, and was a member of the committee of the C.M.S., the C.P.A.S., and similar organisations.—At Harrogate, on 15th inst., Mr. J. B. Brown, aged sixty-eight, a helper of many.—At Small Heath, Birmingham, on 15th inst., Mr. S. Uren, aged sixty-four, for nearly forty-five years a preacher of the Gospel.—At Great Yarmouth, Rev. O. Jackson, aged seventy-eight, after thirty-nine years' active labours as a Methodist minister.—At Carmarthen, on 16th inst., Rev. J. Wyndham Lewis, aged fifty-seven, pastor of Water-street Chapel since 1870. His wife, who had nursed him in a long illness, passed away the day before her husband.—At Maghnamorne, Rev. Notices.

A correspondent asks the source of the following lines:—

"This is the bud of being,
The dim dawn, the twilight of our day,
Life's theatre as yet is shut, and death, strong death alone, can heave the massive bar,
And make us embryoes of existence free."

The passage has been taken down as recited.

BOOKS FOR WORKING GIRLS.

Dear Sir,—The library department of the Young Women's Christian Association has served to many girls as an introduction to the various benefits of the Association. Our girls are very fond of reading, and readable books are in great demand; for this reason we try to furnish each Institute with a library of attractive and useful books. To supplement this and to provide a periodical supply of fresh literature, we furnish from the central library department boxes of fifty or 100 books, exchangeable at the end of the year. These constitute a lending library, and I need hardly say the wear and tear is considerable. The boxes constantly need replenishing, and the library department is often in great straits to provide new books.

May I ask your numerous readers if they will help us by gift of books or a small donation? The books need not be absolutely new, but should be in good repair and of a character suitable for working girls. Miss E. Dashwood, 39, Bryanston-square, W., is hon. sec. of the Y.W.C.A. library department.—Yours faithfully,

Mary Morley, Hon. Sec. London Y.W.C.A.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on lectures now being delivered to the Free Church College students, Aberdeen, on evangelistic work, by Dr. Wilson, of Barclay Church, Edinburgh. — For guidance in correspondence with an officer, the son of a godly father. AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

INSTITUTED 1807.

Treasurers: FRANK A. BEVAN, Esq.; W. J. PARKS, Esq.

When was it instituted? 87 years ago.

Whom does it assist? The Lord's aged poor of both sexes, and of various denominations, who are 60 years of age and upwards. The pensioners dwell in all parts of the United Kingdom. Many are widows, some are blind, others have been long afflicted, and one has been bedridden upwards of 30 years; 917 are over 70 years of age, and of this number 239 are upwards of 80, and 16 more than 90. 1310 pensioners are now upon the books.

How does it assist? By pensions of Five, Seven, and Ten Guineas per annum, and by Homes at Camberwell, Hornsey Rise, Stamford Hill, and Brighton for 180 of the pensioners. £8400 per annum are expended in pensions alone, and £1800 in maintaining the Homes and the various funds connected with them. The pensions are distributed to the recipients at their own abodes. The Homes are open for the inspection of visitors daily (Sundays excepted).

What Help is required? The Annual Subscription List needs doubling. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me." JOHN E. HAZELTON, Sec., Office, 83, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

CENTENARY

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Head Quarters: 14, Blomfield-street, E.C.

This Society, founded in September, 1795, by a number of Episcopalians, Presbyterians, and Congregationalists, on a broad and catholic basis, from which it has never departed, is about to celebrate the completion of its

among the heathen and unenlightened races of the earth.

The Society has had the honour of sending out more than a THOUSAND MISSIONARIES, not reckoning their wives, among them such distinguished men as John Williams, Moffat, Livingstone, Morrison (the first Protestant Missionary to China), Medhurst, Ellis, Mullens, Gilmour, of Mongolia, and Dr. Mackenzie, of Tientsin. In pioneering work in lands little known, in translating the Bible (some forty versions of which in whole or in part have profited by their labours), in the preparation of Christian literature and educational manuals, the Society's representatives have always occupied an honourable place, while their contributions to science have been generously acknowledged by scientific men.

Its Chief FIELDS OF LABOUR are:—China, from twelve chief centres; North India, the Madras Presidency, and Travancore; Madagascar; South Africa; Central Africa; West Indies; Polynesia and New Guinea.

It has on ITS PRESENT STAFF 258 missionaries, 17 of whom are qualified medical missionaries; 1476 native ordained pastors and evangelists; over 12,000 other native helpers; 94,192 church members; 404,795 native adherents; 1891 schools; 125,984 scholars; 10 hospitals, in which 98,992 patients were treated during 1893.

Never did the Society possess a stronger, abler, or more devoted band of agents than to-day; never had it such openings for work or such promise of success as now. Money is the great need. "The possibilities of going forward are simply limited by the means of going forward."

A Centenary Fund of £100,000 has been opened, £43,000 of which has already been promised. Donations are earnestly solicited, and may be made payable to the Rev. A. N. JOHNSON, M.A., 14, Blomfield-street, London, E.C.

FRIENDLESS & FALLEN.

Homes for 240 Young Women & Girls.

The Reader is earnestly asked to aid this Mission, which is designed to seek the salvation of the bodies and souls of poor young women and girls.

SEVEN HOMES and an OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE are dependent upon the voluntary gifts of the Lord's Stewards.

About 1200 Applications for Admission are received at the Office every year, and prompt succour is always afforded to every suitable case.

900 poor creatures were assisted last year at the Open-all-Night Refuge, and about 500 through the Homes.

Gospel Services, Bible, Temperance, and other Classes are frequently held for the spiritual welfare of the Inmates.

Messrs. MORGAN AND SCOTT will receive contributions, or they may be sent to

MARTYRS' MEMORIAL HALL, DARTFORD.

Wednesday and Thursday of last week will long live in the memory of those who were privileged to be present at the opening of the Blackwood Institute for Lads, as an extension of the work carried on at the Martyrs' Memorial Hall, Dartford The members of the Dartford Lads' Bible-class assembled in the new building, together with the members of the Juveniles' Protestant Mission and Sunday-school, about 300 being present, when Colonel Sandys, M.P., Colonel Morton, and Mr. Johnstone, M.P., entered to open the new building. Earnest prayer having been offered, Colonel Sandys, M.P., declared the building open. Adjournment was made to the large hall, which was crowded, over 500 persons being present. A deep solemnity characterised the proceedings, and testimony was abundantly forthcoming to the influence Sir Arthur exerted.

A PARTING WORD.

Now that I am on the eve of returning to my country, I once more ask for an interest in the prayers of your readers. Seven years ago, on coming to these shores, my object was to acquire a knowledge of English and business transactions. For the first three years I was without God. I cared not for the Bible nor for its Author; but I feel profoundly thankful that He cared for me and opened my blind eyes to see how poor I was, and that a saving knowledge of Him was the best thing in the world. So you see I am going back to Japan in possession of a treasure infinitely better than the highest attainment in material progress and scientific enlightenment—good although these are.

With many thank for the frequent opportunities accorded me through The Christian, yours faithfully,

W. H. Omura.

EXTRAORDINARY SUCCESS IN THE TREATMENT OF OBESITY.

"Our corpulent readers will be glad to learn how to positively lose two stone in about a month with the greatest possible benefit in health, strength, and muscle, by a comparatively new system. It is a singular paradox that the patient, returning quickly to a healthy state, with increased activity of brain, digestive, and other organs, naturally requires more food than hitherto; yet, notwithstanding this, he absolutely loses in weight 1 to 2 lb. daily, as the weighing machine will prove. Thus there is no suggestion of starvation. It is an absolute success, and the author, who has devoted years of study to the subject, absolutely guarantees a noticeable reduction within twenty-four hours of commencing the treatment. This is different with other diseases, for the patient, in some cases, may go for weeks without being able to test whether the physician has rightly treated him, and may have derived no real or apparent improvement in health. Here, we repeat, the author guarantees it in 24 hours, the scale to be the unerring judge. The treatment aims at the actual root of the disease, so that the superfluous fat does not return when discontinuing the treatment. It is perfectly harmless. We advise our readers to call the attention of stout friends to this, because, sincerely, we think they ought to know. For their information we may say that, on sending cost of postage (fourpence) a reprint of Press notices from some hundreds of medical and other journals—British and foreign—and other interesting particulars, including the 'recipe,' can be had from a Mr. F. C. Russell, Woburn House, Store-street, Bedford-square, W.C." —Belfast News Letter.

PARIS CITY MISSION.
President—THE LORD KINNAIRD.
Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq.

Each day has a record of blessing. Our ten evangelists are encouraged by open doors, and a fair share of attention from a people who know not the Gospel. Spiritual darkness is dispersed, while infidelity and superstition are overcome by "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." Several of our liberal friends have been called home, and our poverty is such that unless others cast into this part of our Lord's Treasury the work of an effective missionary must cease.

Information will be given and contributions gladly received by J. M. WEILLAND, Hon. Sec.

KING EDWARD MISSION
AND RAGGED SCHOOLS,
SPITALFIELDS.

Who will help the Sick, the Aged, and Struggling Widows with young families?

Among the 3,000 poor children and people identified with this Mission are many suffering very much from want. As the visitors pay upwards of 40,000 visits to the homes of the poor every year, they have special knowledge of the deserving. The whole of the Officers and 120 Teachers and Workers give their services gratuitously.

Contributions will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Hon. Superintendent, CHARLES MONTAGUE, 4, Bedford Square, E., or may be sent to the Office of "The Christian." Bankers, BARCLAY & Co., 54, Lombard Street.

MISSIONARIES' OUTFITS.

MISSIONARIES preparing their Outfits, or Supplies, are invited to send for book, giving list of requirements and special terms, to JOSEPH TUCKER, 83 and 85, Newington Green-road, N. Passages secured at Missionary rates. Parcels to India and China, 3d. per lb., minimum, 1s. References to Missionaries and Missionary Societies. Established 1867.

Notes and Comments.

It has been arranged that the meetings for Thanksgiving and Prayer should be held in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, E., on Wednesday, May 1.

The hopes and expectations of the godly women who gathered last Friday at St. Martin's Hall to pray about the London County Council election on the following day have not been realised. The party of reform has suffered a serious reverse, although they retain the balance of power. The lesson of the struggle seems to be that in the case of advancing social freedom and civic government, "the more haste" may be "the less speed." Those who are labouring for the elevation of the masses of the people and for a better environment of their lives, will be in no wise discouraged at this turn of affairs, but will pray on and work on in the cause of sanitation, sobriety, and the lessening of public incitements to vicious pleasure.

In his address at a City church last Monday, before the Christian Social Union, Rev. J. Carter, of Oxford, made some strong points. He argued very conclusively that to the Christian man the principles of the Gospel of Christ must have sway in all departments of his life—social and political as well as individual. He insisted on the primary and supreme importance of personal character. The man who avowedly lives and acts on Christian principles cannot go far astray, to whatever "party" he may attach himself.

One of the ladies of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union has been investigating the working of the Boys' Brigade in the United States, and she expresses the opinion that Christian men and women generally, if they understood the institution and its tendency, would be opposed to it. She reports that she has asked individual boys everywhere, "What do you learn in the brigade, and what do you do with it?" and that they have answered her, "I hope there will be a war when I am a man, and if I am a General, I will be ahead of any of the others." She finds a spirit of emulation as to who shall have the best uniform, and where they shall get the money to pay for it. She knows that there are many of these brigades where the boys' great thought is war. "This idea is inculcated and strengthened in the very being of the boy." The Ohio W.C.T.U. has adopted a resolution deprecating the movement. The proposal is to substitute physical culture exercises for the military exercises.

Will any lady or gentleman institute a similar investigation into our brigades in England and Scotland? Will they go beyond that, and tell us what effect is being produced upon our telegraph messengers and Board School boys by the system of military drill? We cannot but fear that we are, by one means and another, quietly training a military generation of Englishmen. The cadet corps in public schools and in some private schools, the cadet battalions for working class boys in large towns, the boys' brigades for Sunday-school boys, the military drill for Board School boys and telegraph boys, sweep into the military net a large portion of the youth of the nation; a tendency also is being imparted, an enthusiasm created—with what result we shall see when a clamour is raised for conscription. The true antidote to this false training is to form life-saving brigades. Where is the man with the fitness for this work? Can the Friends not supply one?

The Committees of the Peace Society and of the Arbitration Alliance of the Churches have united in a memorial to the King of the Belgians, praying him to proffer his good offices to the President of the French Republic and the Queen of Madagascar, with a view to the settlement of the points at issue between the French and Malagasy by arbitration or mediation, so as to avoid a conflict which all Christians must certainly deplore. The memorialists are sanguine that his Majesty's representations would be listened to, and have great weight. We should rejoice for everyone's sake if this proposal were to be favourably entertained; for it makes the heart sick to think of a country just emerging from heathenism, yet having in the course of a generation made great progress, broken and demoralised, and thrust back by war. One sees in anticipation the schools and churches forsaken or destroyed, and the hospitals, just beginning their humane work, crowded with wounded and dying soldiers.

Time alone can prove whether the peculiar methods of the Salvation Army in its foreign mission work are the best for the purpose in view. At any rate the Army has to be credited with an overflowing zeal and a spirit of aggressiveness, which have enabled it to accomplish great things. We note that it is now preparing to send Gospel messengers to some new far-off fields, Japan among them. For carrying out these plans and sustaining the agencies already in operation, it will need increased help from the Christian public. We regret to know that its foreign exchequer is empty, and trust the generous liberality of Christian friends will supply the fuel necessary to keep the fires ablaze.

The discussion at the meeting of the Humanitarian League on "The Public Control of Hospitals" is one symptom among several that hospitals are on their trial. We have been very proud of them, but these testing times are searching out their defects. It is now demanded that they shall not be experimenting places for doctors, and that the patients shall be regarded and treated as human beings, not as mere "cases." Of course it is implied, and sometimes also it is roundly asserted, that hospitals have been too often made into schools of medicine instead of houses of healing. It is asserted "that the medical profession generally had come to regard as legitimate and necessary certain methods of research which the members of the Humanitarian League hold to be illegitimate, unnecessary, and pernicious."

Sir John Bridge, when passing sentence on a well-dressed young man for committing wilful damage in a London hotel, expressed some sound though severe words :—

I know nothing which speaks so badly of the middle-classes of this country as the enormous number of young men there are who, finding that their fathers have been successful in trade or profession, think they need to do no work. They won't do anything at all. They say they won't be tied down to a desk, and instead of earning their own livelihood they think it no disgrace to live on their father's earnings. One sees that everywhere. There are far too many of these idle rogues, as I had almost called them. Of course, as they do no work, they get into mischief. The difficulty in these cases is to know what punishment to inflict. As a rule the punishment falls on the parents. If you fine them it comes out of the father's pocket; if you send them to prison, it comes out of the mother's heart. Men like you are too heartless to feel the degradation of imprisonment, or the disgrace of causing your father to spend money which perhaps ought to go to your sisters or other members of the family.

The present Archdeacon of Manchester once had the courage to say in Westminster Abbey, that the greatest danger to the British Empire is the West-end of London, meaning the idle rich. Inherited wealth generally produces such results as Sir John Bridge censured.

University Settlements have grown to such proportions, and have become so potent in our modern city life, as to deserve a book to themselves, "The Universities and the Social Problem" (Rivington, Percival & Co.). The need for something of the kind was obvious enough. As Sir John Gorst says :—

Almost every winter in London there is a panic lest the condition of the poor should become intolerable. The richer classes awake for a moment from their apathy, and salve their consciences by a subscription of money, which, if it occasionally relieves acute distress, make things in the end far worse than at the first. The annual alarm may some day prove a reality, and the destitute classes may swell to such proportions as to render the continuance of our existent social system impossible. The instinct of self-preservation should, therefore, make society grateful to anybody who will spend his life in gaining the confidence of the masses and guiding their ideas into channels in which the common good of all is the prevailing influence.

The Americans have followed our example and Hull House, Chicago, founded five years ago, and managed by women, has led the Illinois Legislature to regulate the hours and conditions of women's and children's labour. The New York Settlements have aided in breaking up the power of Tammany, in stopping sweating, and in promoting reform in the elementary schools. Mr. Percy Alden, Warden of Mansfield Settlement, Canning Town, E., who has been so exhaustively examined by the Unemployed Committee, says :—

One wealthy man who was willing to spend and he spent in the service of the people of East London, willing to wait until their very natural prejudice against him was overcome, might completely change the environment and life of the district in which he settled.

Better spend the money on that than on making his sons idle vagabonds.

The fact that a scene from New Testament history has been transferred to the Parisian stage may be regarded in some respects as a tribute to the undying interest and worth of the sacred records. But we fail to perceive what good end can be served by constructing a puppet show for the vulgar and frivolous crowd out of Scripture history. The associations of the Parisian drama are at the opposite pole from all the sanctions and holy influences of Bible story and teaching.

Rev. R. P. Ashe (C.M.S.), of Uganda, who has seen a good deal of the strife and confusion in that country, inquires whether the Ugandese, who used guns for deadly purposes, or the Englishmen, who made the guns, are the worse offenders in the light of God's law? He states that while this war question is one of the most difficult we have to face, he every day grows more and more convinced that the Society of Friends are absolutely right in teaching the wickedness of war. He might justify this conclusion by missionary work all the world over. One of the most obvious lessons taught by it is, that to love men and do right to them is a far surer way of gaining power over them than by fighting them.

We recently referred to the unsatisfactory way in which Mr. Horne has treated the subject of the opium war in his "Story of the L.M.S." Dr. Horton sinned more seriously in a signed article which appeared in The Chronicle of the L.M.S. on Mr. Horne's book. He gave what was "equivalent to an advertisement of Mr. H. N. Lay's 'Note on the Opium Question,' with the added sting of a suggestion that this pamphlet had not yet been answered." For this he is most effectively taken to task in The Chronicle by Mr. F. Storrs Turner, who remarks: "Think how it must grieve our China missionaries—Legge, Chalmers, Sadler, Griffith John, Arnold Foster, and, indeed, all of them without exception—to learn that a leading article in the L.M.S. Chronicle defends the Opium War." The editor excuses himself on the ground that it was a signed article, but we fancy the Opium Commission would quickly saddle the whole Society with the responsibility of it, and so will other persons. Mr. Horne's inadequate and misleading page also remains as it was. Will this kind of thing aid the Society's effort in this centenary year?

Menno Simonis, a Dutch Roman Catholic priest in the sixteenth century, was converted to Jesus Christ through the study of the Word of God, and became famous for his consecration and holy influence. He ultimately became a Baptist-Quaker, combining in himself some of the chief features of both; he was opposed to war and to taking oaths. Some of his followers are settled in Russia, and form an industrious and useful portion of the community. The Moscow Gazette announces that the Government of the Stavropol province has made a grant of many thousand acres of the Imperial lands, on a perpetual lease, at a merely nominal rent, to the Mennonites, in view of the great benefits which have accrued to the State by the reclamation of large tracts of desert land to fertility and fruitfulness by the industrious Mennonites of the North Caucasus Provinces. This seems to point backward to a more tolerant time in Russian rule than we see now. Pity but the Czar could be persuaded to regard the Stundists of to-day in the same light as his Government regards the Mennonites.

When Paul admonishes fathers not to provoke their children to wrath, he does not counsel the discontinuance of chastisement, for he adds: "Nurture them in the chastening and admonition of the Lord" (R.V.). There is a chastening which irritates and enrages. To be punished unjustly, to be rasped with peevishness, to be stormed at with blind rage—all this provokes to wrath, and leads to resistance, but the chastening of the Lord has justice for its occasion and measure. It obtains a sympathetic response from the conscience of the child who is chastened. And it develops in him a deeper sense of truth and righteousness. The chastening of the Lord is also good in method for its purpose, just as it is right in occasion and measure. A quiet, tender word of rebuke will draw tears of sorrow, where a sharp word or a petulant blow would only have provoked anger and saucy defiance. These are days when parental authority ought not to be slackened, but increased, only it must be increased by the right power.

"The Bookstall Censorship."

The censorship of the Press is a very difficult operation. Messrs. W. H. Smith and Son refused to sell or admit into their Library "Esther Waters," by George Moore. Messrs. Eason and Co., of Dublin, who possess a similar monopoly of railway bookstalls in Ireland to that of Messrs. Smith and Son in England, have refused to sell "The Woman Who Did," by Grant Allen; and not only so, but have refused also The Review of Reviews for February, because it devotes eighteen pages to this book as its Book of the Month. The letter of Messrs. Eason and Co., through their managing director, Mr. Charles Eason, is so high toned and important, that we reproduce it:—

Dear Sir,—We have considered afresh the character of the February number of your Review so far as it relates to the notice of Grant Allen's book, and we are more and more confirmed in the belief that its influence has been, and is, most pernicious.

Grant Allen is not much heard of in Ireland, and the laudations you pronounce on him as a writer, so far as we know him, appear wholly unmerited.

At any rate, he appears in your Review as the advocate for Free Love, and it seems to us strange that you should place his work in the exaggerated importance of "The Book of the Month," accompanied by eighteen pages of comment and quotation, in which there is a publicity given to the work out of all proportion to its merits.

I do not doubt that the topic of Free Love engages the attention of the corrupt Londoner. There are plenty of such persons who are only too glad to get the sanction of writers for the maintenance and practice of their evil thoughts; but the purest and best lives in all parts of the field of Christian philanthropy will mourn the publicity you have given to this evil book. It is not even improbable that the perusal of Grant Allen's book which you have lifted into importance as "The Book of the Month" may determine the action of souls to their spiritual ruin.

The problem of indirect influence is full of mystery, but as the hour of our departure comes near, the possible consequences to other minds of the example and teaching of our lives may quicken our perceptions, and we may see and deeply regret our actions when not directed by the highest authority, the will of God.—We are, dear Sir, yours very truly (for Eason and Son, Limited),

Charles Eason, Managing Director.

The point in this letter which we wish to emphasize is the responsibility which the writer recognizes as resting upon the seller of books not to circulate such as may probably "determine the action of souls to their spiritual ruin."

Messrs. Smith and Son do not boycott "The Woman Who Did"; perhaps if the circumstances happened over again they would not boycott "Esther Waters."

We must do Mr. Stead the justice to say that we agree with him in thinking that Mr. Grant Allen has been "hoist with his own petard," and that "'The Woman Who Did' would pretty effectively 'do' for the doctrine which her story was published in order to support."

We wish to draw attention to a much more serious question. There is a growing issue of cheap periodicals, of which the circulation must be many thousands a week, which are degrading, lascivious, prurient, demoralising, and calculated to "determine the action of souls to their spiritual ruin" far more widely and far more effectively than either of the books mentioned above. We hope that this literature is not sold on the bookstalls in Ireland, but we are sorry to say it is widely disseminated by the railway bookstalls in England; we see it in the shops of other booksellers, and, we are ashamed to say, occasionally on the counters of professing Christians.

Archdeacon Farrar on Daniel.

The Daily Chronicle makes a chief feature of its reviews of books, and generally they are able and judicious. But sometimes they get very much to sea when they deal with Biblical literature. In their review of Archdeacon Farrar's "Book of Daniel" they comment thus:—

This new volume of the Expositor's Bible, coming from the orthodox firm of Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton, is little else than an overwhelming and cumulative argument to show that Daniel is a specimen of Jewish Haggadah, or, as we should call it now, a novel with a purpose, written by a devout and gifted Jew in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, in order to inspire the courage of the Maccabees and to confirm the faithfulness of the pious under persecution. Dr. Farrar thinks the date can be definitely settled, January B.C. 164. . . . It is shown that the stories can lay claim to no historic foundation; Belshazzar and Darius the Mede are imaginary characters, and the situations described are free inventions.

But while Dr. Farrar, as a scholar and a lover of truth, is thus bound to traverse opinions which have been and still are reverently cherished, he is very emphatic in maintaining that the religious value of Daniel remains unaffected. The purpose of its writer was fulfilled, and continues even now to be fulfilled.

Would any reviewer with a literary character to lose write thus on any other subject? Would he say, for example, that the historical novels of Sir Walter Scott, Harrison Ainsworth, Bulwer Lytton, or Beaconsfield, are of equal value with authentic history? Yet we are seriously informed that though reduced from a writing inspired by the Holy Ghost to a "novel with a purpose," "the religious value of Daniel remains unaffected"! In the language of the expositor:—

Its right to a place in the Canon is undisputed and indisputable, and there is hardly a single book of the Old Testament which can be made more richly profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, etc.

We prefer to accept the book as it is, as the Lord himself quoted from it, and as it is capable of vindication by facts and arguments which Dr. Farrar ignores. We cannot but express our pained surprise that in this series of expositions there should be such a weaving together of linen and woollen, such a mingling of divers seeds.

PRAYER.

Prayerless—and sad;
Prayerful—and glad,
Joy beaming bright on my soul;
Blessedness knowing,
Praise ever flowing,
Pressing to glory's bright goal.

Prayerless—and sad;
Prayerful—and glad,
Happy as onward I move;
Free of God's grace to tell,
Helping the miserable,
Ever abounding in love.

Prayerless—and sad;
Prayerful—and glad;
Oh, what a refuge from care!
Rocks to the sea are hurled,
Prayer overcomes the world,
Oh, what a power is prayer! A. M.

THE UNVEILING.—10.

THE OPENING OF SIX SEALS.

The distinction shown in our third paper to exist between Literal and Symbolic prophecy, which is, I think, indisputable, carries with it the conviction that symbolic prophecy generally does not relate to specific events, but to the principles and powers which simultaneously or successively influence mankind and make the history of the world. I arrived at this conclusion quite independently of the following passage from Professor Milligan's exposition of the chapter before us:—

The reader must observe that throughout the whole of this section (vi. 1; xviii. 24) we have to deal with principles, not with particular historical events. No single detail of future history will be presented to our view. We shall see only in successive pictures the great relations existing between God and man in the present preparatory scene, the relation of the glorified Lord to his own people, and his relation to them in a hostile world on the one hand, and to a Church which proves faithless to her high vocation on the other.

"HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF."

One writer mighty in the Scriptures thinks there is no question that this vision of the Seals relates to David and his successors. Some synchronise it with events in the Apostle's own days. Others trace its fulfilment in the first four Christian centuries, while still others regard it as wholly future. The fact that so many events, widely differing in time and manner, and yet alike in principle, have been fixed upon as the explanation of these symbolic visions, is enough of itself to suggest, if not to prove, that this is a book of principles rather than of events. The reason why so many different events can be regarded as foreshadowed by the same vision is that "History repeats itself." "The thing that hath been it is that that shall be." "There is nothing new under the sun." "As your fathers did so do ye." The stage and the scenery are perpetually changing, but the motive and the action and the dramatis personæ, in heaven and earth and under the earth, are the same, from the period of the lie in Eden, "Ye shall be as God," to that of the lie of the Man of Sin, who in the temple of God shows himself that he is God."

In the first vision John had seen Jesus his Lord, the Alpha and Omega, on earth as God manifested in flesh, the Faithful Witness, the Living One who has been dead and lives for evermore, the High Priest among the candlesticks, which symbolise the churches. In the second he had seen the Great King upon his throne in heaven, and the risen Saviour as a Lamb as it had been slain, in the midst of the throne.

THE TWO MYSTERIES.

God had sent his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and through his death had condemned sin in the flesh, and annulled him who had the power of death, and delivered them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. From the Godward side everything had been accomplished. Jesus the Meek and Lowly had put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself, and defeated the Rebel and Usurper. But the Fall, angelic and human, had been departure from faith in the Creator King; and faith, trust, confidence, is the essential link which connects the creature to the Creator.

Will the proud and haughty scorner acknowledge his treason and defeat, return to his allegiance, and accept the punishment of his iniquity? And will men, whom he had deceived and corrupted, repent and turn to God; praise Him that sitteth upon the throne for his redeeming love and power; and give glory to the Lamb who redeemed them by his precious blood? Thus only can the wondrous work of redemption become effective to any of the human race; and it is of the seed of Abraham—the sons of faith—He taketh hold.

Surely the angels from whose ranks the Anointed Cherub fell might have expected his submission. But already it had been abundantly evident that sin had too deeply infected the very nature of the fallen creature for these anticipations to be realised; and the only wise God, who foreknows and foreshows the future, unveils in the succeeding visions, to the inward sense of those who have eyes to see and ears to hear, the mystery of iniquity and the mystery of God.

ADMINISTRATORS AND INTERCESSORS.

Mark the close relation between the Lamb, and the Living Creatures and the Elders—the redeemed whom He has made unto his God and Father a kingdom of priests (cf. Ex. xix. 6; Rev. i. 6), the administrators of God's government, and the intercessors before his throne. It is the Living Creatures who one by one cry, as it were with a noise of thunder, "Come!" to Him whose coming is the exceeding great and precious promise of the book: "Behold He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him." "Surely I come quickly." And it is one of the sympathising priestly Elders who asks John concerning the sealed sufferers of the succeeding vision, "Who are these, and whence came they?" that he may have the opportunity of telling him of their everlasting consolation.

The iniquity of evil spirits and of wicked men was not yet full. Nor had the riches of God's goodness, and forbearance, and long-suffering, yet been fully manifested. Nor had his saints yet been proved and prepared for their respective spheres of rule in the coming Kingdom.

Jew and Gentile in the flesh had rejected God's King and Kingdom; therefore a people should be born from above, in whose souls righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, the everlasting foundations of the Kingdom, must be laid. Gentile and Jew rejected Him as He came, made of a woman, made under the Law; it remains to be made manifest that they will equally reject Him though risen and glorified.

Therefore, when one of the Living Ones cries "Come!" the response is not his coming in glory, but a series of visions which foreshew the character of the period which intervenes between the going forth of the Gospel and the great and terrible day of the Lord.

THE FIRST SEAL OPENED.

First, a white horse of righteousness and peace and victory, with a Rider having a bow, whose arrows, as in Psalm xlv., are sharp in the hearts of the King's enemies. And there was given unto Him a victor's crown. And He went forth conquering and to conquer.*

The riders on the horses are not persons, but impersonations. And although we should not be wrong in saying that Christ is the Rider on the white horse, it is more in harmony with the symbolism to say that the rider is the impersonation of Christianity—of the Gospel of God—the briefest form of which is "Jesus and the resurrection"—"With great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus." Of this and this alone, embodied in the risen Christ, can the words be used, "conquering and to conquer"—literally, "that He might conquer." None else and nothing else is to conquer, save He of whom the Sovereign Father says to the kings and judges of the earth: "Kiss the Son, lest He be angry, and ye perish from the way when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him." For a little while the Beast will be seen conquering, but he is not "to conquer." This effectually confines the Rider on the white horse to Christ and his Gospel.

* Every creature is the embodiment of some idea, or quality, or power, and when used symbolically in Scripture its significance may be either good or bad. For God made everything very good; but the whole creation was made subject to vanity and evil when man, its head and ruler, fell. The horse is the symbol of strength and energy, and for purposes of movement and speed is the complement of man. Thus Scripture speaks of the horse and his rider as one composite idea, which mythology caught and exaggerated in the centaur.

THE SECOND SEAL OPENED.

But the Prince of Peace and the Gospel of Peace bring a great sword. The Gospel takes from the earth the false and deadly peace which is not peace. For "there is no peace saith my God to the wicked." The Lord gave the word, great was the army of the weak women preachers. The evangelist must endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds. All these symbolic expressions imply warfare.

This blood-red horse and its rider represent not merely war between literal armies of men. The great sword here means what it meant in the words of the Lord Himself, "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword." This antagonism is always the effect of the piercing two-edged Word of God. The conflict begins within the individual soul: "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit and the Spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other, that ye may not do the things that ye would." It quickly appears in the family, and sets a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and a man's foes are they of his own household. It extends to nations, and millions of crusaders and others, who have taken the sword of blood in the name of Christ, have perished by the sword. It will summon the kings of the whole earth to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. It will end when the Satanic leader gathers the nations from the four quarters of the earth, to compass the camp of the saints about and the beloved city, and fire comes down out of heaven from God and devours them (Matt. x. 34-36; Rev. xvi. 14-16; xx. 7-10).

THE THIRD SEAL OPENED.

The black horse of famine follows, for God's four sore judgments are war, famine, the noisome beast, and pestilence. Bread is weighed out, as well as measured; a day's wage buys a bare subsistence, and they eat their bread with carefulness. John being in the Spirit would understand the mysterious direction, "And the oil and the wine hurt thou not," for all through the Old Testament a deep significance attached to oil that makes man's face to shine and wine that strengtheneth man's heart. Oil was to John the familiar symbol of the Holy Spirit, and wine of the blood of Christ. And as there may be a sufficiency of bread and water, and a famine of the Word of the Lord, so while bread is eaten by weight and water drunk by measure, there may be an abundant supply of the Spirit, and the consciousness that Jesus keeps the best wine until, coming to the throne of grace, we obtain compassion and find grace to help in time of need.

We have seen the vision of the white horse of righteousness and peace and victory followed by the red horse of war and bloodshed, and by the black horse of scarcity and famine. The victorious Gospel had made many even of the Jewish priests obedient to the faith, and had caused the rabble to cry to the Gentile rulers, "The men that have turned the world upside down have come hither also." The men of the earth turned upon the men of the heavenly calling, and these endured a great fight of afflictions, and were made a gazing stock, by reproaches and afflictions, and took joyfully the spoiling of their goods, knowing in themselves that they had in heaven a better and an enduring substance.

THE FOURTH SEAL OPENED.

War and famine lead on to death and the grave, and the red and black are followed by the livid, pale-green horse, whose rider is Death, and Hades follows with him. To these is given authority to kill with a fourfold death the fourth part of the earth. When the sower goes forth to sow, a fourth part falls into good ground and brings forth fruit, thirty, sixty, a hundred-fold. These who receive the seed, "the word of the kingdom," into an "honest and good heart," do they constitute the fourth part of the earth intended here, who are sacrificially slaughtered (like the slaughtered Lamb) with sword and with hunger and with death and by the beasts of the earth?

It would seem so, for in the next vision the Seer beholds under the altar of sacrifice the disembodied spirits of those that had been slaughtered (the same sacrificial word) on account of the word of God, and of the testimony which they held. In the four means of death there is evident reference to Ezek. xiv. 21. But while these are judgments on the ungodly, it is part of the mystery of God that in the New Testament they fall also upon the followers of the Lamb. For we have an altar of which they who serve the Tabernacle have no right to eat—to us it is given not only to believe on Him, but also to suffer for his sake; to go forth unto Him without the camp, bearing his reproach. For they that will to live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution.

THE FIFTH SEAL OPENED.

When the fifth seal was opened John's quickened ear heard, not the voice of living saints on earth crying for vengeance on their enemies.

Theirs not to make reply,
Theirs but to be and die.

He heard the souls under the altar cry. There is no cry so eloquent to the heart of God as the uncomplaining suffering of his martyred saints.

He heard the cry of Abel's blood from the ground. Even the cry of the defrauded reapers enters into the ears of the Lord of hosts. The prophet assured the saints of the old covenant, "He that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye," and their Divine Protector warned the men of the earth, "Touch not mine anointed and do my prophets no harm."

THE SIXTH SEAL OPENED.

The opening of the sixth seal brings the answer to their cry, and in the vision that succeeds, the men of the earth, in their turn, cry to the rocks to fall upon them, and the hills to cover them, from the wrath of Him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. As the days of Noah and of Sodom anticipated the day of Christ, so the terror of Hosea x. 8, and of Luke xxiii. 20, reach their climax in the vision of the sixth opened seal.

John could not but understand that whether the time should be long or short by human measurement, a panorama had passed before Him of the course of time, from the going forth of the Gospel in Pentecostal power, until the prophecy by Paul should be fulfilled, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the Gospel of his Son; for God is righteous in rendering tribulation to them that trouble his people, and to those who are troubled rest with the souls already beneath the altar. "Proclaim a Fast."

Recent issues of The Christian give abundant proof of the widespread concern which is felt by many spiritually-minded persons in view of the sad and painful reflections which are forced upon us by a consideration of the present condition of religious life and testimony. Many there are who keenly feel and deeply mourn these things, whose thoughts and longings are never publicly expressed. Yet a responsive chord is reached in many hearts when facts are recorded and suggestions made which urge upon us the need for humble confession, ceaseless prayer, and mighty faith in the ever-living God.

No one can fail to sympathise with the feelings which have prompted Mr. Crosbie's letter in a recent issue, respecting the need for a national fast. The need for such a fast is undoubted. But though such a suggestion is admirable in its spirit, might it not be brought into closer harmony with Scripture by being somewhat altered in its form? Would it not be better to call the believing people of God to fasting and prayer, rather than the nation at large? A national fast appointed from the throne might have a greater spectacular effect, but what is really needed is the encouragement and development of the spirit of prayer and fasting among those who in heart own Jesus as Lord. If only such would gather together, whether in large or small companies, whether on one day, or, better still, on all available occasions, the work, though quiet and unobtrusive, would be mighty in its effects.

How many there are who mourn and grieve over the spiritual apathy which prevails, and whose hearts are longing for a mighty work of God to break forth in this and other lands! In bygone days, as they ministered to the Lord and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them" (Acts xiii. 2). What a mighty missionary work took its rise among these fasting, believing souls! Why should it not be so again? There can be no doubt that every great work of God is preceded by the outpouring of the spirit of prayer, and then in answer to prayer God fulfils his own gracious purpose, and delights the hearts of his saints by the wonders of his arm.

Already it is evident that a spirit of awakened expectation is being aroused in various ways. There are those who are painfully experiencing the lack of clear Gospel teaching. Many are keenly suffering through advancing Ritualism; others through growing Rationalism; and the minds of many such are being deeply exercised as to whether they shall sever their connection with the church with which at present they are in fellowship. Now, in all such cases a very careful and wise judgment is necessary, because the question is a complicated one, and many considerations should be taken into account. But without entering into any such matters, is it not evident that such exercised souls may, without severing their church connections, at least meet in little bands in one another's houses at any convenient times, and give themselves to humble confession, fasting, and prayer?

In the beginning of the great Evangelical Revival of the last century, the gracious work began in a Holy Club at Oxford. A few kindred spirits gave themselves to fasting and prayer, and the devout study of the Scriptures, and out of it came John and Charles Wesley, and other mighty men of God.

These men did not begin by seceding from the Church of England. They began by privately banding themselves together to help one another to do God's will, and carry out his word.

Now what we want to-day is a vast renewal of the spirit of the Holy Club (so called in derision). Not that such should be organised, but that here and there, and everywhere, godly men and women should again do as those early Methodists did; and who could foresee the outcome? Fresh Wesleys and new Whitefields might arise therefrom. The Holy Ghost might separate new souls, and thrust them out to new fields of labour in the dark places of the earth.

Humiliation, fasting, prayer! None of us realise to the full how wofully it is needed! Then let us, in little bands or large—in cottage or in spacious halls—give ourselves to prayer and fasting, "not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching" (Heb. x. 25). AGGRESSIVE WORK.—NO. 14.

During my holidays last year I managed to speak personally to a good number of people as to their soul's salvation; and one man among the rest I well remember speaking to. He was a big, burly, middle aged, good-tempered, well-to-do-looking man, who was evidently enjoying his change of air and rest from business. I first met him in one of the principal thoroughfares of the town, and, handing him a tract, said, "May I give you this paper, sir?" He took it, and I then asked whether his soul was saved. He did not answer the question at all satisfactorily, but I passed on, thinking the question might do its work. A day or two afterwards I met the same man on the cricket-ground at a county match in the neighbourhood, and, not recognising him, handed another tract. "Ah, yes," he said, "you gave me one of these before." I confessed to not remembering him, but repeated the question about his soul's salvation, and left him.

A few days went by, and whilst in the crowded railway station, I met the man again, and without knowing him I once more addressed him as before. In a friendly sort of way he expressed surprise that I should so often tackle him. Of course, I owned to my stupidity, and then moved on. But only about twenty minutes afterwards when walking away from the railway station, I overtook a stout man, and, without looking particularly at him, I handed him a text saying, "May I give you this, sir?" Fancy my surprise to find it was my old friend once more. This time he exclaimed with some emotion, "Dear me, you have undoubtedly a message for me, as you appear to follow me wherever I go." He was evidently much struck by the circumstance, for he saw it was purely a matter of accident on my part.

He at once made for a form close by, and, taking his seat, steadily watched me with keen interest as I continued to address others as I had addressed him. We never met again, but I felt as though the Lord's hand was in it, and am sure he felt the same. It was indeed curious that I should so frequently speak to him without recognising him.

NEW TESTAMENT TEACHING.

(Concluded.)

Why have such powerful essays as Dr. Harris's Mammon, and such impassioned denunciations as have been poured in a stream from all pulpits against the worship of gold, and such eloquent and brave, though sarcastic, books as Ruskin has sent forth for a lifetime, seemed to make not an atom of difference in anyone's behaviour as to money-hoarding? Attention has been paid to the disbursement of money, and some have won an enduring fame for giving mere fragments of colossal fortunes to the service of mankind, while the bulk was spent on themselves and their children. Nowadays special attention is being paid to the means by which money is made—that it shall not be done at the expense of wronged and oppressed hirelings—and over this the strife is becoming fiercer every year. But our Lord goes deeper than either of these phases of the money question; and is it not because his teaching has been overlooked or misinterpreted that our human teaching has failed?

THE TEACHING OF ROME.

In this field Protestantism has been outdone by Romanism, which has called for a total surrender of wealth under certain conditions, and has taught, though in a mutilated and inadequate way, that this surrender would be found useful to the soul that would enter the kingdom of heaven. The men and women who have taken vows of poverty sincerely, and kept them honestly, have been Rome's persuasive preachers who have charmed the nations, her army of fighters who have carried her standard into every land. She knows the moral power which invests her poor priests; she glories in the celestial light which plays around her monks and her nuns. With its hoarded gold the Vatican ensnares kings; with the poverty of its priests it wins the people.

THE TEACHING OF PROTESTANTISM.

Discarding Rome's teaching as to poverty, Protestantism has only in a dim way perceived our Lord's teaching—which is not for sections of his people, but for them all; not for ministers and missionaries only, but for laymen also. Protestantism has even commended the amassing of wealth as not only perfectly lawful and Christian, but even commendable. Dr. Harris says:—"The desire to possess riches is not sinful, provided that desire exist under certain restrictions." Jonathan Dymond, who professes to draw his principles in his book on Morality directly from the New Testament alone, has this curiously qualified judgment:—"Without affirming that no circumstance can justify a great accumulation of property, it may safely be concluded that far the greater number of those who do accumulate it do wrong; nor do I see any reason to be deterred from ranking the distribution of a portion of great wealth, or a refusal to accumulate it, amongst the imperative duties of the moral law." The conclusion of this sentence, which is bold and consistent, contradicts the opening, which is halting and feeble. Ruskin says—"What is chiefly needed in England is to show the quantity of pleasure that may be obtained by a consistent, well-administered competence, modest, confessed, and laborious." Yes, but what is a competence? and in making it, do not men generally lose their souls, and become the coarse, vulgar, materialistic mortals for whom he feels such infinite contempt? Jesus Christ is the only Master who knows what and where the roots of human trouble are, and how to destroy them; He surely laid his axe to one of the most prolific and most deadly when He forbade his followers to accumulate property.

If our Lord's meaning has been correctly given, those who believe Him to be the wisdom of God require nothing else; the outworking of his word need not trouble them; the scoffing of the world need not distress them. The world has scoffed at his words and ways from the beginning; his cross is foolishness; his sermon an impossible code of precepts for men to conduct life upon as it is. And no doubt the world cannot; it must be converted and changed before it will live the Christly life.

THE PROBABLE EFFECTS OF CHRIST'S TEACHING.

What would be the probable effect upon the Church of a literal acceptance of Matt. vi. 19, and an honest adherence to it? (1) It would create a new conception of the reality of the providence of God, and impart a new sense of his wise and beneficial action. The materialistic tendency of our times, which leads to a denial of God as a living and gracious Father, interested in the welfare of his children, would receive such a check as no arguments can give. The hand of God would be seen everywhere, because everywhere looked for and depended upon.

(2) The daily trust in God for subsistence would aid a living trust in Him as the God of salvation also.

(3) It would make the Church a brotherhood in a far truer sense than it is now. Without for a moment forgetting the beauty, the gentleness, the unaffected kindness, the humility of many wealthy Christians, there is no denying that money creates a class feeling and all the subtle dangerous evils which spring from it; and these would disappear if hoarding ceased.

(4) It surely would be more possible to convince sinners of the reality and worth of the heavenly substance, when saints did not amass earthly substance.

(5) It would show the might of co-operation in every province of life; for Christians would come together as they seldom do now for all kinds of work for God and man.

(6) As the Friends are a bulwark of peace by acting literally on certain portions of the Sermon on the Mount, so an unworldly church would prove an effectual breakwater to worldliness in every form, whereas the present system of money-hoarding lets worldliness pour in upon us through a hundred channels, threatening to drown us in destruction. "Business must be carried on," and it is too often carried on as the world carries it on and for the same object. Ruskin places his faith in the working classes to save England for some time to come from the depraving and degrading influences of the worship of wealth; but the Churches of Christ ought to be her saviour. A correspondent writing a while ago from New Zealand spoke of the Australasian colonies as "given up to an idolatry of gold, as the road to wholesale pleasure seeking." How different this from New England, where the Pilgrim Fathers sought "a faith's pure shrine, and freedom to worship God," not scope for making money. Shall we ever live to see our English churches sending forth Christian men solely intent on living a simple, pure, quiet, unostentatious life? An exodus of such unworldly men now would be quite as great a blessing as was the exile of the Pilgrims. Ruskin speaks well when he says: "We need examples of people who, leaving heaven to decide whether they are to rise in the world, decide for themselves that they will be happy in it, and have resolved to seek, not greater wealth, but simpler pleasure; not higher fortune, but deeper felicity; making the first of possessions self-possession, and honouring themselves in the harmless pride and calm pursuits of peace."

(7) With Christians of this unworldly stamp, there would come such an outburst of zeal for God's glory as would bear down all opposition. There would be such a supply of men and means as the Church had at the beginning. Thousands of workers are of this spirit, but all Christians need to be baptized into it.

DR. H. M. WHARTON IN ROCHESTER, U.S.A.

Last October a district convention of the International Christian Workers' Association was held here in this city, from which much blessing came. Such workers as Rev. R. A. Torrey (of Mr. Moody's Bible Institute at Chicago), Mrs. E. M. Whittemore (of New York City), Colonel H. H. Hadley, Rev. B. Fay Mills, and Rev. John C. Collins (of New Haven) were here, and the effect for good of their earnest exhortations will not be measured in this world. The convention lasted for six days.

Dr. Wharton and Dr. Barron, of Baltimore, are now holding evangelistic meetings afternoons and evenings in this city. They are being held for the entire month of February. The meetings are largely attended, and pervaded by a deep interest. With much pathos and tenderness Dr. Wharton pleads with sinners to come to Jesus. Every Sabbath afternoon he speaks with great acceptance to a large audience of men only at the Y.M.C.A.

Next month it is expected that the evangelist Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman will hold evangelistic meetings for three weeks in this city. It is hoped that these meetings will not only result in many conversions and accessions to the churches, but also in a deepening of missionary interest, so that as a result more workers may be sent forth to Asia and Africa.

REUNION WITH ROME?

Sir,—You are, of course, aware that the E.C.U. has lately held a great meeting in Bristol to consider the desirability of uniting the Church of England with the Church of Rome. In the course of a speech Lord Halifax made use of the following remarks:—"Surely there is no one, if he thinks what it would be to see the Western Church once more reunited, her schisms healed, and peace once more existing amongst her members, but must long for the day when the Church of England, our own branch of the Church which we love so well, should again be united in bonds of visible communion with the Apostolic See and all the churches of the West. What would we not give to be able to make our confessions and communions abroad as we do at home! Who can endure the sense of being separated from those with whom in all essentials of belief and sentiment we are one? And why should we not see the day of such a happy reconciliation? It was never the intention of the Church of England to depart from the rest of the Catholic Church. What is there which should make her desire to remain in her present isolation, which should make such a renewal of her ancient relations with Rome impossible?"

In order to let your readers see what sort of a Church these Ritualists desire to be united with, I will quote from a speech by Archdeacon Farrar in the House of Convocation Feb. 8. Speaking on the subject of the consecration of Señor Cabrera in Spain, by the Archbishop of Dublin, the Archdeacon, in the course of a long and eloquent speech, made use of these words: "What was the Church from which these Spanish Reformers had separated? Even in the fourth century two of its bishops were the first to appeal to the secular arm, staining the robe of Christ with blood. It was Spanish bishops who provoked remonstrances by putting people to death. They were responsible for the introduction into the Church of that horrible principle which had been the violation of every principle of the ancient Church. From the eleventh to the fifteenth century it was the Church of turmoil and licence. It was a leader of the Roman Catholics who said that from the fatal day that the Spanish Church formed an alliance with Courts, there had been the exile and burning of Jews, Mohammedans, and Protestants. From 1491 to 1798, as many as 32,000 human beings had been burned in the cities of Spain. This Church, this Roman Church, this intruded Roman Church, had massacred the saints of God. In that time, 296,000 people had been tortured, imprisoned, submitted to the rack and the thumbscrew, in a way that would make the very fiends of hell laugh with delight that a Christian Church should commit such deeds. The priesthood of that Church, through the confessional, had been so corrupt that the Pope had been obliged to interfere. Women had been seduced by priests, and the very provision appointed by the Church had to be revoked. If the Church of Rome had repented, it would be something, but it had never disavowed the Inquisition. It was a Spanish Jesuit who introduced the casuistry making falsehood permissible. The Church of Spain had not altered in the least. A Dominican, in 1882, advocated the Inquisition, and a Spanish professor lately, at a banquet given in Madrid, gave the toast of the Spanish Inquisition. Would this House treat as schismatics those who separated themselves from these things? Would they frown and jeer at the people who separated?"

Surely there is nothing to prevent Lord Halifax and all the 34,000 members of the English Church Union going home to their dear old merciful Father, the Pope. The Church of England, which they profess to belong to, will rejoice and be glad when she shall see their faces no more.—Yours, &c.,

RAILWAY MEN IN IRELAND.—There are on this line a number of drivers, firemen, and guards who are serving the Lord, and there are some platelayers and other grades who are also engaged in the same happy service. They are anxious as they go along the line to drop messages, not only from their lips, but from their hands. Would you insert an appeal for Gospel tracts for this purpose? There are vast numbers of our railway-men who need the Gospel, and by this means some may be led to accept Christ.

THE LATE DR. A. J. GORDON.

HIS LAST PRINTED MESSAGE.

From the January Watchword.

It is not so much new discoveries of truth, and new revelations of duty, which are needed to make the coming year one of blessing and usefulness as a renewed acting upon what we already know. "Duty done is the soul's fireside," says Joseph Cook. What is duty undone but the soul's Inquisition, in which conscience often brings us to the rack and makes us cry out for pain at neglected opportunities? "I remember no one sin," says Richard Baxter, "which my conscience does so much accuse and judge me for as for doing so little for the saving of men's souls and dealing more fervently and earnestly with them for their conversion." And who that knows the Gospel, and the lost condition of man by nature, does not often arraign himself for this great defect of service? Probably the most constant occasion of this neglect is found in our delegating of duties to others. Specialism has no such place in Christianity as it has in science.

WATCHING FOR SOULS.

It may be well that in the medical profession one class of physicians takes the eye, and another the heart, and another the brain, and so apportion out the work among different classes of practitioners. In grace there is no such division of labour whereby we may remand to the minister the work of preaching, and to the church missionary the work of dealing with souls, and to the foreign missionary the work of preaching Christ in the regions beyond. All duties are for all Christians; there are no assorted obligations; there are no exemptions from spiritual taxation for such as would move into some mild suburb of Christianity in order to avoid the assessments of the Gospel. The greatest need in the work of the church is that of personal dealing with souls by all Christians, and the greatest loss comes through delegating this work to ecclesiastical specialists—preachers, teachers, evangelists, and missionaries. Let us then so appreciate our personal trusteeship of the Gospel that we shall refuse to farm it out to agents; let its "now is the accepted time" so constantly ring in our ears that we shall decline to confine our ministrations only to canonical occasions—to Sundays and to prayer-meetings. "Be instant in season and out of season," says the apostle, which means, being interpreted, "Be unseasonably in season; make an opportunity out of an inopportune occasion." A gentleman recently said to the writer: "The most earnest and useful man we have in our churches declares that he owes his conversion to words spoken to him by a Christian lady across the counter in Jordon and Marsh's store when he was selling goods to her." Did not this woman earn the beatitude, "Blessed are ye that sow by all waters"?

INTERCESSORY PRAYER.

Next to this duty of watching for souls, what if we name as of chief importance the exercise of intercessory prayer? But Christians will not pray earnestly unless they believe strongly. Asking without expecting; shooting heavenward the arrows of ejaculatory prayer with no real anticipation that they will hit anything—how long will such exercises be kept up? This suggestive sentence is culled from the letters of John Newton:—"About this time I began to know that there is a God who hears and answers prayer." Had he not known it before? Yes; but it is not what we know, but what we know that we know, which has real, practical value to us. It is true indeed that faith has the first place in this great transaction; we believe in order that we may know, instead of knowing in order that we may believe. Yet, if knowledge is the child of faith, it gives the strongest support to its mother when it is full grown.

Here is the promise: "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name." We must believe it in order to have the treasure which it holds. But when experience has italicised this promise, when a clear and definite answer has underscored it with an emphatic amen, we have henceforth the strongest support in pleading it. Therefore, let us earnestly seek for distinct answers to our prayers, and yet let us not insist altogether on visible and material answers. If we pray that the Lord will teach us to pray, and get an answer, it is a great attainment. "My highest longing is that I may long after God," said a great saint; and what better thing can we pray for first of all than for a prayerful spirit? Having attained this we shall be likely to find the next thing—contact and communion with God—and to learn how much better are spiritual riches than material. The simple-hearted Christians of Labrador used to say to the Moravian missionary: "We wish to have such a longing after God as a child towards its mother, or as a man in the chase for the reindeer." What is this confession but a translation into simple language of the Psalmist's words: "My soul followeth hard after Thee."

SPIRITUAL FRUITFULNESS.

And we may add another to the list of graces which we should diligently strive to attain, that of spiritual fruitfulness. Peter's words are very striking when exactly translated: "If these things be in you and abound, they make you that you shall be neither unworkful nor unfruitful." Works may be counterfeited; fruits cannot be counterfeited. Good works may be external to us; spiritual fruits spring only from the deepest interior life. Hence Jesus makes these the true test of discipleship, saying, not "by their works," but "by their fruits ye shall know them." The tendency of our times seems to be for the Church to run to outward activities as trees sometimes run exclusively to wood and leaves. The husbandman's cure for the latter defect is to lop off branches here and there, and so to drive the sap into fewer channels, that the vitality may be intensified. Is this not the need in our lives—a cutting off of our superfluous activities, an excision of dead works, and then a deeper being in order to a wider doing? "Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit," says Jesus; and this can be possible only by a firm abiding in Him. More watchfulness, more prayerfulness, more fruitfulness. "God grant that this may be a year famous for believing!" So wrote an eminent Christian on the first page of his diary as he began a new year. If it shall be so with us it will be certainly a year famous for watching, for praying, and for fruitbearing.

HIS LAST SPOKEN MESSAGE.

Dr. Gordon's last spoken message was of peculiar interest. On Monday, January 21, he addressed the Baptist Young Men's Social Union. From that meeting he went home ill, and never left his bed again. This was the substance of his message to young men: "Never say 'No' to God.' As usual, Dr. Gordon's address had a strong and charming missionary flavour. He told the story of William Carey, of whom a brother minister said after his death that "Brother Carey, while a very good man, had one serious defect of character. He was a man of indecision and inconstancy, as he himself admitted." The good brother proved his charge by the following remarkable statements: "William Carey himself said that he left the shoemaker's bench because he could not say 'No'; that he went to Leicester, where he was pastor of a Baptist church for five years, because he could not say 'No'; that he went to India as a missionary because he could not say 'No'; that he devoted his life to the translation of the Bible because he could not say 'No.'" "To think," said Dr. Gordon with gentle irony, "of charging such a man with inconstancy!—a man who contributed over two hundred thousand dollars to the treasury of the Baptist Missionary Society; a man who translated the Bible into twenty-six different languages and dialects; a man who made himself, under adverse circumstances, a great scholar as well as a great Christian and missionary; a man whose constant motto was, 'This one thing I do.' But the secret of his life, young men, was that he could never say 'No' to God. There are tempters and temptations to whom you ought always to be ready to say 'No,' but, I beg of you, never say 'No' to God."

INEBRIATE WOMEN.—The report of the Manchester Retreat for Inebriate Women, the Grove, Fallowfield, states that during last year twenty-four women were admitted to the retreat, and twenty-three left after a year's stay. At present there were twenty-five inmates.

HOUSE OF REST.—At the monthly meeting at the St. John's Wood House of Rest last Friday the address in the afternoon was given by Mr. R. C. Morgan on "Spirit, Soul, and Body." In the evening an interesting address was given by Mr. F. J. Rayner on the "Zambesi Industrial Mision."

REV. J. DENTON THOMPSON, rector of Southport, speaking at a public meeting in connection with the B.W.T.A. at Southport, described the employment of barmaids as perhaps the greatest curse of the drink system. Not only were there great physical evils due to the long hours and the standing, but the exposure of girls to coarse jests was a reproach to a purity-loving people.

THE HORRORS OF WAR.

In a book published by Messrs. Longmans, Green, and Co., giving the history of "The Defence of Plevna," by W. V. Herbert, who took part in it, there are some terribly realistic pictures of the awful concomitants of war. Here is one passage descriptive of the writer's experiences in a Russian attack on Plevna:—

"I wish my pen were sufficiently capable to give some notion of the awful confusion of such a contact. A chaos of stabbing, clubbing, hacking, clutching, shouting, cursing, screaming men; knots of two or three on the ground, still fighting, and clinging to each other in their death agonies; above the surging mass of heads the butt-ends of rifles rising and falling like the cranks of numberless overheated engines; the mounted men with swords working at lightning speed; the colours bravely leading the way; horses charging into solid bodies of men, rolling over, burying beings already mutilated beneath them; frantic faces streaming with blood; the air reeking with the breaths of thousands of panting creatures, like the hot winds of the desert—all the madhouses of the world discharging their contents into this seething cauldron of human passion and iniquity; Dante's Inferno let loose, a legion of demons from Hades run riot.

"As to my personal experience, I remember nothing. The actual contact, the psychological moment of such a charge, lasts but a minute or so; and such a lifetime of experience is crowded into it that memory is hopelessly at fault. All I know is that I discharged the six chambers of my revolver, but at whom I have no notion; that my sabre was stained with blood, but with whose I cannot tell: and that suddenly we looked at one another in blank surprise—for the Russians had gone, save those on the ground, and we were among friends, all frantic, breathless, perspiring; many bleeding, the lines broken, the tactical units dissolved; most of us jabbering, shouting, laughing, cursing, dancing about like maniacs."

Almost as gruesome and horrible is the account of hospital treatment of the wounded after a battle:—

"Imagine the interior of a low, long, roughly-built shed (I do not know whether it had been erected by our troops, or had originally served as a storehouse or barn). Imagine a thick, hot, reeking atmosphere, filled with indescribable odours, enough to sicken you by the very recollection. Imagine some hundreds of men—yourself among them, with a raging thirst devouring you, a burning pain in the face, every particle of strength and vitality gone—lying on the bare boards, with bundles of rags or filthy straw for pillows, many insensible, many dead or dying, many in convulsions, some horribly mutilated, all bleeding, most of them groaning, others screaming, or pitifully whining for a drop of water, in half-a-dozen languages. Oh that cry for 'Su!'—how often have I heard it! After the lapse of seventeen years it follows me into my wildest dreams. Imagine surgeons, with tucked-up shirt-sleeves and bloody hands, giving the first-aid; for this was a temporary ambulance, in rear of the lines. Imagine callous men dealing out homœopathic doses of water, or laudanum, or brandy. Imagine everything that is most horrible, disgusting, sickening, hideous, heart-rending, within the range of your conception, and you will have a faint notion of this hell of man's creation."

REV. JOHN PYPER, of Belfast, is now in London, addressing meetings nearly every night, with marked success. On Sunday, 10th, he will preach on Bible Temperance at Presbyterian Church, Clapton, at 11 a.m. On Monday, 11th, the annual meeting of the Bible Temperance Association (London auxiliary) will be held at Exeter Hall at 7.30.

THE CLAPTON MISSION, under the superintendency of Rev. Thomas Jackson, has enjoyed a year of great spiritual prosperity. After filling up a large number of vacancies in the membership caused by migration and other causes, and other causes, a net increase of sixty-three members is reported for the year. The number of members now in church fellowship is 412.

THE STRANGERS' REST.—The monthly meeting of workers was held on Friday, at 163, St. George's-street, Ratcliff. Mr. Blair Neatby took the chair. After a season of praise and prayer, Mr. Isaacs (hon. secretary) presented a very encouraging report. Miss Beatrice Hurditch and Miss Coots are leaving England on April 12 to take charge of the work at Zanzibar. Rev. David Baron gave a helpful exposition of the first thirteen verses of Psalm lxviii.

THE TREASURES OF THE SNOW.

By DR. NEWMAN HALL.

Job could not understand the mysteries of Providence. Why should there be so much sorrow in the world? Why should the wicked often suffer when the righteous are maligned, impoverished, die? A Divine voice challenges him. Who art thou who blamest the Creator as if thou knowest all He does, and why? Dost thou understand things nearest thee? Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow at thy feet? If not, art thou competent to be a judge of the secret things of God? (Job. xxxviii. 22). Our very ignorance answers our doubt. By God were all things made. "He saith to the snow, Be thou upon the ground. He giveth snow like wool. Snow and vapour fulfil his word." But how little we know of Him! We think we understand something about the sea, the light, the stars. But how limited and imperfect our knowledge!

Our knowings are but links in an infinite chain. Increasing knowledge ever widens the horizon of the unknown. We know that vapour at a certain temperature forms crystals, and these become snow, and raindrops, freezing, fall as hail; but there are "treasures" we have not discovered. Ice forms at a temperature of 32 degrees. But why? Because a freezing wind blows; but why and whence the wind? Explorers again and again have visited the Polar regions, and still found snow and ice without end. Who has entered into these treasures to measure them? The snow is under Law—but it is the Law of our Father, not of fate or chance—not stern and heartless, but the Law of Love.

There is a special intervention in the case of the formation of snow. Everyone knows that substances expand by heat and contract by cold. Water heated increases in bulk and boils over. Water cooling becomes smaller, but when cool enough to freeze, it ceases to contract, gets larger in size, and bursts our pipe. Why this exception to a law? If, like other substances, it went on getting smaller, the same quantity of water frozen would be smaller, that is, would be heavier than water, and sink to the bottom because of its specific gravity. The result would be that every stratum of ice on the surface would sink till there would be a great mass, shielded by the water above it from the sun, and would remain many weeks or months unmelted, so that the channels of rivers would be blocked, navigation impeded, the streams would not flow off, and floods would desolate instead of fertilising. How wonderful this peculiarity, illustrating the beneficent over-ruling of natural law by God! This is a treasure of the snow. So in all our trials. God "stayeth his rough wind in the day of his east wind."

Snow has its special sorrows—roads blocked, paths perilous, injurious falls, bodily ailments, work suspended, manifold distresses. But there are "treasures." The alternation of seasons, cold as well as heat influencing for good the air we breathe, frost pulverising the soil for the ploughman and the sower, help in "preparing for our use the kindly fruits of the earth." The snow, as a blanket, screens the young plants and the springing corn from the biting wind that might destroy it. Thus affliction has its treasures, promoting spiritual health and fertility. Multitudes have seen reason to say, "It was good for me to have been afflicted." Snow and ice cause inconvenience, but they work for our good. Not pleasant—nay, even grievous, but "afterward they yield the peaceable fruits of righteousness."

Snow has treasures of beauty—trees radiant with the jewellery of winter, the hedges and meadows blazing with diamonds surpassing lapidary's skill! Snow-crystals all obey one law, yet have infinite varieties of form. Their angles are all of either sixty or one hundred and twenty degrees, yet are of such numerous shapes that one observer alone counted and classified ninety-six different patterns, and these all so symmetrically beautiful that any one of them would serve as a model for a needle-work worthy of a princess. Are there not treasures of beauty in the snow of affliction?

Let us indulge our fancy while comparing trials with crystals which are all hexagonal. The fruits of affliction in its influence on the soul are humility, penitence, patience, prayer, assurance, love. Fatal to all real religion is pride. If the wealth which gendered it depart, if in the race of ambition we see others outstrip us in genius, position, fame: if having vaunted ourselves on what we could do, physically, mentally, socially, and disease lays us aside, is it not well to be thus humbled, and become as children?

When all was prosperous around us, we perhaps thought we were spiritually, as well as temporally, "rich and increased with goods, and in need of nothing." How often has affliction led us to remember the past, to examine our hearts, and to be convinced that we are "poor and miserable, and blind and naked," and to cry, "God be merciful to Me, a sinner." Trials lend to patience. We feel our helplessness. We can do nothing but wait. Instead of obtaining at once all we wish we now must quietly endure till God Himself brings us relief. The longer the trial the greater the exercise and the fruit of patience.

This is accompanied by prayer. We can only wait patiently by waiting upon God. To whom, Lord, shall we go, but unto Thee? "Call upon Me in the day of trouble, I will deliver thee." And apart from mere deliverance from any special trouble, communion with God in prayer is a constant consolation. A believer can endure what would otherwise be unbearable, when he can cast all his care on God, and in prayer have fellowship with heaven. This will lead to assurance of hope. God is the hearer of prayer. We know that He will supply all our need, and He best knows what this is. In his own best time and way He will deliver us. "Tribulation thus worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope." This hope will not deceive us. We shall not be ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit. His love will arouse ours. This will certify our full salvation. Trials are designed for the perfecting of love. And love to God will promote love to men. Our sufferings, with God's love, will promote love and sympathy towards fellow-sufferers, and we shall be able to comfort others by the comfort wherewith we are comforted of God. If thus, like every snow-crystal with its six sides and angles, we become beautiful in such sixfold goodness, and grow more humble, penitent, patient, we shall have entered into the treasures of the snow, and have reason to "Bless the Lord at all times," winter times as well as summer. We shall say "It was good for me to have been afflicted."

One of the chief lessons of the snow arises from its whiteness. Other white objects look discoloured beside it. The Alpine snow-field makes the passing cloud ashamed, however spotless it had seemed to be. Such is the purity promised to the believer in Christ. Faith resting on Him as the Saviour from sin can pray—"wash me and I shall be whiter than snow." Washed from guilt and penalty by "the blood of Jesus Christ which cleanseth from all sin," washed from inward sinfulness, by the sanctifying grace of His Holy Spirit, and made ultimately like unto Him, seeing Him as He is. Glorified saints have "washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow."

"WHITER THAN SNOW."*

Blackened and burdened I came unto Thee,
Saviour of sinners! have mercy on me:
Helpless, polluted—Redeemer from woe,
Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.

Fountain of purity, opened for sin,
Pity the penitent, welcome me in!
Save me, embrace me, and ne'er let me go—
Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.

Cleanse Thou the thoughts of my heart, I implore,
May I thy holiness share more and more;
Daily in loving obedience to grow,
Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.

Glorified spirits surrounding the throne,
Thee as the source of their purity own;
Cleanse me and perfect me, Saviour, from woe,
Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.

Linked with those spirits in glory I am,
White all their robes by the blood of the Lamb,
This is the only assurance I know,
The promise that I shall be whiter than snow.

* From "Lyrics of a Long Life."

A CHINAMAN ON ROMANISM.

In the March issue of The Missionary Herald of the Baptist Missionary Society, Rev. G. B. Farthing, of Tai Yuan Fu, tells the story of Han Meng Pao, a native preacher of exceptional insight and power. In the course of his story Mr. Farthing says:—

The Roman Catholics, as if by design, generally manage to meet with those who come about us and show any interest. They met with Han. We preach Christ, and do not discuss the various religious systems any more than we are compelled. The proclamation of the grandly certain facts of redemption is our concern. So Han had received no warning against the errors of Roman Catholicism, nor been put on his guard against the wiles of its adherents. The Word of God, though, was for him the sole standard of truth—the touchstone to which all opinions must be brought. Well, the Roman Catholics fell in with Han, and began at once about the insufficiency of Protestant teaching for the salvation of the soul, and said that the ignorance of the pastors and others could only hurt those who followed them. Han readily admitted that human teachers, whether Catholic or Protestant, might err, but urged that, since we have the Word of God as our guide, there was no need why anybody should be led astray.

"Very good," said they, "but there are things vital to salvation which are not contained in the Bible, and which the Church's Emperor (i.e., the Pope) can alone tell us, for he knows the mind of God."

"What things are they?"

"Well, there is purgatory."

"Purgatory, whatever is that?"

"There you are, you see, your Bible does not tell you about it. It is a place of trial and torment where believers receive the punishment of their sins before they enter heaven. Whoever enters hell is utterly without hope, but from purgatory, as they are cleansed from sin, believers are passing constantly into heaven."

"That cannot be," broke in Han, "because God could not have said one thing at one time and a quite different thing at another. The Bible tells us that 'the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin!' and that He is able to save to the uttermost them that come unto God by Him! Why, the Bible is full of Christ's power to save, readiness to save, and death to save; yet, though our sinless Lord suffered for our sin, you want me to believe that man has still to bear some part of the punishment of it because Christ's was not enough. God may have spoken, that I do not know, but I know that He could not say in the Bible that Christ did it all, and afterwards say Christ only did a part of it. No, I cannot believe what you say about purgatory."

"Well, you are a long way from the truth, Of course, Christ did not do it all. His mother, the Holy Virgin, who is equal with her Son in honour, did a great deal of it."

"Ai Ya, what are you saying? Christ was God's Son, and therefore Divine; Mary was only human like ourselves!"

"What! You Protestants surely worship the Holy Mother?"

"Certainly not."

"Was she not the mother of Jesus?"

"Yes."

"Then she ought to receive equal worship with Jesus, for Jesus could not be greater than his mother." (The descendant is not greater than his ancestor—A Chinese argument.)

"Indeed! What was the name of Mary's mother?"

"That we do not know."

"Who was her grandmother?"

"We have not heard."

"But you surely worship them?"

"No, we do not."

"How is that? If Mary must be worshipped because she was the mother of Jesus, then Mary's mother must be worshipped because she was the mother of Mary who is worshipped, and similarly her grandmother and other ancestors."

The Roman Catholics began to get ruffled, and as the discussion went on got downright angry, for Han kept showing their statements to be contrary to God's word as contained in the Bible, and held strongly to the position he had at first taken up, that it was possible God might speak, but He could never contradict what He had already given us in the Bible. That is, Han took the stand of a Protestant, without being specially drilled into doing so.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MARCH 10.—ROM. IX.

Not all Israel, which are of Israel (1-13).—The Holy Ghost by the Word of God corrects and quickens the findings of conscience, and how marvellously the love of Christ increases the range and sensitiveness of the conscience. Not simply right and wrong, but questions of tender considerateness for others, then come into its jurisdiction. Oh that we had more of this anguish and yearning desire for men's salvation! (4) Amid the present ruins of Israel, let us not forget how great her service has been to the world and to the Church. (11) God's purpose and choice were certainly justified by the event; there is a close connection between foreknowledge and predestination. God's election is not arbitrary, although the reasons of its selection may lie too deep for human vision.

The Potter's Right over the Clay (14-33).—God gave Pharaoh in the ten visitations upon his idol gods every opportunity of knowing Himself, and if the proud king had humbled himself, he would have become the emancipator of Israel. He was broken, because he would not bend. Having hardened his heart against God, all that God did to turn him only made him harder. The sun that softens wax, hardens clay; the difference is not in the sun but in the substance on which it shines. (21) This allusion is borrowed from Jer. xviii. 4. The vessel was marred, because it would not yield perfectly to the potter's hand, but still he made it again. Thus we may hinder our fullest development and usefulness, yet God will still do something in and by us. (27) Israel has missed the noble office to the world which God intended for her, and was within her reach, but it has been overruled for the benefit of the Gentiles. Those have entered into the spirit of the Gospel, who have accepted the gifts of God by faith. God's purposes cannot be thwarted; if the Jews refuse them, then He turns to the Gentiles. The touchstone of choice or rejection is the presence or absence of faith. Dost thou believe in the Son of God?

MONDAY, MARCH 11.—ROM. X.

Christ, the End of the Law (1-4).—Again this yearning desire for the salvation of men. May God in his great mercy ignite the fire in our hearts also! Men feel their need of righteousness, but it is only possible for such as are really willing to submit themselves to God's. This is humiliating to the flesh, which loves to go about to establish its own, by works and rites. Get Christ by faith, and He becomes your righteousness, and you become the righteousness of God in Him.

Not Doing, but Believing (5-15).—Our doing can never win a proper standing with God, because it is vitiated at the root. It springs from the self-life. All the efforts of the self-life, even though under the garb of religion, must fail, because of their tainted origin. If we are saved, it must be by the grace of God implanting a slip of his own Divine nature, which is not I. How near Christ is to us, standing and knocking at the door. (10) Righteousness is our standing with God; salvation is the full emancipation of our nature from the dominion of sin. It is not enough to believe with the heart; there must be confession as well. Genuine faith must manifest itself in speech. Notice (R.V.) the confession of Christ as Lord is an essential condition of salvation, i.e., we must make Christ king of the heart, if we would experience his keeping power. (14) By this chain of questions we are driven to the duty of carrying the Gospel to those who know it not.

Hearing and Hearkening (16-21).—Voices speak for God through all the world. In nature and revelation alike the tones of mercy are heard expostulating with men. Faith comes of this hearing to many; but many, alas! hear and turn away. They do not hearken.

TUESDAY, MARCH 12.—ROM. XI.

Not Cast Off (1-16).—The Apostle tenderly clings to his faith that as in Elijah's time, so still, there is an election of grace, a great host of believing souls who, though unknown to man, are known and dear to God. The mass of Israel have missed, but this inner circle have obtained the heart and kernel of the Divine provision in Christ. And the rejection of the Gospel on the part of Israel has been mercifully overruled to give the Gentiles the opportunity of entering into the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ. Thus the fall of Israel has enriched the world of men. (12) When Israel is restored, men will be still more enriched. The fulness of Israel will mean the gathering of the fulness of the world for Emmanuel. (15) They are to be received back again, there is no doubt about that, and their reception will date a resurrection for a great mass of the world's populations. God hasten the day.

The Olive Tree (17-24).—The process of grafting here referred to differs from our own. We graft the good rose on the wild stock. The Oriental grafted the wild branch on the good stock. Christ is the Divine stock of men. We have been taken out of the bramble of the first Adam and grafted into the true olive. How blessed it is to be able to partake of his root and fatness! (20) Let us seek the grace of continuance, and continue in the current of his goodness. (24) Let every difficulty be met by this assurance, God is able.

The Depth of the Divine Counsels (25-36).—The fulness of the Gentiles has probably almost reached its measure, and when it is at the brim Israel's turn will come again, and all Israel will be saved. The chosen people were rejected for their unbelief, but their rejection has been marvellously overruled. (33) We come up to the brink of an infinite precipice, we can only look down into its depths, but cannot reach them. We can never find out God, but in the simplest phrase we acknowledge that as all things emanate from Him, so shall they return to Him, and augment his glory, world without end.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 13.—ROM. XII.

The Presentation of our Bodies to God (1-2).—The Apostle returns to words and thoughts of ch. vi. There he had urged that the members should be presented, as Christ's were when He rose from the dead. Between that chapter and this he had been following a consecutive line of thought, which invests with extraordinary emphasis his therefore. Worldliness is best combated by other-worldliness; nonconformity to this world is secured by transfiguration into the glory and light of the other; it is easy for a denial to be offered to the lower, when an acceptance is presented to the higher. Keep presenting your whole being to God; it will be the easiest and surest method of securing immunity from the attacks of evil. When our service is acceptable to God, we prove and discover that his will is in the best sense acceptable to ourselves.

Practical Exhortations (3-21).—Doctrine should ever lead to practice. Do not under-estimate or over-value yourself. (4) There is no need for envy or jealousy, each member in the body has its own office. (6) A full-orbed Gospel. (7) Give your whole being to the thoughts of God yearning to express themselves to man. (9) These exhortations pass from the ministry of the Church to love of the brethren. Let us ever continue these. Thence we are led out to those that need our help, and to our enemies. Circle after circle invites us. An ever-widening horizon needs to be filled with the light and heat of Christ. (21) Here is the secret purpose of all. The world is full of the infection of evil. Beware lest it master thy good; rather let thy good subdue the evil, and scatter the seeds of a harvest of blessing.

THURSDAY, MARCH 14.—ROM. XIII.

To all their Dues (1-7).—The framework of human government is a parable and miniature of the divine. We may use every legitimate means of improving the government under which we live; but when remonstrance, vote, appeal are in vain, we must submit. This was the policy of the early Church. They bore their unhesitating witness against the wrongs of their time, as their Master and his Apostles did before them. But they did not join the party of insurrection and revolt. They suffered without complaint or retaliation, and God wrought through their suffering to overthrow the gigantic tyrannies and monster wrongs of their times. (6) What a high prerogative this conception gives to public functionaries. How solemn their responsibility.

Love fulfils Law (8-10).—There is one debt which can never be paid in full. However much we pay, there is always an accruing balance against us, because we can never pay our indebtedness to God, and He has made men his residuary legatees. If we live in perfect obedience to the promptings of love, we practically do all that the most exact observance of law could effect. Let us grow in grace, the proof of which is the absolute refraining from working or speaking ill of another.

High Time to Awake (11-14).—The army of Christ needs these bugle-calls. The night is departing, morning is breaking on the hills. Let us put off the works of darkness mentioned in ver. 13; our armour is Jesus Christ Himself. Not merely virtues and graces, but our perfect Saviour: his purity, his patience, his meekness, his holiness. We must ever wear this glistening armour, and keep it bright. No speck of rust must soil its sheen. Then every weapon of the foe will glance aside.

FRIDAY, MARCH 15.—ROM. XIV.

Living unto the Lord (1-12).—Each has to stand or fall to Christ, and each should be so identified with Christ's interests as to be eagerly desirous to aid and strengthen his work in the hearts of the rest. We must beware especially of harsh judgments, lest we retard or destroy the work of grace in our brother's soul. (6) Then, as now, there were many debatable matters, concerning which Christian duty was not clearly defined. The main question for each to ask is, What does Christ want me to do? When the eye is single to Him, the whole body becomes full of light. Let the soul be clearly convinced of the Lord's will for it, it should be allowed to fulfil it, unhindered by unkind and harsh criticism. Can you give thanks about a thing? If so, you are not far wrong. There is a religious abstinence from observing days which should be respected. Since Jesus is Lord of the dead and living, they make one realm, own one Sovereign, are included under one arching heaven of love. You are not far from your Beloved.

Following after the Things that Make for Peace (13-23).—It is more important to promote a brother's inner life than to maintain an outward rite, like those of Leviticus, which the believing Jews desired to settle on Gentile Christians. On the other hand, though the Gentiles had perfect liberty about these things, they should not obtrude it, or use it in a manner calculated to tempt or overthrow their fellow-believers. How great a mistake it is to spend time in arguing about these trifles! Let us live for the righteousness, peace, and joy which the Holy Ghost gives, and all these things will fall into their right place. Focus yourself with Christ, and you will see all things else clearly, and in right proportion.

SATURDAY, MARCH 16.—ROM. XV.

Strong to Bear with Others (1-13).—If we are able to distinguish between things which fill others with anxiety, we should beware of despising them, but use our strength for their comfort and help. Not pleasing ourselves, but yielding in non-essential matters, that we may build up our weaker friends. (4) The Scriptures of the Old Testament are here referred to. The Apostle found in them patience and comfort. (5) What an exceedingly sweet title for our God. He is a Sun, and his beams are patience and comfort. (7) We have been received by Christ into his heart, and shall be received at last into his home. (9) Oh, Gentile hearts, do ye glorify God enough for his mercy? (13) May this prayer be fulfilled in us. The world is pessimistic, but the child of God abounds in hope, because he knows that God's purposes of blessing to mankind are fast ripening to manifestation.

The Fulness of Blessing (14-29).—When you are sure of your vocation, and of God's plan for you, as Paul was, then yield to the Divine Spirit. Note those words, "Christ wrought through me." This is the secret of a full life, from Jerusalem as centre to Illyricum as circumference. And when such a power is welling up in the soul, it must mean blessing for all with whom we come in contact.

The God of Peace (30-33).—These prayers were earnestly offered, but they were not answered as the Apostle thought. In the deepest sense they were answered. Throughout all there was a sense of the love of the Spirit, of joy in the will of God, and peace in the God of Peace which circumstances could not alter.

SEAMEN AT SYDNEY.—The Trafalgar House Mission to Seamen, Princes-street, Sydney, after fourteen years of useful work, is at present crippled for want of funds, through the death of many of its best supporters and the serious illness of its founder, Archdeacon King, coupled with the general financial depression in Australia. About 7000 visits by (mostly British) seamen are paid annually to Trafalgar House, 150 meetings and services held, a splendid Gospel temperance work is accomplished, and a large quantity of literature is disseminated. Help will be thankfully received by Mr. Geo. R. Harrison, hon. treasurer, Beecroft, Sydney, N.S.W.

ZACCHEUS THE PUBLICAN.—Luke xix. 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT, verse 10.

JESUS was on his last journey to Jerusalem. Having crossed the Jordan, He reached Jericho, at that time a flourishing and wealthy city. It was situated about twenty miles north-east of Jerusalem.

Zaccheus was "a chief publican" (R.V.). The right of collecting Roman taxes was sometimes purchased by men of wealth, who in turn employed sub-contractors to collect the taxes. It is probable that Zaccheus occupied the position of sub-contractor. To start with, he must have been wealthy, for it would cost something to purchase such a position. But in it he found abundant opportunity for increasing his wealth; for "in Jericho was cultivated the famous balm of Gilead, which brought in a considerable revenue. Besides which the caravans passing from North Arabia, through Palestine, to Egypt paid duties on their merchandise at Jericho."—Tristram. And it is evident that he had not been particular as to the method by which his riches had been increased (8).

Imitate the example of Zaccheus:—I. In his search for Jesus (2-4). It was no mere curiosity that led him to desire "to see Jesus" (3). Like the rich young ruler in our last lesson, he was not satisfied with his riches. He was conscious of a burden of guilt, and a bondage to evil from which he desired to be free. He had some hope that this new Teacher could and would meet his need; for had He not shown kindness even to the despised and hated class to whom He belonged?

The earnestness and sincerity of his search appears in the difficulties he overcame. What were they? His calling; his past guilt; his wealth; the crowd; and his low stature. All these he overcame. "He ran before" (4), no doubt exciting the ridicule of the crowd. But what does a man who is in earnest care for the laughter of the foolish? The tree was not one of our ordinary sycamores, but the Egyptian fig tree, which in its size and its wide-spreading branches resembles the English oak. The lesson of all this is twofold; first, that "where there's a will there's a way." Anyone who wants to find Jesus can do so. And, next, that there are sycamores in which every seeker may climb. The Scriptures, the house of God, the Sunday-school class, the company of godly people, the closet of secret prayer—these are in the way along which Jesus passes. If people were as eager to find Jesus as they are to get on—to master some favourite study, to see some royal person, to witness some grand performance—there would be many more Christians to-day.

II. In his obedience to Jesus (5-7). The name, the character, the desire of Zaccheus were known to Jesus, also the hatred and contempt with which the multitude regarded him (7). Yet Jesus called him (5), with a personal call. The use of the name was a proof of affection, and of desire for intimate acquaintance with him (Isa. xliii. 1). To offer to be guest with such a man was not only an evidence of great condescension, but a prophecy of the change which grace would make in him. It required on our Lord's part a readiness to face the murmuring of the crowd for the sake of helping Zaccheus. He took his stand by the man whom the people loathed.

The obedience of Zaccheus was prompt and joyful (6). It was joyful because prompt. It is delay that takes the gladness out of obedience. It saves from painful regret over wasted years to receive Jesus early. Was there not reason for haste? Jesus was only passing by. Soon the opportunity will have passed. Do you count on having many opportunities, and so carelessly neglect the present? Be wise enough to imitate the promptness of Zaccheus.

III. In the change which appeared in his character (8, 9).—There would be ground for the complaint of the multitude if Zaccheus remained what he was. But Jesus saves his people from their sins. Zaccheus gives a double evidence of the sincerity of his conversion, First, in an immediate act of benevolence; and next, in restitution to those he had wronged. Zaccheus properly distinguished between the two. To give a large donation to some charitable organisation out of money that has been plundered from others is not benevolence. The restitution practised by Zaccheus exceeded the requirements of the Law (see Numb. v. 6, 7). Moody says:—"We should like to have a work that reaches men's pockets. I can imagine one of the servants going to a neighbour next morning with a cheque for £100. 'My master defrauded you of £25 a few years ago, and this is restitution money.' That would give confidence in Zaccheus's conversion." Conversion that does not lead men to repay their loans, to meet old debts, to restore what is not theirs is not such conversion as Jesus desires. The reward of Zaccheus began immediately when Jesus called him "a son of Abraham," not only by natural descent, but by faith and works.

For the Young.

HAPPY ZION'S HILL.

And the street of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof.—Zec. viii. 5.

THE beauteous streets of Zion's Hill,
Jehovah's words declare,
Shall yet be full of boys and girls,
With gladness playing there.

No longer then shall wicked songs,
Or wicked ways be known,
Jerusalem shall holy be,
Their loved Messiah's throne.

He, Lord of Hosts, great Salem's King,
In glory there shall dwell,
And infant voices shall unite
"Hosannas" loud to swell!

Yet, even now, dear boys and girls
Are all beneath the gaze
Of Jesus, who will then be King,
Beholding all their ways.

For He was once a little child,
In stature small like them,
And will not, for He knows it all,
Their guileless mirth condemn.

Then, children, chaunt aloud his praise,
Yet not with voice alone,
But may his great redeeming love
By every heart be known.

YOUNG MALAGASY.

SIR,—Readers of THE CHRISTIAN will remember subscribing redemption money for a Malagasy slave some time ago, whose case was brought to our knowledge by Mrs. Peill, wife of Rev. J. Peill, Madagascar. About the same time, there was a slight appeal made for the slave's sister, who had professed Christianity and was baptized in the Christian faith, that she too might be "set free, to serve." If the money collected was not enough for that purpose, I understand it was to be devoted to the help of Malagasy slaves generally in sore straits. I have received a letter from this slave girl, translated and forwarded by Mrs. Peill, and thinking your young readers would like to see it, I forward it for publication. Mrs. Peill, when returning to Madagascar, kindly took a small gift from me to R———, and the following is her reply:—

"My dear friend,—I thank you very much for your very kind present of a dress and a zamba, sent through Mrs. Peill. It is wonderful to me, and gives me great joy that though you have never seen me, and did not even know my name, you should take such an interest in me, and show me so much kindness; and my joy is all the greater because this kindness of yours was so utterly unexpected. I thank you, and again I thank you, dear friend, with a heart full of gratitude, for all your kindness, and it is just to express my gratitude that I send you this letter; and not mine alone, but also the grateful thanks of my mother, my brother, and my husband for your kindness; and as you have been such a friend to me, I think you may like to hear a little about me and mine.

"My father died on April 24, 1890, but my mother is still living. I was born in the year 1874, but I don't know in what month. I and my brother were both sent to school in 1882 (after attending the girls' school of the London Missionary Society) for about eight or nine years. I became a teacher there for a short time. In 1890 my little son was born, and in August, 1893, my little girl. My two little children give me great joy, but the joy is mixed with pain as I think of their probable future. The desire of my heart is for my children to get an education; but we are all poor slaves, and such a thought is far from the mind of our owner. She says that if her slaves go to school, and learn to read and write, it will make them lazy and unfit for work.

"My brother and I were allowed to learn by the masters we used to belong to; but since we grew up there has been a division of property in the family, and I and my children have changed owners, and our new mistress is very different from the former one. And my brother is the only one that is free. He wishes me to thank you, in his name, for helping to redeem him. My hope and desire was to be employed in work for the kingdom of God, but that is now quite impossible. My time and strength is now nearly all taken up with working in the rice swamps and plantations for my owner; and as for my children, they will be like other little slave children. The boys are sent out to mind sheep and cattle all day long, and the girls are taken into the mistress's house to wait on her, and follow her about wherever she goes, and that is what I fear will be the lot of my little ones when they are two or three years older. My husband is also a slave, and has to work hard for his master.

"My closing request to you, dear friend, is, pray for me and my family, especially for those of my relations and my husband's family who are not yet Christians, that they may be brought to Christ, so that we may be an unbroken family in heaven as well as on earth. I ask you to do this, knowing that our friendship is not of the flesh, but of the Spirit, and as Christians we come with united breath before the Throne of Grace. May God bless you and yours, prays—Yours affectionately, R———."

I think this letter is ample proof of the good work being done in the mission fields. The spirit of Christian patience, endurance, and calm resignation under the galling bond of slavery and thwarted desires is indeed wonderful. It seems wrong for one who has been called by God to his work to be held back by man, and that in a land where "The harvest truly is plenteous, and the labourers are few." I am going to put forth another effort on behalf of poor R———; will anyone help me?

WORK AMONG FRENCH PRIESTS.

PROFESSOR L. J. BERTRAND, director of the Œuvre des Prêtres Convertis, reports that during 1894 sixteen priests and seminarists were helped by his mission. M. Corneloup, who has nearly completed his theological course at Neuchatel, has been appointed to a sphere of evangelistic work among Roman Catholics in the department of Aisne. He writes:—"How much has taken place during 1894! On January 5 I was a priest in a priest's dress, beginning to make the acquaintance of the Huguenots Bertrand. But it now seems to me as if it were ten years ago, so completely am I changed in every respect. The Lord has been indeed good to me. Brought out of the land of Egypt, I expected the desert, but I found myself among friends and brothers, and, above all, I found the true Christ. No wonder that I am full of joy, and that I dearly love my Huguenot hosts of the 5th of January, 1894."

After two months with M. Hathaway, and a year at the University of Neuchatel, M. Costa is now assistant to the energetic Pastor Faivre (St. Aubin, Gironde), who lately wrote: "I was delighted to find what a good impression your protégé had made at Soubran. Suddenly several inhabitants begged of me, rather clamorously, to let him go as an evangelist and live there altogether. I therefore transferred him to Soubran, where he is getting on wonderfully well. He has already eighty people at his Sunday service, and sixty at the Bible reading." A peasant made this smart remark, "If our curés are becoming Protestant pastors, we may as well follow them."

Of six other ex-priests, M. Bertrand says:—"We cannot give their names without ruining their precarious situations. Their masters excuse their being Protestants, but would send them away if they knew they had been priests." The converted priests who have been helped in previous years are doing well. One, Rev. A. Bechger, writes:—"Thanks to Prof. Godet and others, I am to be the pastor of a Dutch Reformed Church in America. To the Lamb who has taken pity upon me be praise and glory for ever."

Communications to M. Bertrand may be addressed, 86, Boulevard Bineau, Neuilly, Seine, France.

DR. JOSEPH COOK'S LECTURES.

In his third lecture Dr. Cook had for Prelude "Ultimate Japan," in which he considered the encouragements and faults of the empire of the Orient. The encouraging features are: 1. Her island position. Japan is the England of the Pacific. Her people are a nation of sailors, brave, fearless, and daring. Unlike China, she has a navy of great strength. She aspires to rule the Pacific. 2. The Japanese are patriotic. They believe in authority, and follow their federal leaders. 3. Japan has marvellous power of assimilation. They know how to copy the West. The knowledge they import is digested, and their scholarship becomes Oriental as well as Occidental. 4. The Japanese yield readily to discipline. They obey superiors, and make good soldiers and sailors. There is a fidelity to those in authority which makes them capable of being compacted into a strong nation. The reverence for those in high place has a Divine basis. The transfer of their reverence for authority to Christ would make them eminent Christians. 5. The Japanese have a fine physical and mental organism. They are fine-grained—a diamond edition of humanity. With the flesh of a child they have the backbone of a man. They are not merely sentimental; in the delicate form is a resolute and noble spirit.

Japan, on the other hand, is confronted with dangers. The people have good qualities; they also have faults, which we are allowed to hope will be overcome. Among these faults the lecturer named conceit, caste, and false faith. As the foremost nation of the Orient the Japanese have much ground for conceit. They have not been tested by measuring strength with the intelligence and resources of the West. They are still in danger from caste. The old families may arise to claim the advantages which have come to the nation. Divisions are possible by which late gains may be lost. Except the country become Christian, there is imminent danger from agnosticism and false faith which would handicap the national advance. Japan needs to copy the vital faith, and not the doubt, of the West. Neesima's last word was: "Free schools and Christian churches will make my nation great and noble." The lecture was on "The Holy Spirit in the Bible and Science."

The prelude of the third lecture was to have been devoted to General Booth and Dr. Parkhurst, but, as it was found that General Booth would be present and speak for himself, Mr. Cook merely prefaced his arrival with remarks relative to the Salvation Army and its growth and standing. It teaches sound religious doctrines, with no wildfire among its tenets. It has passed the stage of cynical attack, and what God has so crowned let no man dishonour. There are three men who might be called a trinity of the hour, General Booth, Dr. Parkhurst, and Thomas Chalmers, and a blending of their methods of working would go far towards redeeming society.

General Booth, arriving with his staff, was introduced, and gave a brief history of his organisation.

The lecture of the day was the second on "The Holy Spirit in Science," and was most interesting, dealing with evolution and psychical research. Mr. Cook said the statement of the old school of evolutionists was to pronounce the cosmic changes "a struggle for life," while Professor Drummond and others of the new school call it "a struggle for the life of others," and think the predominant cast of present evolution and Christianity are one, with the same author, the same processes, and the same aims. These latter are but brilliant hypotheses, but, if they should prove true, Christianity would not suffer. Of telepathy he read nine propositions, saying that if they were carried out to the most lofty interpretation they would but prove the truth of revelation.

PRAYER FOR IRELAND.—Sunday, March 17 (St. Patrick's Day) will as usual be observed as a day of special and united prayer for Ireland. A circular issued by the Dublin branch of the Evangelical Alliance says:—"We thankfully observe the many tokens of encouragement in the present condition of our country. As regards social order it contrasts favourably with former years, the bitter strifes and controversies of the past have been allayed, activity and hopefulness characterise our churches, a spirit of inquiry is abroad throughout the land, and spiritual blessing is largely experienced in many places."

Some London Missions.

WORK AMONG THE COALIES.

Last Thursday I had the novel experience of spending an hour or two inside a great coal depôt, observing how the Gospel is brought before the begrimed toilers—wharfingers, screeners, and carmen or coal-heavers—employed in the distribution of coal. For guide I had the first missionary to the coalies, who, by ready tact, shrewd wit, the gift of song, and an intense love for souls, has won his way among men whose "faces" (to quote a coalie's own words) "are black enough, but who have hearts to feel and respond like other folk." The carmen, waiting for the loading of their vans, spend the time in the "lobby," i.e., a rude shanty, in which blazes a roaring fire. Here the missionary finds only he must be content to suffer constant interruption as the men are called out. Entering one of these shanties I found him hailed as a friend. After salutation, he opened his hand harmonium, and commenced to play and sing a Gospel hymn, making each verse serve as the theme of a pointed little talk to which the men listened willingly. So we passed from lobby to lobby, holding informal services and distributing tracts. In the yard itself, at a point where twenty or thirty men were working close together, filling sacks and screening coal, he started singing, and held a similar open-air service. This work in the depôts he follows up with visitation in the homes of the men, and in every possible way seeks their highest welfare. Nor is this a small undertaking, for it is estimated that there are no less than 10,000 men who earn their daily bread by filling, screening, carrying, retailing, and heaving "dusty black diamonds."

But what is this Mission, and how did it arise? In 1884 Mr. W. Prentice, having been led to the Saviour, felt he must do something for the men with whom he had himself worked. So he started meetings and gathered around him a little band of workers—mostly coalies. By-and-bye he was accepted by the London City Mission, and appointed to an ordinary district, with permission to give part of his time to the special work on his mind. A little later, with the aid of some Christian coal-merchants, he was liberated to work wholly amongst coalies. Subsequently, the usefulness of the Mission becoming increasingly evident, a second missionary was set apart for the South London Yards. Mr. Prentice finds that the great depôts of North and East London, from King's Cross to Shadwell, with occasional visits as far as Enfield and Walthamstow, fully engross his time, while the South London agent has also an immense field. Thus, the depôts of West London—such as Westbourne Park, West Kensington, and Brompton—are practically untouched. An effort is being made to secure a third missionary expressly for the West-end men, and one coal-merchant has offered £20 per annum, provided the balance (£80 per annum) be made up speedily. The results of the work elsewhere abundantly justify the setting apart of another man for the Western depôts.

WHAT THE MEN DO.

The men themselves appreciate and aid. One, for example, has a box in which he drops a copper or two, as the Lord prospers him, every evening. Lately he handed in £2 7s. 6d., with the remark, "I owe much to the Mission; by God's grace it has been the means of keeping me from sinful life." Many are similarly helping. "Happy Joe," a carman, an earnest Christian who has been used of God to many, told me on Thursday, "This mission has been used to the salvation of some who were going right to ruin. New men they are now, thank God." Mr. Prentice is full of good stories. Let me condense two by way of illustration.

was a hard drinker, and often with pockets to let, an aching head, a heavy heart, and boots upon his feet which provided abundance of ventilation, he would return home in a miserable condition. After a lobby meeting such as I have described, he resolved to turn over a new leaf. One of his mates said, 'It is about time you did turn over a new leaf, uncle.' To this he replied, 'I'll start from to-day'; and on my producing a little pledge-book which I carry, he at once signed the pledge. Bursts of laughter and storms of ridicule met him in the yard from his mates when they heard what he had done. Turning to them, he said, 'Never you mind, let 'em laugh who wins.' With a hearty slap on the shoulder, I said, 'That was the best speech you could have made, uncle, and my advice to you is, do as I do in times of temptation—put up a simple prayer, "Lord, help me," and grace and strength shall be supplied.' Years have passed, and the drunkard still remains firm to his pledge. God's house has been attended. He has become a member and a regular attendant at my Coalies' Bible-class, and he is now rejoicing in the Lord."

"Returning home from visitation one day, I was stopped by a carman. Getting off his van and shaking me by the hand, he said, 'I thought it was only right for me to stop and tell you that the Lord had saved my soul. Do you remember urging me one morning in Highbury Vale Yard to yield myself as a lost sinner to Christ, and accept his pardon? Well, I have done so, and it has been the happiest and best time of my life, and I wish I had commenced earlier.' After making inquiries, I find he has associated himself with a Gospel hall."

There is a depth of meaning in the following testimony borne by a carman's wife:—"My husband that used to now kisses me when he comes home."

Similarly the mission has been used to the conversion of many coalies' wives—whom the missionary has looked up at the request of the men—but on this I may not enlarge. Suffice it, that here is a special and fruitful work which God is greatly blessing amongst a class reckoned rough and reckless. The whole story of the Mission is rich in records of result, and moreover some leading employers testify that "the work of the missionaries is to carry the Gospel to the different coal yards, and this has been followed by the men becoming, in many instances, sober, honest, more reliable, kinder to their horses, and better servants in every way."

This mission to coalies is a good example of the useful work being done in out-of-the-way corners by the special missionaries of the London City Mission. Details of these operations may be had from the secretaries, Revs. T. S. Hutchinson and R. Dawson, 3, Bridewell-place, E.C.

THE WORD OF GOD.

Dear Sir,—I should like to thank you for your judicious summing-up on the "Advancing Apostasy." The real burden is, as you have put it, one of personal responsibility; and the question to be met is, How are we as individual members of the body of Christ to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace?

The visible body of Christ is the faithful company of all Christian people; and, wherever two or three are met together in his name, there, in proportion to their faith, the power of the Spirit is present in their midst. And, it will be found that the two Scriptures you especially quote, supply the key to the solution of the question. Thus:—Compare together (a) Hebrews xii. 27, 28; and Matthew xxiv. 35; and 1 Peter i. 22 to ii. 10; also (b) Revelation iii. 20, with John xiv. 23 and xv. 7. Hence it is clear that

1. The Word of God is the one stable thing in contradistinction to the things which are shaken.
2. It is the instrument of the new birth.
3. The food of the divine life.
4. The condition of communion between God and our spirit; and
5. The channel of all spiritual power.

Is it not therefore obvious that the Word of God ought to be far more to us as individuals than it is? for "every man shall bear his own load." And only so shall we become fit subjects of that inward metamorphosis which is bound to work outwards, and manifest itself in the reasonable service, the spiritual worship, which is well pleasing unto God.

On the contrary, what is the state of things among all the churches with regard to this Word of God. In some it is assailed as untrustworthy. In others it is decried as beyond our private understanding. Whilst some teachers who should know better too often give us some of self and less of Christ. And so the indolent souls suffer hunger, and sustain a miserable existence on any pasturage which may be handy.—Yours truly, Ruminant.

MR. JOHN H. BURKE.

SINGING EVANGELIST.

The brother whose portrait we give to-day has done good service as a singing evangelist for years in America; his splendid services as fellow-worker with Rev. John McNeill for the past two years and more in this country, in Africa and in Australia, are fresh in the minds of our readers.

John H. Burke was born near Clonmel, County Tipperary, on April 17, 1855. His father was steward on the estate of Mr. Wm. Perry. At fourteen years of age the lad went up to Dublin, and entered a business house in that city, serving an apprenticeship and remaining there four and a-half years. In 1873 his father, mother, and he bid farewell to Erin and crossed the Atlantic—whither some members of the family circle had previously gone—and settled down in the city of Chicago, U.S.A. Here John soon joined a business house, with which he remained until the end of 1879.

He had the advantage of being brought up in a Christian home, and at a very early age was led to think of God and eternity. His parents were Episcopalians, and, until he went to Dublin, he regularly attended the services of the Church of Ireland. On their arrival in Chicago, the Burkes attended the Church founded by Mr. D. L. Moody, and commonly known yet as "Moody's Church," although it is years since he left Chicago for Northfield. This church is worked on independent Evangelical lines. The congregation then worshipped in a wooden tabernacle, which had been hastily run up after the fire. The present substantial edifice, seating some 2000 people, is designated Chicago Avenue Church. The first Sunday, after morning service, a member kindly spoke to young Burke, and asked him if he had given his heart to Christ, and after a minute's thought he said "Yes!" That was his first out-and-out declaration of faith. He joined the Church as a member shortly after, and also a Bible Class in the Sunday-school—a school attended by over 1000, under the superintendence of Mr. J. M. Hitchcock. Later on he took a class, and then, a leader of the singing being wanted, Mr. Hitchcock asked him if he would undertake this work, and with trembling he consented. This was his first experience of public singing. He occupied this position for about two years.

Mr. Burke's musical training commenced in Dublin, where he learned to read music. Then a day came when he heard the late Philip P. Bliss sing the Gospel in Moody's church, and immediately the longing awoke to follow this devoted singer's lead. He accordingly went in for a course of music and voice culture, studying with various teachers. In 1879, at the Farwell Hall services, in connection with the Y.M.C.A., he took charge of the choir and led for about three years, singing solos every Sunday night. After that, he led in several church choirs.

In the year 1879, Mr. Burke left business on appointment as superintendent of membership in Chicago Y.M.C.A. In 1880 he had received the blessing of a good wife. Soon after his marriage he removed to Oak Park, a suburb of Chicago, and united with the Oak Park Congregational Church, of which he and his wife are still members. In 1881, Mr. Burke went back to business for about three years, until the increasing claims upon him from meetings, conventions, etc., forced him to give up either music or business. About 1884 he took music as a profession, teaching, leading choirs at conventions, etc. When the famous lawyer-evangelist, Sam Jones, held his mission in Chicago, Mr. Burke led the choir, and following that work came calls from various towns and cities, such as Portland (Ore.), Cincinnati, and St. Louis, all of which he declined.

About 1886 Mr. Moody held a great mission in Chicago, and the committee got Mr. Burke to lead the choir and take charge of the singing. It was then that, following Mr. Moody's urgent advice, Mr. Burke gave himself to evangelistic work. Since then he has been a fellow labourer in memorable missions with Messrs. Moody, Whittle, Fay Mills, and John McNeill—evangelists whose names and work are known in all English-speaking lands and beyond. In January, 1891, Messrs. McNeill and Burke were brought together by Mr. Moody, and of their mission labours and journeyings in company our pages have borne frequent witness. The foregoing particulars are mainly extracted from the Australian Presbyterian Messenger.

GENERAL BOOTH IN BOSTON, U.S.

On the day after General Booth's arrival, he addressed three different congregations, which filled Mechanics' Hall, having a seating capacity for 10,000 people. Each of these services was followed by the evangelistic methods of the Salvation Army, and many seekers came forward. On Monday the General held three evangelistic services in Music Hall, seating 3000, besides making an extended address at the Monday lecture of Joseph Cook. On Tuesday General Booth addressed a large congregation of ministers on the work of the Salvation Army, and in the evening gave a closing address to 3000 people on the social scheme which he has in operation.

This visit of General Booth to Boston has been a great blessing, both to the Army and the city. He was to close his American campaign with a great farewell meeting in New York, Feb. 25.

BORDIGHERA ORPHANAGE.

Dear Sir,—We have lately almost doubled the number of our scholars, and we are willing and anxious to gather in as many more as our means will allow. Fourteen were admitted in 1894, of which seven are orphans. At the present time we have twenty-nine from five to twelve years of age. Of these children seventeen are orphans and eight only have Protestant parents; the others are all children of Roman Catholics. During 1894 we have been obliged to refuse fifteen applications for admissions, so as not to increase our expenses. We again crave the generosity of our benefactors.—Yours very truly,

(Rev.) A. B. Tron, Director.

INTER-UNIVERSITY CHRISTIAN UNION.

Several months have passed since the Keswick Students' Conference, but its results are still with us. Men then felt that these days marked an epoch in the religious life of the colleges, and they have not been disappointed. The great stimulus which was received had every opportunity to grow, coming as it did to the representatives of more than forty British colleges, and at a time when men were just about to plan the next session's campaign. We had asked God to give us tokens during these conference days, that this new college Christian movement was his own purpose, by sending us an earnest of the necessary income. He exceeded our asking by giving us £250, exactly half of what we shall require. Therefore for this and many other deeper signs that He has led us out, we have stepped forward.

We began by establishing an office at 93, Aldersgate-street, E.C., in conjunction with the S.V.M.U. We were fortunate in securing Mr. Crayden Edmunds, a Cambridge graduate, as office secretary, to give his whole time to the business details of the Unions. Then a travelling secretary was placed on the field to bring the existing College Christian Associations into touch with one another, and to open up new ground.

During the past few months the work has been vigorously pushed, and many new colleges have been opened. Indeed, during the first ten weeks of our work more college associations were formed than during the previous ten years. These have been organised in University colleges, medical schools, and training colleges. Several of the old associations have been reorganised and revived, so that they have risen out of a mere controversial existence into a practical and spiritual activity. Bible reading circles have been started in many colleges for a systematic study of the Scriptures. Several of the leading associations are also holding ten-minute daily prayer meetings, by which much of the religious activity has been focussed and made more potent. Practical work in the shape of ward services, slum visitation, etc., is also greatly developed. Above all, a new sense of personal responsibility for one's fellow students is being felt as never before. It is no matter of surprise then that in some universities, where such an event has almost been unknown for years, some here and some there have been coming into the Kingdom of God.

A notable feature has been the National Conferences. The Scotch one was held in Edinburgh this year, when some thirteen colleges were represented. A decided quickening was received there, which has had wide results in some places. Again a conference of the Irish colleges was held at Trinity College, Dublin, in February. This was the first Irish inter-collegiate gathering that has yet taken place, and it was indeed one to be remembered. About ten colleges sent delegates, and these picked men. The subjects discussed were very practical, and had direct reference to the problems of College Christian life. They were such as these, preparation for service, Bible study, personal dealing. And at the missionary meeting, and the closing evangelistic meeting, we have good reason to believe that definite practical results followed. Much prayer is being made for the coming Oxford conference, on Saturday and Sunday, March 16 and 17.

We hope that continued interest and prayer will follow this work among the students. It has been born of prayer, it has grown on prayer, and it will enter into fuller stronger life through the believing prayers of all who seek to extend the kingdom.

PROTESTANT JOURNALISM IN FRANCE.—M. J. E. Cerisier, pastor of the Reformed Church, writes to us: "The French Protestants have succeeded in establishing a daily paper, infused with the Evangelical spirit, and well informed on secular matters. The best Protestant writers have considered it their duty to help Le Signal, which gives foreign news in a larger degree than any other French journal. Clubs and religious societies interested in the development of Protestantism in France, will find in the columns of this paper well-digested intelligence concerning the spread of the Gospel and social reform in France. Our Huguenot brethren are constantly attacked and ridiculed by the daily press of Paris; the Signal defends them, and its influence is steadily growing in various directions. Will English friends give generous help to our great enterprise? All communications may be addressed to Mr. Clarence Hooper, secretary of Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall, London."

DRINK AND NATIVE RACES.

In The Times of Monday there is a weighty and striking article on this subject. The writer says:

The rising which has taken place at Brass, in the Niger Protectorate, relatively insignificant as it has proved in itself, calls attention to a question which is by means insignificant. It is the question of the liquor traffic with native races. It is unnecessary to dwell on the frightful evils attendant upon this trade. They have been demonstrated by the experience of every ruler who has attempted to administer the affairs of native States with any regard for the well-being of the natives; they have been recognised by enlightened native chiefs in different parts of Africa; they have been fully discussed at international conferences, notably those of Berlin and Brussels, in 1885 and in 1890. Prohibitive resolutions have again and again been arrived at, and in localities where the surrounding circumstances have permitted they have been enforced with the best possible results. There is not a doubt left in the minds of intelligent, experienced, and practical men that the supply of intoxicating liquor to the native races is equivalent to

of the races concerned, and that the first condition of progress in the habits of orderly and industrious existence is to keep the poison of alcohol out of their reach. It is not a temperance fad nor a mere philanthropic counsel of perfection. It is the sober decision of unromantic men of business, from one end of Africa to the other, that an essential preliminary to successful administration is to prevent the sale or supply of spirits to the native.

This being so, the time seems to have come in which the spirit trade with natives should be placed in the same category as the trade in slaves. Little more than a hundred years ago Adam Smith wrote with apparent unconcern of the important trade in rum which the American colonies carried on with the coast of Africa, "whence they bring back negro slaves in return." The conscience of the civilised world has since been so far aroused that the return cargo of those days is no longer possible. It needs but a step further to bring about a general realisation of the fact that to sell a man to the domination of a master who has a commercial interest in taking care of him, and who may be even kind, is less cruel and is fraught with consequences less terrible than to sell him to the domination of his own drunkenness, which in the case of the negro is surely merciless. When this further step has been taken the European trader in cheap spirits to the African coast will stand as his predecessor the European slave-trader now stands—outside the pale of the known varieties of contemporary degradation.

"Yet at present what do we find? In the English colony of Lagos alone 2,000,000 gallons of spirits go in every year and in the neighbouring colony of Oil Rivers—known now as the Niger Protectorate—2,000,000 gallons more go in also every year. The duties are low enough to make the traffic profitable on the coast and to encourage native trade with the interior. In the territory of the Niger Company, which debouches upon the coast between these two Crown colonies, a determined stand has been made against the trade. The Deputy-Governor of the company, Sir George Goldie, urged strongly upon the Conference of Berlin in October of 1884 the international restrictive policy which was afterwards adopted at the Conference of Brussels. One of the first acts of the company within three weeks of receiving their charter in 1886 was to impose a heavy duty upon spirits crossing their frontier. In April, 1887, it took the further step of totally prohibiting the introduction of spirits into about one-third of the inland portion of its sphere, and in July, 1890, the prohibition was extended to "any place within the jurisdiction of the company north of the 7th parallel of north latitude."

A glance at the map will show that this division includes about 19-20ths of the company's territories, and leaves only the relatively narrow neck of the delta in which the importation of spirits is not absolutely prohibited. The proximity of the two colonies in which liquor is plentiful and cheap renders absolute prohibition on the coast impracticable. Outside pressure is too great, and though the trade is restricted by heavy duties, coast natives cannot be deterred from obtaining spirits so long as there are spirits on the coast. The heavy duties give rise, of course, to a considerable smuggling trade, which is, in its turn, a source of no small expense and trouble to the Company, and out of the friction which it produces such an attack as that lately directed from Brass upon the company's port town at Akassa may at any moment result.

It is not to be supposed that the Governments of the British colonies are indifferent to the evils of of which the Niger Company has on this coast made itself the determined opponent. They must have recognised, like the administrators of the company, that the existence of the spirit trade destroys other trade. The native who buys spirits

RARELY BUYS ANYTHING ELSE.

Trade in spirits and trade in general goods are naturally opposed, and although the growth of a trade in spirits is usually rapid, giving large returns within short periods of time, it cannot, in the nature of things, attain to such proportions as the trade in goods. On an absolutely unsentimental basis, it is, therefore, more profitable in the long run alike for every Administration on the coast, whether official or commercial, to check the trade in spirits, of which the effect is to kill the development of substantial trade by substituting the supply of one demand for the infinitely greater possibilities arising out of the varied demands of a gradually civilising market. The cotton trade, the hardware trade, the china trade, every trade except the spirit trade is interested in maintaining the combat which the colonial governments must be assumed to be desirous of carrying on. There is, consequently, a fair prospect of practical support in any measures which it may be resolved to take, and, with the exception of the fact that the very extensive liquor trade of Hamburg gives Germany a troublesome factor to deal with, it is, fortunately, no less true of foreign than of English settlements. The rule is one of universal application along the coast.

The difficulty which has hitherto attended the settlement of the question is the lack of concerted action. The Niger Company, which may be regarded as the centre of resistance to the spirit trade upon the coast, has been unable to enforce total prohibition in its coast territories because the admission of liquor into the colonies on either side would render such a measure necessarily inoperative. The British colonial Governments are similarly affected by the proximity of French and German colonies. All are suffering from the same evil. All really require the same remedy, and the remedy is total prohibition of the import of low-priced trade spirits upon the coast from Cape Colony to Morocco. The difficulty of guarding such a line is rendered possible by the nature of the coast and of the trade. Spirits can only be shipped in large vessels, and these, owing to the force with which the surf breaks along the West African coast, can only touch for unloading at points that are well known. A temporary diminution of trade would, of course, have to be faced, but ought to be sufficient to counterbalance this.

If total prohibition is regarded by foreign Governments as too strong a measure, there is the alternative of high restrictive duties, and it is interesting to note that last year in the territories of the Niger Company the operation of the restrictive tariff was highly effectual. The essence of success lies in uniformity of action. If prohibition is accepted, it should prevail all along the coast. If the balance of opinion is in favour of the more moderate measure of a high restrictive tariff, the rate should be the same at every port.

SAILORS' HOME, MARSEILLES.

New year's day, 1888, fell on a Sunday, and it chanced that an English yacht was at anchor in Marseilles. The chief officer was a young man who thought more of this world and its pleasures than of God and his own soul. But that new year's day in Marseilles altered his life in more ways than one. His captain left, and he was promoted to the command of the yacht, a rather responsible post for a young man. Whether this had anything to do with his going to the institute service that new year's night it would be difficult to tell, but one thing is quite certain, and it is this, as told in his own words:—

"On new year's night, 1888, I thought it would be the proper thing to begin the new year by going to the mission service at the Sailors' Home and Institute, so I went, and what took place there I cannot remember, for I took no notice of the hymns, nor of the prayers, nor of the address, but what did strike me was a text the chaplain, Rev. T. C. Skeggs, gave out at parting, 'Choose ye this day whom ye will serve.' This text seemed to stand by me as it were, and made me feel awfully miserable. I could get no pleasure nor peace night nor day. I signed the temperance pledge, but that did not seem to remove the cloud hanging over me, so I began to read my Bible, not saying a word to anyone, although I was often chaffed by those who had known me as a drinker and a wild young fellow. One day the light shone in, and as if by magic, I felt my load all gone, for I saw that it was Jesus Christ who could help me, and thank God from that day I have trusted him and have always found Him a friend to help me in every time of need, and one to offer to those who sail with me."

It is not often one is able to see or even hear of such blessed fruit of work amongst seamen in a foreign port like Marseilles, where ships come to-day and go to-morrow. But this incident and cheering testimony much gladdened the heart of the Scripture reader of the Marseilles Sailors' Home when visiting the other day on board the yacht Xarifa. The good captain related this little bit of his life's history, and showed the entry on the fly-leaf of his Bible recording his conversion. The story was retold over a cup of tea to the manager and his wife by the captain when he called with a thankoffering for the Institution. Cheering testimony to the good work of the Home is often received in the shape of letters addressed to workers.

The chief engineer of the Cervin wrote: "Thank God for the Marseilles Sailors' Home and Institute, sacred and refreshing memories crop up in a hymn we sang, or in a word spoken, or as we think of the holy, happy time we had together. We pray that God will bless you with an abundant harvest of souls from the poor fellows who go down to the sea in ships."

About 700 British and American ships, with nearly 30,000 seamen on board, engage the attention of the workers of the Sailors' Home and Institute at Marseilles annually. The prayer and sympathy of Christians are much needed just now. The manager of the Home is Captain Walker, 104, Rue de la Republique, Marseilles.

SOLDIERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—A conference on the work will be held at the Camp, Aldershot, in the Iron Church, on Wednesday, March 20, at 11 a.m., 3 and 7 p.m.

THE FIVE GREAT OFFERINGS AND THEIR LAW, by E. M. S. (3s. 6d. Marshall Bros.), is a work to which we called attention when it was published. We are glad to notice that the work was highly esteemed by the late Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, who said of it in his paper, The Watchword: "The first qualification for handling a theme so deep and sacred as this, the writer of this volume exhibits on almost every page—viz. spiritual discernment. Andrew Jukes says truly, that the real secret of the neglect of the types is that they require more spiritual intelligence than many Christians can bring to them. There is evidence that the Holy Ghost has opened the eyes of this writer to discern wondrous things out of God's law. Next to spiritual intelligence, the author exhibits a theological precision and soundness which greatly pleases us. We believe that the types are as accurate as mathematics in their teaching. The book attempts to expound the 'law' of the offerings—a term which indicates the marked contrast which the book exhibits to all that looseness and license in handling such themes which the new theology of our time exhibits. We strongly recommend this book to all lovers of the Word of God."

THE RUSSIAN STUNDISTS.

On Friday there was an interesting gathering of friends, including a number of ladies, at the rooms of the Evangelical Alliance to hear about the condition of the persecuted Stundists, and to unite in prayer on their behalf. Mr. Donald Matheson presided, and various friends led the meeting in earnest prayer that the hearts of the Russian authorities might be moved to clemency, and that freedom of worship might be accorded to all Russian subjects.

An address was given by Dr. Baedeker telling of his recent visit to Russia. He had anticipated hindrances on this journey, he said, at certain points on his route of travel, but God had graciously opened up the way, and he met with no difficulties from the authorities. He visited various prisons as before, addressing the inmates through an interpreter. In the course of his journeyings he had met several Stundists on the way to banishment, because of their religious fidelity. Dr. Baedeker described as very grievous and intense the sufferings which these people undergo, in being moved from place to place and in having no proper opportunities of gaining a livelihood; while they are all the time sorely tempted to deny their faith and go back to the errors and superstitions of the Greek Church. The fact of the young Emperor having signed the decree of repression issued under the late Emperor is a most discouraging feature of the present situation. Speaking of the Stundists generally, Dr. Baedeker said they were not one sect but were of various sects. Some are Baptists; others hold the same views as the Friends; all are loyal subjects of the Emperor, and only desire to be allowed to obey the Word of God. Formerly many of them were formally tried and judged before being banished; now they are often sent away without any preliminary examination. If the Emperor could only be moved to examine personally the state of affairs, a change for the better would be hoped for, but with the numberless claims on his time and attention it may be a long time before he gives the matter any consideration. Dr. Baedeker asked that very earnest and continuous prayer should be made on behalf of these persecuted and worthy people. If anything can be done by way of interposing on their behalf it ought to be done quickly.

It was stated by the chairman, and also by Mr. Arnold, the secretary of the Alliance, that that body are most earnestly considering what steps, if any, ought to be taken with the view of influencing the Russian Emperor towards a relaxation of the present oppressive measures.

A Swedish lady who lived and laboured for some years in Russia, but had to leave the country because of her Stundist convictions, also briefly addressed the meeting, and said she was in receipt of constant information as to the oppressions being practised in all parts of Russia on these defenceless and simple-minded Christian people.

Dear Sir,—Every Christian must heartily sympathise with the desires of some of your correspondents for the relief of the dear Stundists from persecution. But I confess that I greatly fear that the plans proposed are more likely to hinder than to forward the object in view. The Emperor and the Empress are known to be most favourable to a larger measure of religious liberty. But, autocrat as he is, he can never act in opposition to a very strong current of national feeling. It is just because the Stundists are supposed to be against the National Church that they incur so much opposition, not merely from the authorities, but often from the people themselves. Now, if any movement were known to be initiated in England for the relief of the Stundists it would be immediately stigmatised as an effort to bring in English ideas, and would not only increase the already existing prejudice, but cool the ardour of Russians who desire religious liberty, yet would not care to urge its adoption if it comes as an English and, therefore, a non-Russian movement.

The well-intentioned advice recently proffered by our Lord Mayor and some platform orators to the late Emperor, certainly, to say the least of it, did not lead to results which would encourage a repetition of the experiment, while more recently some even cautiously-worded aspirations expressed by one of the Zemstvos produced a stern rebuke, which showed they had terribly injured their cause. Therefore, dear people who are talking about "united action" and demonstration, will, I trust, be awakened to see the serious evil they may do unless they are really guided by God.

When St. Peter was in prison, the little church did not "get up a movement" or "make a demonstration," but they waited on God and "the angel of the Lord" opened "the inner prison."

Jacob, when he became Israel, "had power with God and with men." Is there not a great danger that when we have not power with God, like Israel of old, we may go down to the Egypt of human power and influence, and find, as many dear people occupied in other movements for good are finding, that "the shadow of Egypt is their confusion." The neglect of the warnings of Isaiah in chh. xxx. xxxi. indicated a departure from God which led to many bitter lessons, and finally to the captivity of Judah and destruction of Jerusalem.—Yours, for Christ's sake, Radstock.

DISTRESS IN LONDON.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

By means of the Poor Children's Aid Branch thousands of half-clad slum children are supplied with warm clothing, and thus enabled to attend school. Thank God for the many busy fingers at work, adapting old and cast-off clothing to meet the needs of these poor children. But surely many others unable to assist with money would be glad to set their needle to work and help to clothe these naked ones.

In looking over some of the appeals for clothing sent in, not only from the schools affiliated with the R.S.U., but from the school mistresses and teachers of the Board Schools in the poorest districts of London, one cannot but be moved to pity by the pathetic touches which accompany them. The Secretary of the R.S.U. is Mr. John Kirk, 87, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C. Parcels should be marked "Poor Children's Aid Branch."

FLOWER GIRLS.

Mr. John A. Groom, Secretary of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission, 8, Sexforde-street, Clerkenwell, E.C., reports that the severe and widespread suffering among the large constituency of flower-sellers exceeds anything ever before experienced in the history of the work. The mission agents are in contact with at least two thousand girls and women—many of them being widows with young children dependent upon them—who are on the verge of starvation. All has come as a result of the long spell of severe weather. One result is, however, that scores of girls who have hitherto resisted all persuasion to leave the streets, are now heartily anxious to embrace the opportunity of undergoing training for domestic service. The mission is giving a thousand free meals each day to children and others, besides tickets for coal, bread, grocery, etc. The Gospel has made some progress among these street-sellers, so that many of them are genuine Christian characters who bear a good testimony in the world.

AT THE GATE.

Have you seemed to stand in your spirit-dreams
By the gate of a happy clime,
And to gaze on a land like a Paradise
Restored to the wastes of time,
Where God with man is communing still,
As erst in our planet's prime?

Like the golden glow of a sunny eve,
Or the moon of a summer night,
The radiance aflame in its skies of blue,
And veiling its plains in white—
Like the New Jerusalem's glorious sheen,
Where God is Himself the light.

While sweeter than warblings of leafy glens,
Profounder than ocean's roll,
Are the spiritual strains from this Beulah-land,
That gladden the listening soul;
They are songs attuned to the ear of God
From broken hearts made whole.

Oh, why do we linger so long at the gate?
Our sun going down in the west,
The storm of eternal wrath so near,
Unsheltered, doomed, unblest!
And the Saviour pleading to take us in
To the place of perfect rest.

A MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

A most interesting gathering of missionary society officials and representatives was held in the fine new building known as "The Mission House," and situate on the corner of Fourth-avenue and Twenty-second-street, New York city, on Thursday, February 14. The meeting was attended by delegates from the northern and southern States and from Canada.

Various important subjects were discussed, the first being the war between China and Japan, and its effect upon missions generally. Rev. Dr. Judson Smith, of the A.B.C.F.M., Boston, read a paper, and treated of the subject in a masterful manner. He pointed out the striking difference between the two nations. The people of China are in many ways superior to the Japanese, but while the latter have readily taken advantage of knowledge of western science, etc., China has refused to advance or be instructed by the western world. The result, obvious to us, must be so to the Chinese, and especially to her leaders such as Li Hung Chang. Doubtless the Chinese will learn the lesson they are now paying so dearly for, and the country will be opened up by railroads, etc., as never before. The ambassadors of the Gospel will be able to go in and "possess the land."

Discussion followed, many taking part, among them being Dr. Ellinwood, Presbyterian Board, Dr. H. C. Mabie, Baptist, Dr. S. L. Baldwin, Methodist. Among other things brought out was the fact of the Japanese not only receiving Western medical science, but with it also the Spirit of Christ, as shown by the fact that they treated the Chinese wounded even as their own. Only Christianity could and did teach them this, and it was well that the first missionary to Japan was a physician also, Dr. Jas. C. Hepburn, who, after thirty-five years of service there, returned to end his days in his native land—America. Other subjects were discussed, such as "Industrial Missions," how managed, how far really useful. The Secretary of the Lutheran Missionary Society told of a grand work being done by their society in Africa. The church had become practically self-supporting, and employed several missionaries. They have 1000 acres of land, grow coffee, etc., and recently sent 25,000lb. of coffee to New York. It was sold for 5000f., and sent back to aid them further. The Rev. Dr. Langford, Sec. Protestant Episcopal Board, was the host.

The Conference met for prayer in the beautiful chapel in the building, where prayer is wont to be made daily at noon, specially for missions, from five minutes to noon until ten minutes after the delegates assembled. The service was conducted by Dr. Langford, and was very impressive. A free collation was served to the delegates, and much interest evinced. It was a time not only of friendly greetings, but for exchange of thought and good feeling, and of education in mission affairs and comity.

A QUIET WORK IN IRELAND.

The following is extracted from a private letter to a friend of the Gospel in the Sister Isle:—

I am opening another disused hall in this city in a very backward neighbourhood. I have a good many helpers among poor working men, and we are expecting great things from above. I am very hopeful as to reaching many non-churchgoers.

I am afraid while many of the Lord's professed people are sleeping, the tares of Popery are being sown broadcast in the land. This horrible leaven is working in many of our so-called Protestant communities. I feel very deeply about the lethargy of our people, and the want of a true grasp and possession of spiritual Christ-like Christianity.

Priests are very active here now; they are the only ecclesiastics I meet in my visiting; they seem to be everywhere and at all hours, and are more active than when I came here three years ago. I think they find they have more than enough on hand to keep their flock from straying into "heretic" folds.

I see so much in the Bible that is allowed to lie there as a dead letter, and in many places there is a going down into Egypt for help. Concerts, theatricals, and all sorts of worldly amusements are resorted to to draw audiences, and give interest to a dead church; and the rising generation is learning to speak half in the language of Ashdod and half in the language of Zion. May the Church soon awake and shake off the slumber of carnal ease; and with all boldness denounce sin and vice in high and low places.

Palestine at Brixton.

For the ten days extending from Tuesday last to Friday next Brixton Hall will be, or ought to be, the most attractive point of interest to Bible readers and Bible lovers in the whole of London. It will be a focus into which is concentrated representations of Palestine life, scenery, customs and associations, on a scale, and with a fulness of accurate detail and originality of treatment never before attempted in modern times. The designer and director of this unique pourtrayal is Rev. James Neil, the well-known authority and expert on Eastern life and teaching, as these are embodied in the Sacred Scriptures. The exhibition was opened on Tuesday afternoon, and in the forenoon of that day a private preliminary view was granted to a member of our staff, to whom Mr. Neil kindly explained the various parts of a very wonderful reproduction of Bible accessories and representations. The exhibition needed many finishing touches before being opened to public view, but enough was seen to rouse the highest expectations, and to awaken a desire for further and more detailed inspection.

The main feature of attraction in the large hall will be the series of dioramic pictures shown by the aid of a powerful limelight, and explained by Mr. Neil in several lectures each day. These pictures are finely executed in oil by a very skilful artist, who has had special opportunities of painting them with fidelity and truth. As to these paintings, some words of the famous Biblical artist, Mr. Holman Hunt may here be quoted from a letter just addressed to Mr. Neil. Mr. Hunt says the pictures are "remarkably true to Syrian life and character, as seen by the observant student in Syria at the present time, and as illustrating the unchanging features and habits of the people....The collection will be most interesting to the visitor, not only to those who have not seen the country itself, but to those who have passed through it without the guidance of a master like yourself, who can draw attention to the instructive points of each scene."

Judging from the many and marvellously fresh comments made to our representative by Mr. Neil on the one picture that happened to fill the screen at the moment, these explanatory lectures will be a prolonged treat, throwing floods of new light on many hitherto obscure and unobserved passages of Holy Writ. Into these lectures will also be introduced a series of new and very superior views of Palestine scenery, shown on specially-prepared lantern slides.

The subsidiary items of attractive interest are so many and so important that we regret having, in this notice, to refer to them with extreme brevity. On entering the hall the eye is at once arrested by a beautiful minaret, topped by a graceful dome. The left hand wall is a perfect picture gallery, embracing sketches, in oils and water colours, of Bible views and Eastern figures, by able artists. This gallery overflows into the side rooms, and will afford a rich study to the appreciative visitor. In one of the smaller rooms are large models of a Palestine town house and country house, about which much might be said if space permitted. The same is true of the immense model of a stone guarded Palestine tomb, hewn in the rock, with all the concomitants of Eastern sepulture, shown in the smaller hall. The fine pictorial representation of animals on the cliffs, with a high mountain in the background, adds to the wealth of interest in this department of the exhibition. Special lectures will be given inside the tomb on the burial customs of the East. In the same hall there is a colossal, and splendidly finished raised map of Palestine, drawn to scale, showing exactly the conformation of the country. Another source of great attraction in this room, will be the "Peep into a Paradise," a painting into which is gathered all the identified plants and flowers of the land, carefully reproduced in the most brilliant colourings by a young Scotch artist, Mr. J. Macpherson-Haye, under Mr. Neil's supervision. Round the walls of the small hall and inner rooms are many fine paintings, showing a variety of native costume.

We cannot, at present, go into further detail, but close our notice of this singularly interesting and instructive display, by cordially commending all our readers who can to make a pilgrimage to Brixton to see it for themselves. They will feel well repaid, in a quickened interest in the land of the Bible, and in an accession of information which must tend to settle and strengthen their faith in the teachings of the Old Book. We feel thankful that Mr. Neil is devoting his exceptional knowledge and gifts of exposition, to the noble end of making vivid and real to modern readers of the Scripture, the descriptions, references, and lessons that crowd its pages.

We ought to add that Brixton Hall is in Acre-lane, two minutes' walk from the Brixton Station of the Chatham and Dover Railway. The hours of opening each week-day are 2.30 p.m. and 7 p.m. Intending visitors should note that the exhibition closes on Friday, March 15, and not Saturday as announced.

MEDITATIONS OF A LAMPLIGHTER.

When I was a boy I used to think it a great feat to climb up a lamppost, and swing by my hands on the crossbar. I did not think in those days that I would one day be climbing up lampposts in a systematic fashion, and earning my bread thereby. Indeed, if anyone had suggested such a thing to me, I would have felt indignant. But time works many changes, and here I am, a poor lamplighter.

But what's about it? There are worse occupations than that of lamplighter. When I am up cleaning my lamps I often think as I watch the well-dressed folk go sailing past, that, may be, if all were known, few of them earn their bread so honestly as I do. Not that I want to justify myself in the very least, for I have learnt by experience that it is not so much what a man does, as the spirit in which he does it. If in my heart I am wicked, it does not matter how honest or honourable my occupation is, I am still wicked, and wicked I must remain till my heart be changed.

I am in a high position when I am up the ladder cleaning my lamp. I can look down upon the people passing by, and although many of them despise such a poor fellow as I am, they cannot see me without looking up to me after all, and that is more than I do to many of them. But I do not always look down. I am often far higher than the lamppost. I sometimes take the wings of the morning, and fly away; no matter how high I soar there is no danger, for the right hand of God sustains me.

Many of the people that pass by know nothing about it. Well dressed they are, no doubt! Kid gloves and high-heeled shoes, more like wax dolls than women; and men with their walking-sticks and cigarettes, yaw-yawing to one another like jackdaws. Their outside is all polished and fine, but many of their faces tell me that within there is not the peace that passes understanding.

But it is not only the "mashers" and the "wax dolls" that are without this peace. There are so many in rags and dirt loafing about, hanging round the corners, and even leaning against my lampposts. I wonder how they can live in such wretchedness. I do not blame them for their poverty. No man should be blamed for that. Poverty is not sin. I am poor enough myself; but there is no excuse for dirt. If cleanliness be next to godliness, I see hundreds and hundreds of people every day as I am cleaning my lamps who are very far from godliness. Oh, if they could only see what I saw once—the clean, sweet, holy face of Jesus! they would shake themselves free of their unclean conditions, and be no longer cumbered with laziness.

How grateful I am to the Lord for saving me from these things! I am not rich; neither am I poor. God feeds me with food sufficient for me. But I am so happy that He has shown me the better life and commanded me to walk therein. I would not take all the crowns of Europe for the joy I oftentimes have in my soul as I meditate on the loving kindness of the Lord. Praise his name, for He is good; his mercy endureth for ever.

I often muse on bygone days, when I thought all of myself and nothing of my Saviour. Such high notions I had of what I was, and good hopes of what I would yet be. I read numberless stories of robbers and pirates, soldiers and sailors, love, war, and adventure, till my head was so full and my heart so weary that I could not settle at anything. But I saw through it all at last. I saw that it was all a money-making business. Unscrupulous writers and publishers wholly bent on getting the pence and halfpence, not minding how many souls they decoyed to hell. When I was carried away in this manner I did not know that it was the devil that led me. It is hard for poor boys to know the devil when he is transformed into an angel of light. How many boys I see every day as I am cleaning my lamps that are caught in the same snare! Message-boys with their basket and the penny number before their eyes. Alas, how few of them will discover the folly of it. I am working among men every day, who have lived to be old, and who cannot yet tell the difference between fiction and history, or between lies and truth. If they would only seek the Spirit of God, He would make all things plain. He would enable them to eschew the evil and hold fast the good. But they will not seek the Spirit of God; and so Godless fiction-writers will continue to thrive.

I feel quite content now with my position as a poor lamplighter. If I were a doctor, or a lawyer, many would envy me; but when I am only a lamplighter I am too insignificant a creature for anyone to be jealous of. I have peace, and can go about in safety. No one thinks about taking my life away to get my money, because they know I have none. I know that a great distinction is made between poor men and rich men, but they that make this distinction do not look on the men at all, but on the filthy lucre. I once saw seven dogs running after one dog, and I thought, "Surely they must think that dog of some importance"; but when I looked again I saw that the dog they were running after had a large bone in his mouth. So it was not the dog they followed, but the bone.

What are most men better than dogs? Sure the last time the lamplighters had a soirée they hunted the town to get a rich man to take the chair. A poor man was altogether out of the question, simply because he had no bone in his mouth. I do not think I would feel happy if I were rich, and had a number of people running after me desiring to do me honour. I would not be able to keep from thinking that the honour was all to my wealth, and none of it to myself. But perhaps those who were born rich, and never knew what it was to be poor, cannot look at things in the same way as a lamplighter.

Yes, I think my position as a poor man enables me to see things in the labouring classes that the rich cannot discern. It seems to me that the rich are lifted up with the thought that they are really beloved of the poor; when in reality they are only esteemed for the good things they give away. Let a rich man be bereft of his riches, and take up his position, say, as a common lamplighter; though he be as good as Timothy and as clever as Paul, his fellow workers shall neither commend nor admire him, simply because he is only a lamplighter. But it is consoling to think that man's ways are not as God's ways.

ZENANA BIBLE AND MEDICAL MISSION.

We are mindful of the interest that you take in the work carried on by the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, which works in co-operation with different branches of the Church of Christ in India. We should like, therefore, to draw your attention to the work done by our high school in Bombay under the efficient management of Miss Thimmins, assisted by Miss Harris.

The school, which is attended by Christians, Parsees, Mohammedans, and Hindus, numbers about 170 pupils, and exerts a wide influence. Students are prepared for the entrance examination of the University, and, besides, we have a normal class for training teachers. The Government inspector closed his report with these words:—"I was much pleased with the neat appearance of the girls and with their good manners. I may state that I am of opinion that the Indian Female Normal School is a well-managed and efficient institution." Great attention is given to Scripture teaching. During the past year Mrs. Peel (C.M.S.) conducted a Bible-class for our non-Christian girls, and the girls asked for an examination, and showed a good knowledge of the life of our Lord. Miss Thimmins has a Bible-class specially for the Parsee girls, and we have just appointed a lady for evangelistic work among Parsee ladies. There is a boarding school for the daughters of Indian Christians.

Our committee, in conjunction with the C.M.S. committee, are about to build more commodious buildings, and we hope that our staff will be reinforced in the autumn by a lady with a true missionary spirit, and with great educational experience, who is a Girton student. The school is almost self-supporting; subscriptions from home go to support the missionaries at the head of the institution. We shall be most thankful for help towards their support.

THE OUTLOOK IN IRELAND.

The most serious feature in the present Irish outlook is the very palpable fact that Mr. Morley has at length yielded to Archbishop Walsh on the education question, and that we shall soon see State-endowed denominational education established in Ireland. Archbishop Walsh has been appointed to a seat on the National Education Board, and at the same time the Chief Secretary has called upon the Board to devise a scheme for the admission of the Christian Brothers to the benefits of the Education Act. The Christian Brothers are an order of monks subject in every instance to the Roman Catholic bishop of the diocese in which they reside. For some years they submitted to the rules of the Education Board, but then withdrew, because they were not permitted to exhibit in their schools the crucifix and the statues of the Virgin and the saints. Now they wish to return, but as conquerors, that is, with the right of using their own books instead of those of the National Board, and also with full power to exhibit statues of saints ad libitum.

For some time the books of the National Board have been undergoing a Romanising process. Great Protestant writers of imperial reputation have had to give place to essays by Cardinal Wiseman on Roman Catacombs, Cardinal Newman on Locusts, and other subjects; while a series of papers upon early Irish Christianity have been inserted with woodcuts of crosses and monkish cells which would gladden the heart of the Ritualist. Any person can see what an influence it must have upon their after lives when Protestant children from their tenderest years—and every National School in Ireland is open to children of all creeds—have been accustomed to regard Wiseman, Newman, and Manning as great literary guides, and have been taught from their school books that image-worship came into Ireland with St. Patrick.

Although the books of the National Education Board have been toned down, or levelled up to suit Rome's wishes, Archbishop Walsh is not satisfied. The Education Board is composed of an equal number of Protestants and Roman Catholics, but as Mr. Redington, a strong Ultramontane, is chairman, and possesses the casting vote, Archbishop Walsh is able to do as he pleases. Hence we were not surprised to read in The Catholic Times, of March 1, the following inspired paragraph:—"The Irish Commissioners of National Education have sent to Mr. Morley a resolution recommending that the Christian Brothers' schools should not be excluded from their due share of the education grants." Now, one of two things is certain to follow if the present Government remains sufficiently long in office. The Christian Brothers will be installed in the National Schools of the country, with permission to use their own class-books, and exhibit picture galleries of crucifixes and statues upon their walls, or they will remain nominally independent of the National Board, receiving, however, a capitation grant for all pupils who pass the examination in secular studies. The former is what Archbishop Walsh is aiming at. The lay teachers have grown restive under the despotism of clerical managers, and it will be much better to replace them by an order of monks bound by vows of obedience. The latter alternative is the one preferred by Mr. Morley at present.

It will be seen that in either case Protestants are called upon to pay for a system of education distinctly Roman Catholic and even Ultramontane. There lies before me the Historical Class Book compiled by the Christian Brothers, and I shall supply your readers with two or three extracts taken at random. In the Life of St. Patrick, at page 497, we read: "On his way thither, he turned aside to visit that part of Breffney, now the County Cavan, where from time immemorial had existed the abominable worship of Crom-Cruach, a large stone idol ornamented with gold and silver, and surrounded by twelve other idols ornamented with brass—the great object of Milesian Pagan worship from the time of their landing in Erin. When St. Patrick saw the idol he elevated his voice, and, pointing at it with the staff of Jesus, Crom-Cruach, it is said, fell to the earth, which at the same time swallowed the other twelve idols to their heads, to the great astonishment and terror of the people." We are assured in a footnote that "the staff of Jesus" was a crozier handed to Patrick in an island in the Mediterranean by some person who had received it from our Lord. Your readers will be surprised to learn that "the staff of Jesus," exalted into a wonder-working crozier by the Christian Brothers, was St. Patrick's ordinary walking stick. At page 585 we are informed that "the foundations and endowments destined by our Catholic forefathers for the instruction of their children, the schools and colleges, and the monastic institutions which their piety had founded, were seized on, diverted from their original objects, and handed over to Protestants."

In certain notes at the end of the book we are assured that Galileo, "far from being persecuted, was dismissed with new marks of esteem for his talents, and of regard for his person." Then the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes was forced upon Louis XIV., and was merely directed against the Huguenot ministers, who were commanded to quit the kingdom, their flocks being invited to remain "and enjoy their property and civil rights under the protection of the law." We have also a reference to "the abuses which may have accidentally taken place in the Spanish Inquisition," so that the Christian Brothers evidently hold a brief for Rome, and will leave no stone unturned to prove her immaculate in the eyes of their pupils.

But what is to be thought of the political party which is ready to compel Irish Protestants to pay them for such teaching? What would be thought in England if an attempt was made by the Government to hand all the Board schools over to the Catholic Truth Society? It is to be earnestly hoped that all who love Christ, and are zealous for the spread of his Gospel, will resist this scandalous project of handing Ireland over to Rome. We have seen the teaching of the Christian Brothers reduced to practice here in Dublin, where Protestant clergymen were covered with filth by schoolboys in some of the back streets. The Christian evangelist, the district visitor, and the colporteur have up-hill work at present in dealing with men and women brought up in clerical schools. But what will it be when the Christian Brothers get the control? Ireland has often had cruel treatment at the hands of England in the past, but no greater crime could possibly stain the annals of a Protestant nation than that she had, at the public cost, set up Rome's machinery for converting Ireland into another Spain.

MARYLEBONE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Dr. Pentecost has long been desirous of reaching the working classes and bringing them within hearing of the Gospel. With this end in view, a tea was given last Thursday to 500 working men in the lecture-hall of the church. Admission was by ticket, and so great were the numbers who applied that hundreds had to be refused. Long before seven o'clock the men began to assemble at the gate. The ladies of the Dorcas Society had been busy nearly all day cutting bread-and-butter and cake, and many, together with some young men of the Bible-class remained to serve.

The pastor received with a kindly welcome the first instalment of 350. When these had finished a hearty meal, they were escorted to the church above, where there were music and singing, in which they heartily joined, until the remaining 150 had finished tea. Lord Bennet sang a solo, greatly to the delight of his hearers, who wanted to applaud at the end of every verse. Dr. Pentecost gave an informal address, in the course of which he said it had been his great desire to bridge over the gulf which separates the rich from the poor. He wished to have a weekly meeting for the men, and that they should band themselves in a society. They would be visited in their homes, and as far as possible distress should be relieved, but they must be willing to help themselves, and to seek work rather than pecuniary assistance. Dr. Pentecost hopes that they may in time be persuaded to attend the Sunday services, and with this end in view he is intending to ask the congregation to give up their seats once a month.

In all directions the work of the Church is extending itself. Two of the houses in George-street are to be utilised in order to give the much-needed extension of accommodation for the multiplicity of classes and meetings. At the annual meeting, which took place on February 14, a very satisfactory account was given of all the branches of church work. The revenue last year was over £6500. Every Sunday evening there is an after-meeting, which is well attended. On the 17th inst. it was addressed by Lord Overtoun, who was passing through London.

On Sunday afternoons the church is a hive of activity. At one and the same time are carried on the two Sunday-schools, which are constantly increasing in numbers and outgrowing the accommodation; an adult Bible-class, connected with which are the open-air mission, helping hand committee, fishers of men committee, choral society, etc., and a class of over 100 young women, principally of the servant class, presided over by a lady. The poor are being cared for as never before. C. M. S.

CONVENTION AT CLIFTON.

A series of very happy meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life has taken place in Clifton, commencing on February 18 and terminating with a missionary day on the 22nd. There are many evidences that they have left behind a very large residuum of blessing from on high. The Convention was preceded by much waiting upon God, in private and in public; many expected much of the Master's presence and blessing, and these were fully realised.

The speakers were Revs. Evan Hopkins, R. C. Joynt, G. H. C. MacGregor, S. A. Selwyn, and J. Sloan. On missionary day there were also Miss Tristram, Rev. H. A. Bren, Rev. H. E. Fox, and Mr. Eugene Stock. We cannot thank God enough for having put it into the heart of Rev. N. Sherbrooke, vicar of Clifton, and others, to convene this happy Convention, and lovingly to invite the sympathy of all who hold dear the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and to co-operate with them. The result of this action on their part has doubtless been to extend the blessing to the remotest parts of Bristol, and to deepen it to all. The Convention was the first of the kind in Clifton for many years; and we trust that God may graciously open the way for others.

If we were asked to define the prominent features of the teaching during the five days of the Convention, we should express them in a very few words: Regeneration by the Holy Ghost; separation from the world and everything that defiles; a holy and consecrated life; much private prayer and meditation on God's Word; the call of God to accept his full salvation; to know Christ as a living reality; intercession our highest prerogative; the never-ceasing conflict of the Christian in this life, and the promise of assured victory in Christ from day to day; cleansing from sin daily, and renewing by the Holy Ghost; life more abundant, practically holy and abidingly happy. The interest of the meetings seemed to increase from day to day, the growth in numbers present representing a steady increase up to the fourth day, which was seemingly the largest attended of all. Each meeting was presided over by Captain Chapman, of Windermere, who had the sympathy of all.

The three missionary meetings on the Friday were very solemn and stirring, and we look for happy results to follow in many who were present, in self-sacrificing work for the Master, at home or abroad. If we had learned at this convention no other lesson, we have learned this one more deeply than ever before, that while we are utterly without strength to serve God or to please Him in any way, He is, in Christ, to us, all love, strength, wisdom, and all we need to equip us for fruitful service for his glory. K.

"IT IS GOD'S WORD—LISTEN."—It is the custom in the church in New Caledonia for the native preachers, after they have given out their texts, to wait a moment to let the words settle upon the heart and memory, and then they cry out again "Christians, Christians. Do you hear it? It is God's word. Listen." And they say the words again.—Church Missionary Gleaner.

THE WEAVER BROTHERS closed on Monday a most successful mission in the Albert Hall and Circus-street Hall, Nottingham. The power of God was manifest to save in every meeting, but it was left for the last Sunday, the occasion of the youths' class anniversary, to demonstrate in a marvellous manner the power of the Gospel when accompanied by the Holy Spirit. The hall was packed to overflowing; many went into the inquiry-room seeking and finding Jesus. The prayer meetings, held at noon-day, have been seasons of refreshing, and not a few at these gatherings have accepted Jesus. The prayers of hundreds will follow the evangelists in their work wherever they go. W. Bell.

Letters to the Editor.

CLEAR PROTESTANTISM.

Dear Sir,—I think this may be a time when you should receive some expressions of gratitude for the powerful and unflinching advocacy of Protestant truth, as contrasted with the profane delusions of Popery, which has for so many years been a distinguishing feature of The Christian. I pray that your admirable paper may be as fully marked as ever by this urgently needed exposure of Ultramontane deceits. You give us delightful views of golden channels for supplying the living waters; you do well not to let us forget that the purity of those waters is, after all, the one thing needful. And the whole spirit of the paper is worthy of its name, thank God!—Yours, in all Christian gratitude and regard, Edwd. Hyde F. Cosens.

Trinity Vicarage, Tewkesbury, Feb. 28.

AUSTRALIAN SOCIETY.

Dear Sir,—In your number of Dec. 13, just to hand, you quote a comment on Max O'Rell's accounts of Australian society. That such a man should so misrepresent the people of these colonies would be taken in the same light as his description of John Bull and his doings. But when a paper like The Christian lends its authority and disseminates such calumnies to the ends of the world, it is a different matter.

From an acquaintance of the colonies since the year 1852, I think I am able to judge on this matter as well, or, I hope, better than Max O'Rell, who was here a few weeks, and can safely say no such record is true. Society here, as a whole, is quite as pure and sober as the mother country, perhaps rather more so.

There are, I am sorry to say, much worldliness and love of pleasure here, but there is also much true religion, and many who are out-and-out on the Lord's side.—Yours sincerely, Mary Kelly.

CHRISTIANS AND MONEY.

Dear Sir,—It will be for the comfort of many, whose consciences are exercised on the above subject, if the writers in your columns who advocate the literal interpretation of Matt. vi. 19, &c., will show them how such an interpretation can be brought to bear on the questions of daily life.

For instance, in the article in your issue of Feb. 14, "The Poor and the Frost," I read the following:—"Beside the ordinary unemployed, there are thousands whose trade is paralysed by such weather. Many, having a little laid up for a rainy day, are able to manage, but hosts are not, and their destitution intensifies the general pressure of poverty."

Mr. Gledstone (in the article, "Money—I" in the same number) says "we ought not to save money." Have those above mentioned who have laid up something for a rainy day, acted as Christians ought not? I have known Christian workmen who could earn high wages in summer, and (from the nature of their employment) nothing during long periods of the winter. It was their custom to lay up money in the summer to meet the winter's need. Were these men acting as they "ought not"?

Is it wrong for a godly professional man in receipt of a large present income, to lay up or insure his life on behalf of an invalid daughter? I knew a devoted minister of Christ—a poor man, yet a most liberal giver—who contrived by strenuous self-denial to put by such a provision, that when he was suddenly called away in the midst of his work, his widow and children had enough for a modest maintenance.

Would Mr. Gledstone have shared our thankfulness for this? or would he have felt that our friend had failed in faith and obedience to his Lord's command. Does the word "provide" in 1 Tim. v. 8 refer only to the need of to-day, to the exclusion of future need?

If none made provision for their children, who could respond to the appeals for missionaries to go forth at their own charges?

Again, if, as Mr. Gledstone urges, the injunction, "Take no thought for the morrow," is to be interpreted and acted on in its rigidly literal sense, no plans could be arranged, no engagements referring to the future could be made, no tradesman could stock his shop with goods, no farmer sow his seed, no housewife even lay in her stores for a week, if it were unlawful to take thought for any concerns beyond those of the literal to-day. No doubt, Mr. Gledstone would say, "This is ridiculous; we are to read our Lord's words (in such matters) by the light of the common-sense which He has given us." Exactly so; but this is not literal interpretation.

If Mr. Gledstone means that a Christian should not lay up more than will maintain his family (or himself, if laid aside from work), in a position of honest independence, let him say so, and many will agree with him who regard his statements in their present crude form as utterly unpracticable. But I understand Mr. Gledstone to maintain that "Lay not up treasures," and "Take no thought for the morrow," are commands to be obeyed by Christians as literally, as unswervingly, as "Thou shalt not steal," and "Speak every man truth with his neighbour." If so, the cottager's thrift, and the professional man's insurance for a sick child, are sins as real, if not so heinous, as the hoarding of millions by the rich. A great thinker has said, "Much discussion would be saved by a preliminary lucid statement of the case."—Yours very faithfully,

Perplexed.

AN EXPERIENCE.

Dear Sir,—I was in my early manhood a Ritualist of the Ritualists. No one could even go to greater extremes of doctrine and practice than I did, and it is now a bitter thought to me that in my misguided zeal I did all that I could to advance the cause in my sphere of action, happily a very limited one.

After many years of soul unrest, God led me in a wonderful way out of the mists of darkness and error into the glorious light of his pure simple Gospel truth. If anyone wishes to know the details of that part of my experience, he may read them in a booklet I was led to publish, at the advice of several friends, entitled, "From Darkness to Light," by a clergyman of the Church of England. (Shaw & Co.)

Speaking from experience, I can say that it is indeed true (as one of your correspondents points out) that among the various degrees of "Ritualists" there are many very good, earnest, hard-working men, but then the point is just this—no amount of goodness, earnestness, and hard work can make an unscriptural creed a right or safe one to hold and teach. However much we may honour and revere some of these men, and even "esteem them highly in love for their work's sake," we dare not—for their own souls' sake and that of those who are likely to be influenced by them—fail to do all that lies in our power to oppose and counteract the advance of the principles they teach. I say for their own souls' sake, for it is, I feel, more than probable that there are among them many restless, longing hearts, conscious of a lack somewhere, and pining, oh, so wearily! for true peace and rest of soul! Such was once my condition, and my whole soul goes out in yearning love towards those who are passing through the same bitter experience. Let me earnestly plead for such, that even while we firmly oppose that part of their teaching which we cannot but feel is contrary to the Word of God, we speak of them and act towards them in a spirit of love, gentleness, and fairness. In my own case, argument and opposition only made me hold faster to my opinion; but it was the power of the Gospel as seen in the lives, the bearing, the very faces of certain "Evangelicals" that led me to say, "These men have something which I have not, but which I long to have; what is it?" I often wish for some way in which the claims of the Gospel in its fulness and simplicity could be brought more prominently and winningly before these earnest teachers and practisers of Ritualism. What a blessing it would be to themselves and the whole Church of God if their earnestness and devoted zeal could be turned into the channel of opposing the errors they now seek to advance, and preaching the grand, simple Gospel of the grace of God.

Apologising for trespassing on your space, I remain, yours etc., C. A. B.

Caution.—Rev. J. Gelson Gregson writes to us from Fyzabad, India:—"A letter from the secretary of the Y.M.C.A. at Kingston-on-Thames informs me that a young man has been to him for money, representing himself to be one of my sons, and that he has tried to get money from others who know me. May I ask you to warn Christian friends of mine against this man? I have no idea who he can be—but this I know that he is not a son of mine. The man is evidently taking advantage of my absence from England." Friends who can facilitate the discovery of the man should write to Mr. Gregson, at Grand Parade, Portsmouth, where he hopes to arrive about the end of April.

FROM MR. HUDSON TAYLOR.

Our sojourn in China has been prolonged by the sad war. It has been a great comfort to note the kind gifts of readers of The Christian to the China Inland Mission; and to know how very many have been upholding us in prayer at this time. I am glad to take this opportunity of thanking them warmly.

After the war commenced I took a second long journey in N. China. It was quite uncertain when I left Tien-tsin to go inland, whether it would be possible to return to that port. The journey, however, was safely accomplished, and I reached Shanghai early in December, after an absence of ten weeks.

I was thankful to find in all the stations I visited that the war had given rise to no unfriendly feelings, and that there was good evidence that the Government were taking pains to protect and promote the kindly feeling towards the missionaries. I was greatly cheered by the progress of the Gospel in several stations which I had not visited before, especially in those opened by Mr. Studd and Mr. Stanley Smith.

Your readers will have heard of the presentation of a beautiful copy of the New Testament to the Empress Dowager on her sixtieth birthday. This so interested the Emperor that he sent to the depot to purchase a copy, and also the Old Testament. The copy sent proved to be defective, and was returned to be exchanged for a more perfect one, showing that the Emperor had at least taken the interest in it of turning over the leaves and examining the book. That the Word of God should come into the hands of these royal personages at this time is a very significant fact, and should lead to much prayer that in their trouble they may be led to look to the living God for help.

I feel there should also be much prayer that the dynasty may be upheld. It is under it that our missionaries have been protected, and able to live in peace in nearly every province of the empire. The overthrow of the dynasty would, moreover, lead to deplorable results, and it is a question whether any new dynasty could govern China better; for if many of the present officials are corrupt, their removal might make room for worse, and a revolution could not be effected without results fearful to contemplate. Some of us have been stirred up to pray more than ever that God would bless the reigning family, and guide in the councils of the nation so that peace may soon be restored.

Within the last few days intelligence has reached us of the landing of a number of Japanese troops at Ninghai, one of our stations, about fifteen miles from Chegro. Mr. Tomalin, who in Mr. Judd's absence has been superintending the work of this station, is at present in Shanghai, having come here at my request for conference on some matters of business. So far we have only telegraphic tidings, as being winter, communication with the North is largely suspended. We are praying for the native Christians, as also for those in Manchuria, who are known to have suffered much through the war. They are more exposed at this time than the foreign missionaries, whom it is the interest of all to safeguard.

Whatever may come, the Lord reigns, and all power is given unto Him. Engaged in his work, remaining in posts of duty at his command, we have his sure promise, "I will never leave you." So that we may boldly say, "The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me."

I am thankful that reinforcements have been coming out as usual, and that both our training-homes, for men and women, are in an undisturbed part of the country, far from the seat of war. The need of additional workers is still very great, and if missionary service should involve possible danger, it must never be forgotten that the millions of heathen are in certain danger, and cannot be saved except through a knowledge of the Saviour whom we preach.—Yours faithfully,

Shanghai, Jan. 25. J. Hudson Taylor.

PORT SAID.—During the past year we have been much encouraged from various sources by testimony of spiritual blessing received through our ministry. Some time ago our friend, Mr. W. H. Fry, writing of this work, said I required £100 to complete the outfit of the Rest; but what I told him was that we were asking the Lord to send us that sum for the immediate requirements of our current expenses, and general outfit for present use, the Rest being complete.

The Seamen's Rest, Port Said. Alex. Locke.

EVENTS IN JAPAN.

Dear Sir,—The war is still the main interest of the hour in Japan. Last night the embassy from China reached Kobe, and to-day the party will be taken by a Japanese steamer to the port of Hiroshima-Ujina. The Hon. John W. Foster accompanies the embassy as counsellor. It is very gratifying to the missionaries that such an eminent man as Mr. Foster is also a devout Christian. The Japanese are gratified at his eminence, and Christian workers are gratified at his being the Christian that he is.

We pray that his mission here may be successful, and that both China and Japan may open their hearts to the Gospel as well as to material civilisation—to a better peace than the one they are now considering.

The army has just given permission for two Christian pastors to go to the front and work among the soldiers. The agent of the American Bible Society, Rev. Henry Loomis, has also received written permission to visit and distribute Bibles in any of the garrisons in Japan. This is a new and agreeable change for the better. The army authorities have not heretofore been at all friendly to the introduction of Christianity among the troops. The navy has been much in advance of the army in this respect. I trust that the time is not far distant when the hearts of all the people will be open to receive the glad tidings of great joy.

With thanks for your kindness in sending the paper, sincerely and fraternally yours,

J. L. Atkinson.

[We have received a long and interesting letter from Mr. Loomis, from which we hope to make extracts next week.—Ed.]

MR. W. R. LANE IN STIRLING.

The Stirling Evangelistic Association invited Mr. W. R. Lane to conduct a mission in this old historic town. They had heard favourable accounts of his work in Airdrie and Glasgow, and were anxious that similar blessing might come to this community. Accordingly it was arranged that Mr. Lane should begin on Sabbath, February 17. A preliminary prayer meeting was held in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., at which Rev. Dr. Andrew, editor of the Stirling Tract Enterprise, presided. Several ministers and other Christian workers were present, and took part.

At the close of the meeting Mr. Lane appeared, having just arrived from London, and spoke a few hopeful, encouraging words. During the ten days that followed, the meetings were held in the Free North Church (Rev. John Chalmers'), with the exception of two in the Public Hall, when about 1400 people gathered to hear the word. The interest increased, and when the last night came upwards of 200 people remained to a second meeting for prayer and consecration. The impression made was such as to make us believe that had Mr. Lane been able to remain longer a larger work would have been done. Such Scriptural and well-prepared addresses, and such earnest pleadings at the second meetings, cannot but result in conversions to God, as all is done in manifest dependence on the Holy Spirit. Not a few in Stirling will remember Mr. Lane's brief stay and work among them.

THE OPIUM TRAFFIC.—Mr. J. G. Alexander, hon. sec. of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade, has been visiting the Welsh Theological Colleges during the past month, addressing them on the opium question and on the claims of foreign missions. He received a cordial welcome alike from principals and students at the colleges of Trevecca, Brecon, Carmarthen, Bangor, and Bala. The Principal of Trevecca College remarked that he needed no Royal Commission to tell him the effects of the opium habit; and proceeded to tell of a case within his own knowledge in which a gentleman of high standing in the Church and in the world had become both physically and morally wrecked by forming the habit. He also mentioned the case of a Christian chemist and druggist, who, having purchased at a high price a business in North Wales, and finding that it largely consisted in supplying laudanum to opium consumers, felt unable with a clear conscience to carry on such a trade, and resold it at a heavy loss. Mr. Alexander was permitted, by the kindness of the Principal, to address the students of University College, Aberystwith, when the Vice-principal, Professor Angus, occupied the chair. In the course of his tour Mr. Alexander addressed several public meetings on the opium question.

IRISH NOTES.

The sum of £11,606 was received by the Representative Church Body, as bequests and contributions during the month of January.

Many will learn with satisfaction that Rev. George Forde, of Belfast, who recently went out as a Methodist missionary to Heidelburg, South Africa, has now recovered from the dangerous illness with which for nearly two months he was prostrated.

After spending forty-two years in Drogheda, during the greater portion of which time he acted as rector of St. Peter's, in the town, and was greatly esteemed by all who knew him, Rev. John Eccles, owing to age and infirmities, has resigned his postion, and removed to Dublin.

The Dean of Connor (Dr. Seaver) is a very popular man in Belfast. Last week, on the occasion of his golden wedding, he received from all sects and parties a handsome presentation in recognition of his many public services. Dr. Seaver is a thorough Evangelical.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The West Coast Mission carries the Gospel message to many in the remote districts of Western Scotland.

The Glasgow Town Council is seeking powers in its new General Purposes Bill to deal effectually with the "gentlemen pests" of the street.

The Free Breakfast Mission in Aberdeen supplies a large number of destitute persons with a meal on Sabbath mornings. The Gospel is preached at every service.

In the North British Daily Mail Mr. W. Quarrier makes a strong plea for help in founding his Consumptive Hospitals in connection with the National Orphan Homes.

There are 107 nurses on the staff of the Glasgow Training Home for Nurses. Last year 338 cases were treated in the Home; the outside cases numbered 700.

A notable figure disappears from the earthly scene with the death of the well-known Professor Blackie, of Edinburgh. Although eccentric in some respects, he was a man of brilliant parts, and of strong Christian sympathies.

A public meeting of Congregationalists and Evangelical Unionists held in Aberdeen last week approved generally of the proposed conditions of union between the two Churches, and pledged themselves to use their personal influence in favour of the union.

The Lord Provost of Edinburgh presided at the annual meeting of the National Bible Society of Scotland last week. An increase in the circulation of the Scriptures was reported from India, China, Austria, and Germany. The statements from Norway and Belgium show a decrease.

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, The Mound, Edinburgh, is doing good work among these two classes in coping with the temptations of the public-house and the dancing saloon. Colonel Wauchope, who is in command at The Castle, said there was not now one-eighth of the drunkenness in the Army there was when he joined the Army twenty-nine years ago.

The report of the directors of the Protestant Institute of Scotland for the past year states that the teaching of the classes has been carried on by Professor Orr in a way that has met with their heartiest approval. The topics being discussed during the present session are "The Papal Doctrinal System" and "The Practical Working of the Papal System." The directors express gratification that the classes are being so well attended both by enrolled students and other friends whose presence is heartily welcomed. Professor Orr has consented to continue his services as lecturer for other two sessions.

The annual meeting of the Christian Literature Society for China was held last week, in Edinburgh, Professor Crum Brown in the chair. Dr. Ross, China, in moving the adoption of the report, referred to the present war in the East, and said that the reason why such a small nation as Japan should be able to successfully oppose China was that the latter was not a military nation. They placed literature far before war. Even though Japan should become ruler over China that nation would not be humiliated. They must show the Chinese that the nations of the West possessed greater knowledge than they did themselves, and it was by knowledge that China would have to be humiliated, not by war.

JAMAICA MEDICAL MISSION.—Misses Vick and Stanley left lately Mildmay for Jamaica—the former returning once more to take up her work in the hospital at Kingstown, the latter to join her, for the first time, in the same happy service.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[From our own Correspondents.]

OXFORD.

Mrs. Finn, who is so well known for her labours in connection with the Jewish colonisation of Palestine, spoke twice in Oxford last week on her life and work to interested audiences, one of which was presided over by Professor Margoliouth, of New College, who is so much valued as a friend of Israel and an upholder of the Hebrew Scriptures.

Last Sunday the first Bampton Lecture was delivered at St. Mary's by Rev. T. B. Strong, of Christ Church. The general subject is "Christian Ethics," and the first lecture was devoted to a statement of the inadequacy and failure of Pagan and Jewish ethics to enable men to live aright. They both give a standard of life, but no power to realise it. The Gospel of Christ does both. This is the special point to be elaborated in the succeeding lectures.

Dr. Stalker preached at Mansfield on Sunday on "Union with Christ," and gave a soul-stirring, heart-uplifting discourse on this great Pauline doctrine. Treating the subject as legal, moral, and mystical, his hearers were favoured with a deep experimental treatment of the very marrow of Gospel truth, and one could not but rejoice that into the intellectual and critical atmosphere of Mansfield such warm, pure draughts of God's truth should come.

Two very necessary Oxford institutions are the Female Penitentiary and the City Refuge. They are generally associated at their annual meeting, but perhaps no two places could be more different in management, the Refuge being in the hands of Mildmay Deaconesses, while the Penitentiary is ruled on very High Church principles. It is a great thing for the Refuge to be in such earnest and faithful keeping.

CAMBRIDGE.

The University sermon on Sunday was preached by the Ven. A. S. Aglen, Archdeacon of St. Andrews.

Lord Bennet gave the Sunday morning Bible-reading in the Henry Martyn Hall. About 150 men were present.

The Gospel address in the evening in the Alexandra Hall was given by Lieut.-Col. Bentinck.

On Thursday the annual tea and meeting of the Church Pastoral Aid Society was held in the Guildhall, Rev. C. J. Proctor presiding. Addresses were delivered by Revs. J. W. Dunne, W. Davies, H. C. G. Moule, all of whom testified to the good work the Society had been enabled to carry on in some of the poorer parishes of England.

At the weekly meeting of the C.M.U., Rev. J. Wilkinson described the work of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews.

At the meeting of the Nonconformists' Union on Sunday night, a very able paper, entitled "Christianity and War," was read by H. S. Stowe, of Downing College. A useful discussion followed.

A fairly-attended meeting, under the auspices of the Church Association, was held in the Guildhall on Monday evening. A lecture was delivered by Rev. A. Isaacs, his subject being "Division and dissent in the Church of England, whence they arise and whence they tend." Questions were afterwards put to, and ably answered by, the lecturer.

BISHOP TUCKER, speaking of a recent visit to Rabai, says:—"The impression left on my mind by my visit is that a great advance has been made all along the line. There is more vitality in the work, more vigour discernible in the native workers. The missionary aspect of the Church has been deepened, a real effort is being made to reach the heathen around. In a word, the Church seems to have been lifted into a higher spiritual life."

MR. W. R. BRADLAUGH, editor of The Anti-Infidel, was recently sued in the Queen's Bench Division for damages for libel, he having published a false statement in a report of a debate at Leeds on "Is Secularism Degrading?" Considering that before printing his report, Mr. Bradlaugh obtained from both parties certificates of its accuracy, he cannot be charged with malice or wilful negligence. The plaintiff claimed £1000 damages, but the jury only awarded £30; when the costs on both sides have been paid, about £300 will be the burden thrown upon Mr. Bradlaugh, who writes that, in reporting the debate, he aimed at exposing the obscene and revolting character of Secularist literature. He maintains that he has succeeded in this, and, therefore, he calls upon all who love the truth, and value the sanctity of the home, to come to his relief. He says:—"For the past twenty years we have been in the thick of the fight with our face to the foe, and we cannot think that, now we are wounded in fighting their battle, Christians will calmly stand by and see our home broken up, and our premature grey hairs brought to an early grave for lack of means." Communications should be addressed: Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, 70, King's Cross-road.

The Book World.

MORE MARCH MAGAZINES.

Rest and Reaping (1d. Morgan & Scott) is as varied as ever in doctrinal and practical contents.

Sunday Reading for the Young is one of the brightest of monthlies. There are many pictures and good reading matter. (3d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.)

In The Christian Treasury (1d. Marshall Brothers), the Editor, Rev. F. B. Meyer, contributes some pleasing recollections of the late Dr. Gordon, of Boston.

Great Thoughts (6d. A. W. Hall, 28, Hutton-street, E.C.) is a number of special interest with its forecasts of the coming century by specialists in various departments of life and knowledge.

The Band of Hope Chronicle has a useful article by Mrs. Percy Lund, on "The Claims of the Temperance Cause on the Christian Endeavour Movement." (1d. U.K. Band of Hope Union.)

Mothers and Daughters (1d. A. W. Hall), edited by Mrs. Reaney, gives a portrait of Miss Böcker, the heroine of the Elbe disaster. Mrs. Clare Goslett is contributing useful papers on sanitary science.

The Missionary Herald of the Baptist Missionary Society contains deeply interesting communications from workers in China, India, and Congoland, with illustrations. (1d. B. M. House, Furnival-st.)

St. Nicholas (1s.) as usual combines the instructive and the impossible. Of the first kind is the article on flags, and of the second is Rudyard Kipling's tale of "The King's Ankus." (T. Fisher Unwin.)

Helping Words (1d. A. W. Hall) contains an article on the China Inland Mission; a discourse on "Better Things," by Rev. F. W. Bourne, author of "Billy Bray"; and a paper on "The Wild Flowers of Railway Banks."

China's Millions (1d. Morgan & Scott) opens with an article by W. B. Sloan on "The Living Christ." There is an illustrated paper by F. H. Judd on the Protestant Collegiate School, Chefoo; and Mrs. Howard Taylor continues her serial, "Through the Heart of China."

North Africa (1d. Partridge), the record of the North Africa Mission, tells of devoted labour among the Kabyles and other Berber races. Mr. G. B. Michell writes on the Mohammedan idea of God, giving some suggestions on the presentation of the Gospel to Moslems.

The Animals' Friend is a very readable illustrated paper. One of the most important items this month is a plea for the abolition of the Royal Buckhounds, by Rev. J. Stratton, M.A. The rights of dogs, squirrels, and other animals are ably championed. (1d. E. W. Allen.)

The Clergyman's Magazine is always rich in homiletic matter. In this number Archdeacon Sinclair writes on Richard Hooker, and Rev. W. D. Ridley examines the Epistle to the Hebrews, which he holds to have been written by St. Luke. (6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

The Expository Times contains a learned and useful paper by Professor James Orr, of Edinburgh, on "The School of Ritschl." The contents of this monthly are not all positively useful, but students will always find something to interest and instruct them. (6d. T. & T. Clark.)

The Chronicle of the London Missionary Society (1d. Snow) gives portrait and sketch of Dr. J. C. Thomson, of the Hong Kong Medical Mission; tells the fascinating story of Mrs. Ma, of Amoy; and outlines the recent movements of Khama, the South African Christian chief.

The story of Napoleon Bonaparte is still a leading feature in The Century (1s. 4d.), which also contains many attractive contributions to history, literature, and art. One article of special interest at this juncture is "Blackmail as a Heritage, or New York's Legacy from Colonial Days." (T. F. Unwin.)

The Girls' Friendly Society Associates' Journal and Advertiser well answers to its comprehensive title. There is this month a thoughtful paper on praise as an element of public worship. The correspondence of this paper is very practical. (1d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.)

Our Boys' Magazine (1d. Schoolboys' Scripture Union, 13A, Warwick-lane, E.C.) is a capital monthly for thoughtful lads. The present number describes University Camps for Schoolboys, tells a readable story of school life, and gives some well-selected gleanings from missionary records.

Home Words contains a portrait and sketch of Dr. H. Cheetham, formerly Bishop of Sierra Leone; The Day of Days tells the story of Christian civilisation in Uganda; and Hand and Heart describes the excellent work with which the name of Mrs. Meredith has so long been associated. (1d. each. "Home Words" Office.)

Regions Beyond is more than the organ of the varied operations of which Harley House, Bow, is the centre. The present issue gives details of work in many lands and under various auspices, and at the same time keeps friends of Congo Balolo-land and other special spheres well informed of progress. (3d. Partridge.)

The Fireside (6d. "Home Words" Office) presents as frontispiece a portrait of the late Archdeacon Blakeney, whose career is sketched by Rev. Charles Bullock. John Isabell writes on Cornish fisherfolk; Rev. E. J. Hardy shows the poverty of riches; and Dr. S. B. James continues to give short modernisations of the fables of Æsop.

Things to Come (1d. Office: 29, Paternoster-row). Here are addresses by Archdeacon Perowne (on the Jews), Mr. Louis Liesching (on Daniel's visions), and Rev. James Smith (on the days of Noah); and an article by Dr. Bullinger on the names and order of the books of the Old Testament. Questions and answers are a feature of this monthly.

Evangelical Christendom, the organ of the Evangelical Alliance, records religious movements in various lands. One who has lived in Russia gives glimpses, sorrowful and otherwise, of life and work there. Those whose hearts are exercised upon world-wide evangelisation should read this excellent monthly. (6d. J. S. Phillips, 121, Fleet-street.)

India's Women (2d. Nisbet), the monthly record of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society, contains, among other useful articles, one by Rev. George Ensor, on the "Key of India." The Zenana (1d. Partridge), the organ of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, opens with a continuation of Louise Marston's "Key of Light: a Story of Mohammedan Zenana Life."

Messrs. Cassell's Serials.—The Book of Health (6d.) has now reached a conclusion, and is a most valuable work for the household. The Illustrated History of England (7d.) is also nearing a close, having reached the time of the last general election. Dr. Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase and Fable (7d.) is a marvellous collection of colloquialisms, their derivations and uses.

The Sword and Trowel opens with a prayer-meeting address by C. H. Spurgeon, based on Gen. iv. 26, and entitled "The First Public Worship in the World." Another letter is given from Pastor Charles Spurgeon, now on travel, the scene being laid in Cape Town. Pastor T. W. Medhurst contributes Unpublished Notes of C. H. Spurgeon's New Park-street sermons. (3d. Passmore & Alabaster.)

Young England (3d.), besides its serials, has a complete story, entitled, "The Green Men of Norwell," a tale of the Scottish border. The perilous work of the mountain guide is described, and there is an illustrated article on "Beasts of the Night." The Silver Link (1d.) gives the first chapter of a story by Edith M. Edwards, entitled, "Making Allowances." The Sunday School Teacher (2d.) is a real help to many an earnest worker among the young. (Sunday School Union.)

The Missionary Review of the World opens with an article (illustrated) by the editor-in-chief, Dr. A. T. Pierson, entitled "The World-wide Ministry and Mission of Charles H. Spurgeon." There is a useful outline of the growth of the leading American Missionary Societies, by Robert E. Speer; also a description of Pastor A. G. Brown's work in East London, by Rev. J. Douglas, of Brixton. Other important articles are on work in the West Indies and Mexico. (1s. Funk & Wagnalls.)

The Church Missionary Intelligencer. (6d.) The opening article, on "Creeds and Contrasts," by Rev. George Ensor, will have special attractions for those who labour among Buddhists and Mohammedans. Archdeacon Moule writes on the war in the East, showing that in the sixteenth century the Japanese not only conquered Corea, but harassed the whole Chinese coast with their fleet. Rev. J. P. Haythornthwaite, Principal of St. John's College, Agra, treats "Higher Education as a Missionary Agency," and Rev. W. J. Richards tells the story of the Reforming Syrians of Travancore and Cochin. The Church Missionary Gleaner (1d.) gives some very readable extracts from Miss Gollock's journal in India; and Archdeacon Warren outlines the history of the Japan Mission. (Church Missionary House.)

Robinson Crusoe, with 120 illustrations by Walter Paget, is now being issued by Cassell & Co. in serial form. Thirteen monthly parts (3d. each) will complete an admirable edition of this famous story.

Messrs. J. Clarke and Co., 13, Fleet-street, are publishing a special issue in twelve serial sixpenny parts of Dr. Geikie's Holy Land and the Bible. There is an abundance of beautiful illustrations by Mr. H. A. Harper. Of the excellence of Dr. Geikie's letterpress it is needless to speak.

Lessons from God's Flower Garden is a bright little volume, presenting the substance of several flower sermons by the late Rev. W. Meynell Whittemore, D.D., rector of St. Katherine Cree, City. Some particulars are given of Dr. Whittemore, who for forty years preached flower sermons. (1s. Stoneman.)

The History of the English Church and People in South Africa. By A. Theodore Wirgman, D.C.L. (3s. 6d. Longmans.) After a bare outline of the country and the people, Dr. Wirgman writes of the Church with its very chequered experiences. The High Church partisan frequently shows his hand in these pages.

Life Power: or, Character, Culture, and Conduct, is a volume of papers by Dr. A. T. Pierson, which, though not particularly strong, are suggestive of practical lessons, and calculated to prove stimulative to young people. Three of the most readable essays are: "The Use and Abuse of Books," "The Genius of Industry," and "The Ethics of Amusement." (2s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster.)

"Will You Take My Place?" by E. S. (Partridge & Co. 6d.) An all too brief record of a consecrated life. Edward N. Roberson had served but three years in connection with the China Inland Mission, when he was called to his rest, leaving as his last appeal the personal question which forms the title of the booklet. We doubt not the perusal of this touching memorial will move many to respond, "Here am I, send me."

The Historical Deluge, in its relation to scientific discovery and to present questions, is the latest "Present-day Tract." (4d. Religious Tract Society.) It is by Sir J. William Dawson, and discusses briefly, but with remarkable comprehension, the account of the flood given in Genesis; the information afforded by secular history and tradition; the testimony of geology and archæology; and the use made of the Deluge in the New Testament.

The Charities' Register and Digest, a very useful work of reference, has been issued in a fourth edition, revised. It gives a classified list of charitable organisations in or available from the Metropolis, together with information respecting the legal, voluntary, and other means for the prevention and relief of distress, and the improvement of the condition of the poor. There is an elaborate index, and an introduction by C. S. Loch, of the Charity Organisation Society. (10s. 6d. nett. Longmans & Co.)

Why I Abandoned Infant Baptism, by Rev. James Mountain, minister of Emmanuel Church (Countess of Huntingdon's), Tunbridge Wells, is a remarkably comprehensive and cogent vindication of a conscientious act and profession. Mr. Mountain brings to the statement of his case a large body of information and testimony; and he is uniformly charitable to those whose tenets and practices he feels compelled to criticise. Rev. Charles Stirling, formerly vicar of New Malden, writes a preface to this little book. (Paper covers, 8d.; cloth, 1s. Partridge.)

Dr. Bullinger's booklet, "Things to Come": an epitome of prophetic truth, is now issued in an eighth edition, revised. (1d. Eyre & Spottiswoode.)

Evangelism, a booklet by Gerald Coultas, gives practical counsels on Gospel work, and lists of Scripture appeals and encouragements. Workers will find it of service. (1d. Marshall Brothers.)

The Bible League (10, Paternoster-row) is issuing some "Papers for To-day" (a penny each). The first, on The Higher Criticism, is by Rev. John Urquhart. It briefly shows the genesis and character of modern questionings regarding the Holy Scriptures.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

From Wesleyan Methodist Book-Room.—The Sweet Singer of Israel, by Benjamin Gregory, D.D. 2s. 6d.

From the Baptist Tract and Book Society.—The Ministry of the Spirit, by A. J. Gordon, D.D., of Boston, U.S.A., with introduction by Rev. F. B. Meyer (4s.).

From George Adam Young & Co., Edinburgh.—The Analytical Concordance to the Bible, by Robert Young, LL.D., sixth edition, revised and enlarged. From 24s. to 52s. 6d., according to binding, etc.

MR. G. W. CLEGG, Evangelist, Frome, Camborne, has closed a three weeks' mission at the Wesleyan Church, Lelant, Cornwall. Large congregations have gathered nightly and on Sunday crowded ones. The church has been revived and quickened, and many have professed conversion, not a few of them young men. Mrs. Clegg conducted several afternoon meetings, which resulted in great blessing, also one meeting for women only; a good number attended.

AWAKENING IN CHINA.—Archdeacon Wolfe, writing on the need of a medical missionary in Hak-Chiang, says: "During all my years in China (now thirty-three years) I have never known anything like the deep interest which has been recently awakened all over the county of Hok-Chiang in the Christian religion, and which exists at this moment. I am almost afraid to write about it lest I should exaggerate. The real fact, however, is that a very wonderful movement towards Christianity is going on all over the county simultaneously, and in the most remote corners of the county. We (C.M.S.) cannot really take advantage of all the opportunities offered to us, village after village opening their doors to us and asking me for teachers to teach them. Nearly all our old places of worship are thronged Sunday after Sunday. The people seem as if suddenly they had discovered the folly of their idolatry, and that all their past had been a blank."

OBITUARY.

MRS. BARKWORTH, TUNBRIDGE WELLS.

This faithful servant of Christ, who passed away ately, had been a resident worker in Tunbridge Wells for some years, and was much beloved and blessed to many souls. She had a mothers' meeting, a policemen's class, and a Bible class for married women, besides being on the committee of the Y.W C.A. and interesting herself in numerous other good efforts. She worked to the last, and it was only when she was obliged to take to her bed that she "ceased from her labours," and truly we may say "her works do follow her." Her quiet, gentle Christian spirit endeared her to all, and Tunbridge Wells has indeed lost a faithful and true friend.

J. N. B.

MR. ROBERT BILKE.

This well-known servant of the Lord fell asleep at his residence, Abergeldie, Greenhill-road, Harlesden, on Friday, March 1, after a few days' illness from influenza and pneumonia. Mr. Bilke was for over thirty years director of the Union Hall Mission, and carried on evangelistic work among the poor in Lisson-grove and various other parts of London. Our brother was in his fifty-seventh year and leaves a widow and large family to mourn his loss.

His daughter writes:—"Our dear father seemed so be getting better; his lungs were healing, and the fever had left him, but his heart was too weak to bear the strain, and he passed away this (Friday) morning at 2.15 a.m. We are all in deep distress; the blow is so sudden. Your prayers are asked for us all, and especially for dear mother in the time of great trouble."

MISS MUDIE.

Many will be grieved to hear of the death of Miss Mudie. On the way home from Mr. Meyer's meeting on the 21st ult., she took a chill, which developed into influenza with bronchitis, and after a week's illness she passed away in her sleep on her birthday, at the home of her dear friend, Mrs. Broomhall, of the China Inland Mission. In her youth she was an earnest and faithful Sunday-school teacher, and with her brothers worked for many years at Horseferry-road and Westminster Chapel. In later years she spent a great deal of her time at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, filling sailors' bags with pamphlets and periodicals, and in connection with this work she will long be remembered by many dear friends. She was a warm supporter of the London Missionary Society, and took a great interest in the China Inland Mission and in all Christian work.

MRS. W. A. PLUMPTRE.

Many will have heard with regret of the death of Mrs. W. A. Plumptre, widow of the late Rev. W. A. Plumptre. She was full of faith and good works. She was in India with her husband when he was missionary to the high-caste Brahmins. There she entered warmly into missionary work, learning the Tamil language and teaching the young. For years she was an invalid, but never idle. Her hands were constantly occupied with work to be sold for various good causes. Dr. Ibstein's work among the Jews had in her an enthusiastic supporter, so had St. Peter's Orphanage, Thanet. A meeting was to be held at Rockhills House, Bournemouth, where she was staying, on the very day on which she lay unconscious. She had been looking forward to this meeting and to seeing the Archbishop of Dublin, who was to address the gathering. But it was not willed that she should be present at it. Her modest income was taxed to the full in support of various objects.

THE LATE M. F. PUAUX.

The venerable François Puaux, whose death we announced last week, at the age of eighty-eight, was the best-known historian of French Protestantism, and a controversialist of world-wide reputation. Born at Vallon, Ardèche, he read for the law, and after a short practice dedicated his life to the service of God. Though then thirty-two years of age, a married man with a family, he did not hesitate thus to follow the course which Providence marked out for him. After studying for three years at Montauban, under Jalaquier, Adolphe Monod, and de Félice, he accepted a ministerial charge at Luneray, and afterwards laboured at Rochefort-sur-Mer and Mulhouse. Especially, however, will he be remembered by his writings, in which, as "An Old Huguenot," he vindicated Protestantism, and exposed the errors and dangers of Popery. Twice he wrote the history of Evangelical Reform: first as an exhaustive work, then as a popular story, which has been circulated wherever the French language is spoken; when he died he was engaged upon a manual edition suited for use in schools. A warm-hearted Christian, he died as he had lived, full of faith. A friend describes his end in Le Christianisme:—"On Feb. 18 he asked for the prayers of his children, and after hearing their petitions, with a vigorous voice, which those who heard it will never forget, he said: 'I go to see the glory of God; farewell, till we meet again!' His hands rose in a final benediction. He spoke no more; his spirit was in the hands of the Father, who graciously took him in peace, and without the least suffering disturbing his last moments."

MR. GEORGE SPOONER, ROSARIO DE SANTA FE.

The death of this earnest missionary, at the age of forty-nine years, removes from the small company of workers in South America one that could ill be spared. In 1864 he was brought to Christ in his native village of Amersham, Berkshire, and he always said he owed his salvation to the prayers of his godly mother. Soon after his conversion his mind turned to China, and he spent some time in preparation at Mr. Berger's house in East Grinstead, which later on developed into Harley House. Disturbances in China changed his course, and for the next few years he laboured in the North of England. During this time he came in contact with Mr. Henry Groves, of Kendal, from whom he derived much spiritual help.

From Shap he removed, after much prayer, to Spain, and entered with all his heart into missionary work in Coruña, Vigo, Ferrol, Betanzos, etc., taking part with Messrs. Blamire, Wigstone, Chesterman, etc., in the opening up of Galicia to the Gospel. After his marriage to Miss Mary Martin, of Windermere, he continued to labour for the Lord among the Gallegos till 1888, when he removed to the Argentina. Working with his hands for a livelihood, he sought to preach the good news in his spare time.

In 1890 it was decided to start the Rosario Sailors' Home and Mission, and Mr. Spooner was asked to take charge. Thus the last four years of his life were spent in this work among the vessels that touch at Rosario from all parts of the world. He was well known on the river, both among captains and seamen, being loved and respected by all whom he came in contact with. The Rosario Sailors' Home under his charge has won a name among seamen of all nations, and some at least have passed from death unto life through the word there preached.

Feeling the strain of the work he came to Cordova, Spain, in November, 1894, for change, but not for rest. While with us he joined in the baptism of ten converts, and for two weeks he entered with great zeal into the work among the Spanish-speaking people. All day we visited together in the town, and on horseback through the surrounding camp, at night preaching the Gospel. He rejoiced at seeing such openings on every hand, and left Cordova with the hope of soon returning to devote all his time to the work; but on December 13, 1894, he was called away after a few days' illness. The same day his son Gershom passed away. His wife and five children sorrow, but not as those who have no hope, for they that sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him.

Cordova, Jan., 1895. W. Payne.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

"Christian Endeavour" states that at the Pennsylvania Convention the consecration address was delivered through the phonograph by Dr. Clark.

The C.E. Society at Salem Chapel, Longford, numbers between seventy and eighty members. A junior society has lately been formed with a membership of eighty.

The Upper Clapton Mission Band has been taking a week's mission at Lea Bridge Gardens. They had a lantern lecture on "Missionary Enterprises in Different Lands."

In Liberia, Endeavour has gained a strong foothold and is spreading rapidly. A society has been formed in connection with the Grange Mission, Johnsonville, and another among the students of Liberia College.

The Bristol (South) and District held its first united gathering recently. Mr. Owen Butler, district secretary, reported fifteen adult and two junior societies, with a membership of about 1000. The churches where these societies exist are already feeling their influence in increased spiritual power.

The Bradford and District Union held their fourth annual meeting in the Congregational Church, Lister Hills. There was a large attendance, including representatives from the societies and many well-known Sunday-school workers. Rev. T. Scowby, the President of the Union, occupied the chair. Mr. Hutchinson, the secretary, read the report, which stated that during the year fifteen new societies had joined the Union in Bradford.

The fifth quarterly convention in connection with the North-Eastern Union has been held at Salem Chapel, Newcastle-on-Tyne. The chair was occupied by Rev. C. Stanley, president of the union. Rev. J. Shaw, vice-president, gave an address on "Soul Winning." In the "Open Parliament," the topic of "The Relation of the Y.P.S.C.E. to Foreign Missions" was introduced by the president. Miss Lambert read a paper on "Junior Societies." A stimulating address on "Witnessing for Christ" was delivered by Rev. R. Stewart, M.A., Gateshead. This union now comprises seventy-six societies.

PERSONALIA.

Mrs. Amanda Smith has been holding Gospel services in Londonderry and Belfast, where her clear presentation of heavenly truths has met with much acceptance.

Dr. Robert Anderson is about to issue (through Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton) a fifth edition of his book, "The Coming Prince," with a new preface on the book of Daniel and the Higher Criticism.

Mr. Robert Chapman, of Barnstaple. This honoured and beloved servant of Christ caught last week a chill, and has been somewhat ill. Seeing he is in his ninety-third year, some anxiety was felt. He is now, however, reported as much better.

Mr. H. M. Matheson has been for fifty years an office-bearer at Hampstead Presbyterian Church. For a generation he has been convener of the Foreign Mission Committee, and has been actively associated with every important movement in connection with the Presbyterian Church for half a century. Outside his own denomination he has interested himself in efforts for the religious and social elevation of the people. His jubilee will be noticed at the coming meeting of Synod.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Rev. W. Bradbury is evangelising in New Zealand, and much interest has been manifested in Nelson and other parts.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has completed a mission at Pembroke Chapel, Bristol (Rev. Granville Sharp pastor), and during this week is engaged in similar work at Rotherham.

Ireland.—Gospel meetings have been held in Abbey-street Methodist Church, Dublin, by Rev. J. D. Brash, of Birmingham; in Youghal Methodist Church, by Rev. Alex. Abraham, of Schull, co. Cork; and in Bethany Presbyterian Church, Belfast, by Mr. Saml. Miller.

Bath City Mission.—Special meetings were conducted at the Stable-lane branch for ten days, by Mr. Henry Collins, of the Welcome Mission, Portsmouth (late of the Metropolitan Police). Notwithstanding the very severe weather the hall was crowded every night, and the workers had the joy of pointing inquirers to the Lamb of God after each meeting.

Thornwood, near Epping.—Successful mission work is carried on at the Wesleyan Chapel in this village. About three years ago it was almost extinct, but during a revival new life was infused, and several of the converts are now active workers. A fifteen days' mission has been held by Mr. Albinson, and the crowded audiences bore testimony to the interest in the mission and the stirring Gospel addresses.

B. B.

Sunderland.—A Gospel Mission has been held under the auspices of the B.W.T.A. by Miss Gorham, of Tonbridge. The weather was of the severest, which militated against very large audiences, but the attendance increased day by day, and much good resulted. The afternoon Bible readings were specially enjoyed. The last day was devoted to temperance. A large meeting was held in the evening, at which the Mayor presided, and many new members were gained to the Branch.

Falmouth.—Mr. E. P. Telford has conducted a fortnight's mission in the Baptist chapel with qualifying tokens of the Divine blessing. The services were preceded by much prayer on the part of the church. Towards the close of 1894 a day of prayer and waiting upon God was sustained. Every night of the mission the workers had the joy of leading anxious ones to the Saviour. Direct answers to prayer have been vouchsafed. Parents and teachers have rejoiced in the conversion of the young, and wives have seen their husbands coming out on the Lord's side. One young man surrendered to Jesus on his twentieth birthday, and on the same night were children at the age of ten and twelve, and men and women up to over sixty years, giving themselves to the Lord. The congregations were large, and many not in the habit of attending a place of worship have been induced to come to the services, and some have been saved.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following missions have been arranged. Prayer is desired for them:—Rev. W. Hay Aitken, March 16 to April 1, St. John's, Carisbrooke, I.W.; Rev. J. Stephen Barrass, March 9-14; Clarence-place Hall, Belfast; March 23 to April 1, St. Basil's, Deritend, Birmingham; Rev. W. Bryan-Brown, March 9-18, Langley-Burrell, Wilts; March 23 to April 1, Brierfield, Burnley; Rev. J. P. Cushing, March 16-26, Stone in Oxney, Kent; Rev. W. Hayton, March 9-18, Woodchurch, Ashford; Rev. S. Hooke, March 3-16, St. Cross, Homersfield; Rev. Swann Hurrell, March 18-24, Tregynon, Newtown, Mont.; March 25 to April 1, Manafon, Berriew, Mont.; Canon Lester, March 9-19, St. John's Woolwich; Rev. J. Morris, March 23 to April 8, Parish Church, Newhaven; Rev. James Stephens, March 23 to April 5, Lonan, Isle of Man.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. E. Campbell, formerly curate to Canon Fleming, has been offered the rectory of Workington.

Rev. A. J. Shields, a well-known Evangelical and formerly a C.M.S. missionary in India, has been appointed to Holy Trinity, Scarborough.

Rev. Henry Sutton, vicar of Holy Trinity, Bordesley, has accepted the vicarage of Aston, Birmingham, in succession to Dr. Knox, Bishop of Coventry.

Bishop Knight-Bruce, late of Mashonaland, having accepted the charge of Bovey Tracey, has been appointed by the Bishop of Exeter to act as Assistant-Bishop.

The Bishop of Llandaff has sustained bereavement in the sudden death of his wife, who will be much missed, more especially by the poor of the neighbourhood.

Rev. I. M. Spicer, of Laxey, Isle of Man, who has been appointed vicar of Malew, has done good work as a temperance advocate and an earnest and successful missioner.

The Bishop of Ripon addressed a large gathering of railway men on Tuesday week, at the North-Eastern Railway Goods Depot, Leeds, in connection with the Society for the Circulation of Pure Literature and Mission Work among Railway Men.

Rev. J. M. Austen, who has, in consequence of bad health, resigned the charge of Christ Church, Colne, which he has held for over twenty years, has promised to bear the entire cost of the erection of the new Sunday and day schools, £2000, and give the land.

Rev. H. G. Thwaites, who is preaching regularly in his own church, The Look Chapel, Harrow-road, announces a special series of sermons, April 7-12, on "The Imitation of Christ." His Wednesday addresses of "Lessons for Lent" are awakening much interest.

At St. Mary Aldermary, a course of addresses to men is being delivered on Friday evenings: March 8, Rev. H. Glover; 15, Rev. F. A. P. Shirreff; 22, Rev. H. D. Macnamara; 29, Rev. W. A. Corbett; April 5, Rev. R. R. Resker; 12, Rev. L. B. White, D.D.

The arrangements for Lent at Holy Trinity, Marylebone, are of a comprehensive character. The sermons by the rector will form a course on "The Christian's Example—Christ"; those on Wednesday evenings will be delivered by members of the Prophecy Investigation Society.

On each Friday in Lent, at a quarter past one, there is a short service with an address at St. Stephen, Coleman-street. The preachers announced are: March 8, Canon Elwyn; 15, Rev. A. J. Robinson; 22, Rev. G. R. Thornton; 29, Archdeacon Richardson, D.D.; April 5, Rev. J. H. Scott.

Rev. J. F. Kitto, vicar of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, announces that it has been determined to use the half-hour after Sunday evening service once or twice in each month in order to give information upon what is being done in the cause of Christianity and philanthropy in various parts of the Lord's vineyard.

A course of mid-day lectures on "Great Workers in the Reformation in England" are being delivered at St. Bartholomew's Church, Moorfields, on the Fridays in Lent, at 1.15 p.m. Rev. F. Relton delivered the first of the course last Friday, and the subsequent lecturers will be Revs. Professor Collins, Canon Mason, Archdeacon Sinclair, Canon Benham, and H. Gee.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Dr. Dale has been again laid aside, but is regaining strength.

Services to commemorate the 250th anniversary of Hatherlow Chapel are about to be held.

Rev. Dr. Brown, of Bedford, has started on a tour to Egypt. He will be absent six or eight weeks.

Rev. Josiah Foster has completed twenty-three years' pastorate at Victoria Docks Union Church.

At the centenary celebration of the London Missionary Society at Huddersfield £415 was promised.

Rev. W. Mottram, whose good work in South London is well known, has been very ill, but, it is hoped, is now recovering.

The University of Edinburgh has conferred on Rev. J. Guinness Rogers the degree of Doctor of Divinity, a distinction which he has well earned.

Rev. Vyrnwy Morgan, of York-road, Lambeth, has been confined to his bed with inflammation of the lungs. His little son is also seriously ill with rheumatic fever.

Principal Fairbairn is to visit the United States again next summer. In August he will deliver at Chautauqua a series of nine lectures on "Thought in the Nineteenth Century."

Rev. R. M. Davies, the venerable pastor of Hope Church, Oldham, who is in his eightieth year, has intimated his desire to retire from the active ministry this year, which is his fiftieth in the service of the church.

The Forward Movement which the Colonial Missionary Society has helped to initiate at Napier, New Zealand, promises to be most successful. The Gaiety Theatre, which holds 600 persons, has been secured for Sunday services.

At the recent annual meeting of the North-West District of the London Congregational Union, Mr. E. J. Physick retired from the office of president, which he had held for eleven years, and Rev. Dr. Leach was elected as his successor.

Islington Chapel, Upper-street, has celebrated the fifteenth anniversary of Rev. Robert Berry's settlement as pastor. During this period 897 members have been received into fellowship, sixty of whom were added last year. The present membership is 483.

Calls.—Rev. Arthur Hallock, late of Cape Town, to Laisterdyke, Bradford; Rev. A. S. Campbell, to Morecambe; Rev. J. M. Craven, of Dukinfield, to Ashton-under-Lyne (as co-pastor to Rev. T. Green); Rev. W. Riley, of Hyde, to Heckmondwike.

Resignations.—Rev. H. Crane, of Sedbergh; Rev. W. Rosling, of Clifton Park, Belfast.

BAPTIST.

Revs. E. Roberts and W. Pettman have conducted a mission at Sittingbourne Tabernacle.

Rev. T. Phillips, of Kettering, has been ordered to take an extended rest from pastoral work.

Rev. Thomas Lewis, of San Salvador, having again failed in health, is now on his way to England.

At Penge Tabernacle, eighty-one members were received last year, making the present membership 586.

Rev. C. Brown's church at Ferme Park, Hornsey, reports an increase of seventy-one members during the past year.

A six days' special mission has been held at the Greystone Bridge Chapel (a village near Launceston), by Rev. H. Smart (pastor), with encouraging results.

The work at the Tabernacle, Aldershot, is reported by Rev. E. Poole Connor as having been greatly blessed during the past year both among soldiers and civilians.

Rev. Dr. Booth, secretary of the Baptist Union, who is still very unwell, and has been absent from the Mission House for several weeks past, purposes making a short sojourn in Bournemouth.

Rev. W. C. Minifie, of Landsdown Chapel, Bournemouth, continues to attract large congregations to his Thursday night "Straight Talks." The subject last Thursday was "How the poor of London live."

The missionary meetings of the Nottingham Auxiliary were held last week. Revs. W. A. Wills, from China, H. R. Tregillus, from India, J. B. Myers, from the Mission House, and Mr. S. Williamson were the speakers.

Wynne-road Church, Brixton (Rev. Z. T. Dowen), reports a membership of 292, and good work, which, writes a correspondent, "is the more gratifying, as the pastor has been away three months during the year on account of ill-health."

Miss Angus is expected home from her deputation visit to India on behalf of the Zenana Mission in time for the annual meeting, which is to be held on April 24, in the King's Hall, Holborn Restaurant, when she will report upon the condition of the work.

The Young Men's Class connected with Park Chapel, Great Yarmouth, founded twenty-six years ago and conducted by the present Mayor (Mr. F. Arnold, J.P.), numbers 250 members, an increase of seventy-eight for the year. The class works a mission-hall in a poor district, and has organised an anti-gambling society with 100 members.

At Sarratt, Herts, the mission work under the Regent's Park College Preaching Station Society has outgrown its accommodation. The congregations every Sunday evening are crowded, and every department of the work is vigorous and healthy. During the past year sixteen have been received into fellowship by baptism, ten of whom were young men. A new chapel is to be built.

Calls.—Rev. W. A. Mursell, of St. Michael's, Coventry, to Blackburn; Rev. Owen Campbell, of Newport, to Haverfordwest; Rev. R. B. Jones, of Berthwyd, to Llanelly; Rev. J. M. G. Owen, of Southampton, to Hagley-road, Birmingham (accepted).

Resignation.—Rev. S. Jones, of Brecon.

METHODIST.

Rev. T. Waugh has held a successful mission at Ryde.

Two Wesleyan chapels have been burned down—Strensall (York) and Winlaton (Gateshead).

The new chapel and Sunday-schools on the London-road, Brighton, are to be opened this month by Dr. Newman Hall.

The annual report and statement of the accounts of Bethesda Chapel, Elland, show a remarkable enterprise and generous giving in the midst of a crushing debt.

The London Primitive Methodist Council have decided to hold a day's services in the Stoke Newington Chapel on Tuesday, April 4, for quiet fellowship with God and the deepening of the spiritual life.

Burnley was visited last week by a deputation representing the Army and Navy work of the Methodist Church, and consisting of Rev. R. W. Allen, Mr. W. J. Anstey, R.N., and Sergeant Goodwin, 6th Dragoon Guards, who held capital services.

Rev. G. H. Elvidge, of Sheffield, who is temporarily laid aside from the active ministry by enfeebled health, has determined to maintain a native missionary in China. Dr. Stacey, son of the late Rev. Dr. Stacey, is also supporting a native preacher.

The report of the Birmingham Mission is a telling record of work done during the last year. All the agencies are in a flourishing condition. The aggregate membership is 1152. Something like 500 of these are actively engaged in special work. It is reported that there are 1800 children connected with the Sunday-schools, and in addition to these there are Sunday evening services for children, attended by at least 500.

The farewell meeting, held on Friday week in Lower Exeter Hall, to bid God-speed to missionaries just leaving England for foreign fields of service, was a great success. Rev. F. Pickering and his wife, with Rev. W. Chapman, starting for the Zambesi, were assured of the prayerful sympathy of the meeting. Rev. Thomas and Mrs. Stones were commended to the care of the Almighty in going to their distant sphere of service at Banni, West Africa.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Stratford Presbyterian Church reports 502 members, an increase of 78 during the past year.

The annual report of the Willesden Presbyterian Church records cheering progress. 117 have been added to the roll in the past year. The membership is now 404.

The interest on the £30,000 bequeathed by the late Mr. D. Berry to the Presbyterian Church of New South Wales, has now become available for distribution by the Sustentation Fund committee.

Rev. James Lamont, formerly of Portsmouth, is the Moderator-elect of the General Assembly in New South Wales. He has done good service at East Maitland, and has been recently called to a new charge near Sydney.

At the annual meeting of St. George's Brondesbury, the reports showed a considerable advance. The membership had made a net gain of 30, while a roll of 35 had also been formed in the mission hall, where a student missionary and a lady missionary are at work.

The annual meeting of the St. John's Church was largely attended, and accompanied by much interest. The reports rendered were of the most encouraging character. Dr. Monro Gibson, who presided, gave an animated address. Amongst other speakers were Drs. G. D. Matthews, Robertson Nicoll, and Sir George Bruce.

At the annual meeting of St. James's, Wood Green, addresses were given by Revs. D. Macrae, W. Armstrong, and W. Winston Haines, of the Wood Green Baptist Church. The Manual shows that during the year seventy-two members had been added, and that fifty-eight had removed, leaving a total membership of 426.

Calls.—Rev. J. Malcolm, of Pusley, to Glencaple, Dumfries; Rev. W. Johnston, of Edinburgh, to Loanhead; Rev. S. G. McLennan, of Stonehaven, to Sherbrooke, Glasgow.

Resignation.—Rev. G. J. Goodman, of Walker-on-Tyne.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Since the Salvation Army grew in numbers the leaders have repeatedly tried to obtain permits for open-air meetings in New York. The mayors have granted permits for a few large meetings, but general permits have been refused. Last week a special request was made to Mayor Strong, who granted a permit to conduct services outdoors at will.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Sheffield, on 28th ult., Mr. Adam Wood, a successful educationalist, teacher of a good Bible-class, and an influential leader among the Congregationalists.—At his residence in London, on 25th ult., Lord Aberdare, aged seventy-nine, well known as a philanthropist, temperance, and social leader.—At Salva, Pem., Rev. William Owen, aged eighty-two, for many years minister at Middle Mill Chapel.—At Oaklands, Surbiton Hill, Mr. Thomas Wray, for over twenty years a helper in Christian work.—At Wells, Norfolk, Mr. R. L. Newton, aged seventy, a true follower of Christ.—At Helston, Cornwall, aged seventy-four, Mrs. C. Beringer, who for nearly sixty years had served the Lord.—At Melbourne, Rev. J. F. Macintosh, Free Church minister of Logie Easter, who was on a voyage for his health.—At Trowbridge, Mr. John Phillips, for fifty years a Sunday-school worker and a winner of souls.—At Peckham, on 21st ult., aged ninety-nine, Mrs. Moyle, widow of a former pastor at Rye-lane.—At Thurgoland, Mr. John Dyson, J.P., aged eighty-one, a leading man in Methodism, and a liberal giver.—At Blandford, suddenly, in his study, Rev. S. Wesley Lawton, a useful Wesleyan minister.—At Bury St. Edmunds Mr. F. H. Dight, aged sixty-six, an influential Christian worker.—At Swaffham Prior, on 25th ult. Mrs. T. Preston, wife of the vicar of the parish, and herself a loved worker.—At the Cloisters, Westminster, on 26th ult., Precentor Flood Jones, connected with the Abbey for thirty-eight years; at Killylen, co. Armagh, Rev. Wm. Waddell, Presbyterian minister; at Rostrevor, Rev. David Nevin, chaplain Royal Navy; at Kingstown, Rev. W. J. Mulloy, Prebendary of Ballysonnan, co. Kildare; at Mullabrack, Helen, widow of the late Rev. J. P. Flavell, rector of Mullabrack, co. Armagh.

Appeals.

The Brothers T. and J. Young, superintendents of the Working Men's Mission, Collingwood-street, New-cut, appeal on behalf of the sick and destitute poor. Between 500 and 600 cases have been visited and relieved by gifts of coal, bread and butter, groceries, &c. Many hundreds of meals are supplied weekly at a nominal charge; the poverty and destitution are terrible. Gifts of clothing, boots, &c., gratefully received at 33, Nelson-square, Blackfriars-road.

Notices.

Several correspondents have kindly pointed out to us that the lines, "This is the bud of being," etc., are from Young's "Night Thoughts," and will be found about 120 lines into the book. The quotation, as given last week by an inquiring correspondent, was in some respects incorrect.

Applicants for Tracts.—Sergt. Macdonald, The Barracks, Youghal; F. M. Tuckett, 47, Ossington-street, Bayswater-road, W.; C. R. Miller, 14, Ansdell road, Peckham, S.E.; W. E. A PLEA FOR THE FACTORY GIRL.

Will some who have beautiful gardens full of the lovely spring blossoms we all love to see, peeping up their sweet heads in the warm sunny days we are beginning to look forward to, remember the poor factory girl who has so little to brighten her hard, toilsome life, and spare some of "God's blossoms" for our Flower Mission among the London factory girls, many of whom have never seen the country? If some of my readers could see the pleasure these little bunches of flowers and grasses give, they would not grudge the trouble of gathering and tying them into small bunches and sending by rail or post. Will any willing to help write to Mrs. Whipple, hon. sec., Flower Mission, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, W.?

To Settlers in New Zealand.—Mr. W. H. Franks, 1, Durham-place, Kingstown, Dublin, would be glad to hear of settlers in New Zealand wishing to have back numbers of The Christian, The War Cry, and other Christian papers. He will supply any such who send him their names and address.

Postage of Papers to China.—Mr. R. J. Felgate, of the China Inland Mission Training Home, Gan-King, thanks the friend who kindly sends him The Christian week by week to Shanghai. He adds, for the information of others, as well as his unknown friend, that the postage is a penny. When short stamped, papers and letters are subject to a tax, which occasions considerable trouble.—Mr. T. J. Arnold, of Wuhu, also sends his thanks, and asks that the friend who sends him The Christian so regularly will kindly address it in future to T. J. Arnold, Wuhu, China, care of Shanghai Local Post.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For Sunday evening lantern service in Peckham Varieties Hall, Camberwell, by Mr. A. H. Roe.—For Mr. Matthew Burnett's mission to Erith and Fareham, from the 11th to 15th.—Also for a mission in Middlesbrough, March 17-24.—For the work of the Christian Men's Union Gospel Mission, Somers Town, and for a special mission to be held March 10 to 18.—For much blessing on a mission conducted by Mr. Albinson at Cubitt Town.—For a convention for Christian Tamils, being held this week in Travancore.—A daughter for the salvation of her parents given to drink.—For a young man dangerously ill at McGill University, Montreal, that he may be restored to health if it be God's will.—That good may result from Mr. Lane's Mission in Keswick, to commence March 23.—For a mission at Lower Town, near Kelston, Cornwall, by G. W. Clegg.

PRAISE.—For blessing given on a fifteen days' mission at Thornwood, near Epping.

DEAR READER OF "THE CHRISTIAN,"

Will you for one week co-operate with me, and with the large band of Christian workers now interested in child-rescue, in this proposed effort? Self-denial in one form or another lies at the very root and centre of all Christian endeavour. I believe that systematic Self-Denial is powerful almost beyond belief in furthering the Kingdom of our Lord on earth. It has preached the Gospel to heathen millions; it has maintained and extended the Church of Christ; it has worked miracles in matters social, philanthropic, educational, religious; it has indeed pioneered the world in all things great and noble and of good report. Will you all, therefore, by God's help, join with me to show what it can now do in the cause of the Waif Children of our Slums.

Yours very sincerely in the service of the Master among His poor,

Thos. J. Barnardo.

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

March, 1895.

SELF-DENIAL

WHAT CAN YOU GIVE UP for Christ's Sake during the Week?

THE A B C OF SELF-DENIAL.

AMUSEMENTS.—Golf, sport, shooting, boating, billiards, fishing, games, a holiday trip shortened or given up, money saved in material, refreshments, and fares.

BED.—Time saved. One hour morning and night make a whole day in the week, which can be devoted to this work.

COMFORTS.—'Bus and tram rides, 3rd class instead of 2nd or 1st, tobacco.

DRESS.—Ribbons, gloves, ties, a hat or dress. Make the old one last double the time, and give the money at once.

ENTERTAINMENTS.—Dinner party, birthday treat, concerts.

FOOD.—One week of moderate fare, with no luxuries. Jam, butter, sugar, cream, pudding, fruit, entrées, sweets, wines, given up for a week.

GIFTS.—Birthday presents, tips, gratuities, unexpected extras, dedicated in part or entirely to God.

HOBBIES.—Photography, china, butterflies, stamps, bric-à-brac. Devote the money you usually spend in a week.

JEWELS.—Some article you care for given up. Any fresh presents this week received devoted to the children, or, if kept, the price paid.

KINDNESS TO ALL under every trying circumstance.

LITERATURE.—Papers, weekly journals, magazines, books, and music, not purchased and money put in box or purse, etc., etc., etc.

COMMANDS.

"If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself."—Luke ix. 23.

"Give ye them to eat."—Matt. xiv. 16.

"Sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor."—Mark x. 21.

"Give, and it shall be given you. . . With the same measure that ye meet withal it shall be measured to you again."—Luke vi. 38.

WEEK,

"I gave My life for thee,
My precious blood I shed,
That thou might ransom'd be,
And rescued from the dead.
I gave My Life for THEE,
What wilt thou give for ME?"

F. R. Havergal.

A STORY ABOUT SELF-DENIAL.

"And Jesus sat over against the treasury, and beheld how the people cast money into the treasury: and many that were rich cast in much. And there came a certain poor widow, and she threw in two mites, which make a farthing. And He called unto Him His disciples, and saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, That this poor widow hath cast more in, than all they which hav cast into the treasury: for all they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living."

FROM 10TH TO 17TH MARCH, 1895.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, MARCH 4, 1895.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

THE Ipswich B.W.T.A. has enrolled 153 new members. The total membership is 735.

The Temperance Record states that the recent Gospel Temperance Mission in Sheffield added over 3000 new recruits to the Temperance Army.

At Aylesbury a six days' lantern mission has been the means of adding largely to the number of abstainers in connection with the Aylesbury and Walton branches of the C.E.T.S.

Temperance work in Norway and Sweden is rapidly advancing. The National Total Abstinence Society at its annual meeting reported a membership of over 100,000. The Norse Parliament voted 12,000 kroner in aid of the work.

The profits of licensed business were revealed recently at Plymouth, when the premises of a wine and spirit merchant were taken by the Corporation for street improvements. The trader claimed £4597 as compensation for disturbance, but the jury awarded him about one-third of that amount. The claimant put his average profit at 33 per cent.

Mr. John Dickinson, Mayor of Keighley, speaking at a recent Rechabite Festival, said he often looked back to see what had become of the young men he had known in his youth, and he was sorry to say that many of them had gone wrong, and it was because they had given way to drink. His advice to the young was, "Stick to the principles of abstinence, for they are good."

An important question affecting volunteers has just been settled at Lancaster. At a camp canteen four volunteers were fined for selling drink without a licence, and it was proved in evidence that civilians and even women had been freely supplied with liquor. The defence raised was (1) A licence is not required for a regimental canteen; (2) The canteen was a club, and no licence was therefore necessary. The magistrate, however, convicted.

In Guernsey, under the leadership of Rev. A. J. T. Le Gros, a local Vigilance Society was formed for the purpose of improving the licensing laws and reducing the number of licensed houses. After persistent agitation the last local Court passed more stringent laws, and the immediate effect has been the closing of no less than twenty-two public-houses. The effort of the publicans to obtain the repeal of Sunday Closing has signally failed.

The opening of Parliament has led to the introduction of several Bills to regulate the sale of alcohol. Veto Bills for England, Scotland, and Ireland have been read a first time. Mr. Roberts proposes to amend the Welsh Sunday-closing Act, and Mr. T. W. Russell wishes to close public-houses in Ireland at an earlier hour on Saturday evening, and also to extend the benefit of Sunday-closing to the five exempted cities. The question of "tied-houses" is dealt with in a Bill introduced by Mr. William Allen and Mr. Charles Wilson, father of the English Sunday Closing Bill. In addition to these there is the Government measure which occupied a prominent place in the Queen's Speech.

The annual meeting of the Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Association was held on Monday last week in the Lord Mayor's Parlour, Town Hall, Manchester, The Lady Mayoress presided. The report stated that the movement for getting matrons appointed for the central police stations had been actively supported. It had not yet come into operation, but hopes were entertained that it soon would. The annual report of the Manchester Police Court Mission said the results were such as to fill the minds of the committee with gratitude, and with a firmer conviction of the soundness of the methods employed. During the year 160 women and girls had been restored to parents or friends. The report of the Salford Police Court Mission showed that 785 women had been dealt with by the Society's Missionary, 442 of whom signed the pledge; 250 were taken from the Court, and either restored to friends or placed in homes, and 100 were sent to relatives, residing in thirty-three different towns, and 145 cases had been placed in homes and workhouses.

CHRIST's was the word that spake it;
He took the bread and brake it;
And what that word doth make it,
That I believe, and take it.

CENTENARY
LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Head Quarters: 14, Blomfield-street, E.C.

This Society, founded in September, 1795, by a number of Episcopalians, Presbyterians, and Congregationalists, on a broad and catholic basis, from which it has never departed, is about to celebrate the completion of its

among the heathen and unenlightened races of the earth.

The Society has had the honour of sending out more than a THOUSAND MISSIONARIES, not reckoning their wives, among them such distinguished men as John Williams, Moffat, Livingstone, Morrison (the first Protestant Missionary to China), Medhurst, Ellis, Mullens, Gilmour, of Mongolia, and Dr. Mackenzie, of Tientsin. In pioneering work in lands little known, in translating the Bible (some forty versions of which in whole or in part have profited by their labours), in the preparation of Christian literature and educational manuals, the Society's representatives have always occupied an honourable place, while their contributions to science have been generously acknowledged by scientific men.

Its Chief FIELDS OF LABOUR are:—China, from twelve chief centres; North India, the Madras Presidency, and Travancore; Madagascar; South Africa; Central Africa; West Indies; Polynesia and New Guinea.

It has on ITS PRESENT STAFF 258 missionaries, 17 of whom are qualified medical missionaries; 1476 native ordained pastors and evangelists; over 12,000 other native helpers; 94,192 church members; 404,795 native adherents; 1891 schools; 125,984 scholars; 10 hospitals, in which 98,992 patients were treated during 1893.

Never did the Society possess a stronger, abler, or more devoted band of agents than to-day; never had it such openings for work or such promise of success as now. Money is the great need. "The possibilities of going forward are simply limited by the means of going forward."

A Centenary Fund of £100,000 has been opened. £43,000 of which has already been promised. Donations are earnestly solicited, and may be made payable to the Rev. A. N. JOHNSON, M.A., 14, Blomfield-street, London, E.C.

THE LONDON ASSOCIATION
IN AID OF MORAVIAN MISSIONS
EARNESTLY APPEALS FOR FUNDS.

The two New Missions (E. C. Africa and N. Queensland)—the fresh openings in Central America, Surinam, Alaska, and South Africa—are only SOME of many PRESSING NEEDS.

For the New Work among Lepers in Dutch Guiana (involving Church, House, Missionary, and Staff of Nurses), and for the New Medical Missionary Training Fund, prompt and generous help is required.

Rev. W. WETTON COX, Clerical Sec.,
Office, 2, Furnival's Inn, London, E.C.

N.B.—ONE IN SIXTY Members of this devoted little Church is a Missionary; and so richly is their work blessed, that the converts number over 92,000, or more than Three Times as many as the Parent Church!

There are no fewer than 400 Missionaries in the field, and the whole expenditure, of which more than half is contributed by the Native Churches, is only £72,000.

PITY THE CHILDREN!

Our Mission at Bow Common is in the midst of the poor child match-box makers, about whom a writer has said: "In many cases the lives of these children is a veritable slavery. They are set to work, and girls of six and seven are kept at it till past midnight. Sometimes I've said to the mothers, 'Oh, let the poor heavy-eyed lamb go to bed, and I'll take her place for a bit." Free meals and other help is given, to continue which contributions would be gratefully received by Mrs. F. A. BEVAN, 59, Prince's Gate, S.W.; or the Director, N.E. London Gospel Missions, WILLIAM CHORLEY, 6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, London, N.; or may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN. Parcels to Mrs. DAVIS, 205, Devon's-road, Bow Common, E.

THE Y.M.C.A.

Dr. Karl Fries, secretary of the Swedish National Committee, writes that three young men have just devoted themselves to Association work in Sweden.

Dr. Braun, preacher to the Court of Stuttgart, has accepted the functions of president of the Southern Alliance of German Y.M.C.A.'s as successor of the regretted Dean F. Reiff.

Owing to the efforts of Mr. de Tardy, who attended the Jubilee conference in London, a national alliance of the Young Men's Christian Association in Austria has become practicable.

In Oporto (Portugal) there has just been founded a Young Men's Christian Association under the name of "Uniao Christa da Mocidade Portugueza." Its president is Mr. Alfredo Henrique da Silva. This is the first Portuguese Y.M.C.A.

The hon. secretary of the Y.M.C.A. Bible Reading Union, Mr. Horace B. Wilson (Birmingham), reported that the Union was making good headway amongst the Associations at home and abroad, and that upon the advice of Dr. Baedeker he was contemplating a tour on the Continent in its interests.

According to the information which has reached the Central International committee at Geneva, the Y.M.C.A. week of prayer was well observed everywhere. In many Associations the meetings were, by the grace of God, the occasion of revivals, and it seems there was in this respect a marked progress on preceding years.

The fusion of the different "Circoli" in Rome has been effected at last. The new Association bears the title of "Associazione della Giovontu Christiana." A committee has been elected and comprises members of various denominations. The president is Mr. Ernesto Giampicooli, of the Waldensian Church. The Association already counts more than fifty members on the roll.

Weekly visits are paid by the members of the Ramsgate Association to the neighbouring town of Broadstairs. A hall is hired and meetings held, preceded by an open air gathering. The work at the Ramsgate Association itself is very encouraging, the recent mission of Mr. W. R. Lane having given a real stimulus to the members, amongst whom much blessing has followed.

The anniversary of the Sheffield Y.M.C.A. was celebrated on Thursday, February 28, by two large gatherings, the first in the afternoon in the Associated Hall and the second in the evening in the Albert Hall. At the former Ven. Archdeacon Favell was in the chair; in the evening Alderman H.H. Bemrose, of Derby, presided. Notwithstanding the fact that his health had suffered considerably in the past few months, the general secretary, Mr. Walter Jervis, was enabled to present an excellent report.

Considerable enthusiasm was manifested at the annual meeting of the Redruth Association, held on Tuesday, February 26. The Druids Hall was well filled. Mr. S. Launder occupied the chair. Excellent work was reported in connection with the Bible and other classes. Membership 153. Practical addresses were delivered by Rev. B. Carvosso Spencer, Mr. Geo. J. Smith, J.P., and Mr. W. H. Roberts. A nonconformist minister publicly testified that five young men had been brought to Christ, and introduced to the church with which he laboured, through the Y.M.C.A., and that four had now become preachers of the Gospel.

The Stockholm Y.M.C.A. holds its tenth anniversary on the 21st of March. In the past year the Association, speaking only of the central branch, has received 332 new members, and has experienced much spiritual blessing. The building fund, to which the King has contributed, now amounts to 130,000 kr. (£7800). This does not include a diamond brooch lately given to the fund by the Prince and Princess O. Bernadotte. It formerly belonged to the King's sister, H.R.H. Princess Eugenie, who gave nearly all her jewels except this one for charitable purposes, or, as she sweetly expressed it herself, "to win jewels for the Master's crown."

The Bishop of Exeter, speaking at a meeting recently held at Exeter, at which a Diocesan Council was formed of the C.E.Y.M.S., expressed the highest admiration for the work done by the Young Men's Christian Association, which was undenominational. He believed England owed a great debt of gratitude to that society. Canon Edmonds, one of the speakers, said he did not suppose he should ever have been a clergyman if it had not been for the influence of the London Y.M.C.A., and both he and the Mayor declared that this new movement was undertaken in no spirit of antagonism to the association, but rather in entire friendliness with it.

On the last day of 1894, the general secretary of the New York Y.M.C.A.'s received by messenger, from a source which he cannot trace, an envelope. Within, folded in a half sheet of note paper, was a 500 dollar bill. Without this unexpected gift the accounts would have shown a deficit; by its aid the year's balance-sheet was freed from debt. The present membership in New York is 7582. The total attendance at the various branches for all purposes in 1894 reached an average of ever 5000 daily. The Associations have made steadier progress, and have been practically helpful to a larger number of young men in the city, than in any former year of their history.

Mr. J. J. Virgo, of Adelaide, writes:—"Since my return from London I have visited nearly all the Associations in Australia and New Zealand, and reported on the Jubilee meetings. The need of a travelling secretary is very apparent, and I hope the time is not far distant when such an appointment is made. In Sydney (N.S.W.) the leading features of the work continue to be the Sunday night meeting and the gymnasium. In Adelaide (S.A.) we are calling for tenders for a new gymnasium. The theatre services, now in their eighth year, attract large crowds every Sunday evening. We have four branches in this colony, and all are valuable adjuncts. Melbourne (Victoria) has unfortunately had to give up its fine building, and is commencing again in smaller premises. Perth (W.A.) is doing very useful work although only in its third year. They contemplate building a large gymnasium next year. Hobart (Tasmania) and Brisbane (Queensland) are pegging away against considerable difficulties. Newcastle (N.S.W.) has just opened new premises and is doing a useful work. Australia offers a splendid field for Y.M.C.A. work."

THE Y.W.C.A.

FLOWER MISSION.

The work of the Y.W.C.A. Flower Mission has been a great means of entering into the daily life of our working girls and reaching those untouched by other organisations. The flowers speak to them of Divine and human love and care. The word spoken has not been in vain, and the special text accompanying the bunch of flowers has often had a God-sent message for a sad and weary heart. Again and again faces have been seen to brighten with genuine pleasure at the sight of the flowers. Some of the large West End houses have been closed to the visitors, causing great disappointmen to the employées, who looked forward to the flowers week by week. Other houses have been opened. Last year between 7000 and 8000 bunches were distributed. Helpers are much needed to come and arrange the flowers at 316, Regent-street every Wednesday morning, from March to November; also more friends who will send text cards. Wild flowers are appreciated equally with cultivated ones. At Belgravia, the City, Brixton, and Islington, the work is carried on. Superintendents of these institutes will be thankful for larger supplies of flowers and texts. Some in the country could help by occasionally spending their half holidays in the fields and woods gathering flowers for their less-favoured sisters, who rarely have an opportunity of gathering them for themselves. Tracts for distribution would also be welcomed. Baskets of flowers should be sent to 316, Regent-street, to arrive on Wednesday morning. Miss J. J. Weatherley, hon. secretary, 51, Gordon-square, W.C., will be glad to answer inquiries.

BRIEF NOTES.

At Aberfeldy, with the aid of the Hon. Gertrude Kinnaird, a Y.W.C.A. has been formed, and promises be very helpful to the young women of the town.

At the Cloudesley Institute, 34, Barnsbury-street, the recent meetings for prayer were marked by great fervour and heartiness. An address by Rev. J. A. Faithful on the "Rest of Faith" was helpful to many.

Miss Reynolds is now visiting the various countries of Europe with a view to forming a World's Committee. Germany was the first country visited, and there Miss Reynolds found much interesting work going on in Dusseldorf, Essen, and Berlin.

The last of the series of weekly mission services at the Central Institute, 316, Regent-street, will be held on 13th inst., when Col. Macgregor will give the address. Miss Wingate will conclude her "Travel Talks" on Tuesday, 12th, and on the 19th the girls' "At Homes" will be resumed. Pleasant Saturday afternoons for young ladies in business are continued every week from 4 to 7 p.m.

The thirteenth annual report of the Upper Norwood and West Dulwich Branch shows that much good work has been done, under the superintendence of Miss Ellis and Miss Bamber, during the past year. "First Aid" lectures by Dr. Eccles were followed by a course on nursing, and a number of certificates were gained in each subject. Active interest is taken in foreign missions; £2 11s. was raised for work in Sierra Leone, £3 0s. 9d. for China, and £2 9s. 5d. for the C.E.Z.M. at Jandiala. There are many signs of blessing. The Bible-classes have been larger, and the prayer-meeting has been restarted. The rooms are at 3, Gipsy-hill.

"We cordially recommend the volume to all Christian people and to preachers especially. When a man has, by God's blessing, done a good work he ought not to refrain from telling it. Nothing helps the honest intelligent worker much more than a simple and unaffected record of this kind."—Preachers' Magazine.

WORKS ON ROMANISM.

The Catacombs at Rome.

Their Contents and Teachings.

By the late BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S.

Fourth Edition. Revised and Improved.

Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.
Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

A Vindication of Pure and Primitive Christianity; and an Exposure of the Corruptions of Romanism; Derived from the Sepulchral Remains of the Early Christians. With many Illustrations.

The Dean of Achonry says:—
"'The Catacombs at Rome' is one of the most useful books I know: as showing the purity and simplicity of the early Church at Rome; and exposing the spurious Christianity of the modern Church at Rome, and the corruptions and incrustations by which she has hidden or destroyed the pure faith of the New Testament."

Foxe's Book of Martyrs.

MORGAN AND SCOTT'S ILLUSTRATED EDITION.

A complete and authentic account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of early Christian and Protestant Martyrs in all parts of the world.

Complete in One Vol. Cloth bevelled boards, 10s. 6d.
Cloth bevelled boards, gilt edges, 12s. 6d.

NEW CHEAP EDITION FOR DISTRIBUTION.

Romanism and the Reformation.

By Dr. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

Cloth boards, 1s. 6d. net.; Tinted Covers, 1s. net.
Postage 3d. extra.

This work, originally published at 5s., has been reproduced in a cheap form for wide distribution. It presents, in a strong and simple way, an important Scriptural basis for opposing Romish and Ritualistic doctrines and practices.

BY ELIZA RICHARDSON.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

THE VEIL LIFTED; or, The Romance and Reality of Convent Life.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE OF ROMAN CATHOLICISM; With Incidents of Convent Life.

1s. per dozen; 7s. 6d. per 100.

THE CONFESSIONAL; A Personal Narrative. Neatly printed in red and black; suitable for enclosing in a square envelope.

"If our young people could be induced to read Mrs. Richardson's description of conventual life, its physical sufferings and privations, its fearful monotony, and its hopeless outlook, something of the romantic illusion which attracts youth to the Romish Church would certainly be destroyed."—Literary World.

CALLS TO CHRIST,

A Series of Gospel Addresses.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.

"Force and freshness are eminently the characteristics of these 'Calls to Christ'; they are also brief to a proverb, and hence they may be of great service to an earnest evangelist who knows how to use another man's thoughts. . . . But for all readers this collection of addresses contains admirable instruction, counsel, and stimulus."

GOD-SENT MISSIONARIES.—The South African Pioneer says:—"This is the demand in the field today. Leaving Australia for China, a young missionary said she did not go because of its romance, but because God had called her. For ever perish the idea of romance! There is required a deeper motive than that. The strain upon one in the heathen world would snap such a tie. Face to face with the hoary, mighty religions of India, the Rev. Ebenezer Jenkins, Wesleyan missionary, tells us how at first his faith well-nigh gave way. But after the testing, the very adverse circumstances, the difficulties, the isolation that threw him on God, made him a more zealous missionary than he had been in the flush of his first zeal at home. Not that we are to think it is all difficulty here. No, there is a joy in isolation and obscurity that must be the 'well of water within' of which the Saviour spoke. You see this in the letters of our missionaries from Swazieland, who say their beehive hut is irradiated with the presence of Jesus."

CONSUMPTION, AND ALL CHEST DISEASES.

INTERVIEWS WITH OLD PATIENTS, AND NEW CASES.

By MR. CONGREVE'S COMMISSIONER.

EIGHTY-FIFTH INTERVIEW,

With Mr. R. W. FRANCIS, of Bishop's Castle, Salop.
ONE LUNG DISEASED.

Whose Case appeared in the weekly journals of October, 1890.

Mr. Francis, although still a young man, has led a useful life, and devoted himself to the good of his fellow-men. As a Primitive Methodist local preacher he is in great request, and is often called upon to conduct services in the neighbourhood in which he lives.

When I called upon him recently at his place of business at Bishop's Castle, I found him in good health and very willing to give me his experience of Mr. Congreve's treatment in his own case.

From the statement of the case already published, it appears that Mr. Francis' condition at one time was most serious. He had caught a severe cold; the cough was distressing, and the other symptoms included great decline of strength, palpitations, difficult breathing, and pain in the region of the left lung. The doctor reported that one lung was diseased. As he made no progress he applied to Mr. Congreve for advice and medicine, being recommended by Mr. Leaver, a baker in the same town, an old patient.

"I was very bad when I wrote to Mr. Congreve first in 1888. I had been under medical treatment for some months but had been getting weaker all the time. However, under Mr. Congreve's care I soon began to mend. I continued the use of the remedies for six months, and quite recovered."

"I see by a letter of yours, written early in 1890, you say 'I was unable to follow my trade or to do duty as a P. M. local preacher when appointed to any work, but I have been fully restored under your kind treatment, and under the Divine blessing I have been saved from an early grave.' Does that fairly represent your sentiments, now, Mr. Francis?"

"Yes; my health has been good ever since, and although since then I have had an attack of influenza, my chest has kept all right. As I said in that letter, I had been compelled to give up preaching; now I do a lot of it, and often walk as much as twelve miles to my appointments and think nothing of it."

"Do you mind my publishing what you have told me?"

"Not at all. I consider it my duty to do all I can to make known all Mr. Congreve has done for me."

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S work on CONSUMPTION, &c., in which are detailed THE CAUSES, SYMPTOMS, PROGRESS, AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF THIS SCOURGE OF ENGLAND.—WITH NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED CASES OF CURE. ALSO ON COUGH, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c., &c. The Book will be sent, post free, for ONE SHILLING by the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

A NEW WORK BY

ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D.

Uniform with "The Heart of the Gospel," "The Heights of the Gospel," and "Evangelistic Work," entitled

"LIFE-POWER;"

Or, Character, Culture, and Conduct.

"A happy book, dealing in Dr. Pierson's best vein with such themes as 'The Elements and Secrets of Power,' 'The Power of a Presiding Purpose,' 'The Use and Abuse of Books,' 'The Genius of Industry,' 'The Ethics of Amusement,' and 'The Inspiration of Ideals.' The style is natural, easy, and sympathetic, while the marks of wide reading are on every page. Throughout the work the writer thinks in the sunlight—which is enough to say that this handsomely-got-up book is bound to stimulate both old and young."—The Presbyterian.

AND

SPITALFIELDS.

Who will help the Sick, the Aged, and Struggling Widows with young families?

Among the 3,000 poor children and people identified with this Mission are many suffering very much from want. As the visitors pay upwards of 40,000 visits to the homes of the poor every year, they have special knowledge of the deserving. The whole of the Officers and 120 Teachers and Workers give their services gratuitously.

Contributions will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Hon. Superintendent, CHARLES MONTAGUE, 4, Bedford Square, E., or may be sent to the Office of "The Christian." Bankers, BARCLAY & Co., 54, Lombard Street.

Notes and Comments.

We have sometimes had to express strong disagreement with The Daily Telegraph in its attitude towards high moral issues. We are the more glad, therefore, to pay a tribute to the public service it is now rendering in its special correspondence from Armenia. The truly fearful details of nameless outrage and heartless massacre, vouched for by this correspondent, must dispel any lingering hope that the original reports were overdrawn. The Turkish authorities on the spot seem to be straining every nerve to keep the black truth from becoming known; but the delegates of other Powers will seriously fail in their duty if such iniquities are not fully revealed and made impossible in the future.

There are few living men better qualified to write about Indian missions than Bishop Thoburn, of the American Methodist Episcopal Mission, Calcutta. For more than a generation he has taken a leading part in aggressive missionary effort in that vast country, and has seen many wonderful advances in the spread of Christianity among the peoples of India and Malaysia. He lately wrote a little book, LIGHT IN THE EAST, in which he lucidly describes this advance, especially with reference to the American Mission. A more encouraging record of Gospel triumphs it would be difficult to find. A number of copies have been put into our hands for sale (at one shilling each), and we shall be glad if our readers will help in circulating this delightful story of breaking light in the far East. The book has a fine portrait of the author.

A lady missionary of the C.M.S. in Palestine writes home to The Gleaner to correct the thoughts of those who regard Palestine as an unfruitful field of labour. She states that the people themselves witness to improvement, saying how different it was twenty-five or thirty years ago, when no one could read or write, and hardly a Bible was to be found anywhere; whereas now a large proportion of the men can read, and in the towns many women also; and any one, if he wants it, can get a Bible for a small sum. The people where she lives used to shoot at each other from their houses; now persons feel as safe as in England. She admits the absence of the striking results which are sometimes to be seen in India and China, and attributes this to the difficulty there is in dealing with persons who hold a religion which has much in common with our own faith. Her chief trouble is the lukewarm state of the Church—the almost universal trouble. She, however, has made a good defence, if any was needed.

From Medical Missions at Home and Abroad we learn that the number of medical missionaries holding British degrees or diplomas is 202, a net gain of seventeen on last year. The war in China has kept back several accepted men, or the number would have been somewhat larger. In the three kingdoms there are over 26,000 medical men, so that missions get less than one per cent. of that number. Besides the 26,000 medical men at home, there are 3209 holding British degrees and diplomas who have gone into all the world for a livelihood. There are also 2426 medical men in the army and navy and Indian services. Truly there is a great work to be done at home among our medical men. What a delightful thing it would be if someone were to feel himself called of God to work specially among our medical students. Of the Universities we see that there are two (Oxford and Victoria) which have the painful distinction of not having sent one medical student into the mission field. Edinburgh has the honour of having sent the most—forty-five.

The Norwegian Mission in Madagascar is feeling the pinch of these hard times, and recently all salaries had to be lowered and work to be cut down. Naturally, the missionary was disheartened, and said so before his helpers. Then a native pastor reminded him of the state of things on his arrival twenty-seven years before—no helpers at all, the natives indifferent, hardships and difficulties at every step. Now the Mission has 250 helpers and some 10,000 converts. "Let us thank God," said the grateful native pastor, "for his mercies, and if our salaries have to be reduced, we hope that the work will still go forward, for this work is laid upon us; we have chosen it out of full hearts. May the Word of God have full course, and the Church of Madagascar soon be able to support itself." Wide views of our work, a comparison of the beginning with the present, helps faith.

The women of the Manchester and Salford Auxiliary of the L.M.S. have done a deed which ought to have, and we believe will have, a very blessed effect upon many minds and hearts. Having banded themselves together to make their offering to missionary work, they have had prayer meetings in which they have prayed specifically for some portion of the mission field and for the workers therein engaged. They have also, out of a wise and careful management of the money which they have for spending purposes, saved close upon £1000 as their offering to the Lord. Some of them were constrained to go forth and speak to their sisters about this good work, and found the promise fulfilled: "I will be with thy mouth." They are specially anxious to win the interest of all, for "it is the lesser gifts of the very many that will be of the greatest ultimate and permanent value to our society. To teach every Christian man and woman in our churches to say no longer 'the' and 'your,' but 'our society,' 'our missionaries,' would be not only to crown this centenary year with great gladness, but would insure the coming years with the best of all insurances, the consecrated personal devotion of the children of to-day, the men and women of the future."

The need for taking a wide view of Christian work is sometimes made apparent in remarkable ways. A preacher who recently visited the scene of his early labours found an institute built for young persons which would accommodate 1000 of them. One of the two first workers who began the work was still living and working. Thirty-four years ago she and her aged mother, who kept a small retail shop, opened their humble little house for a few girls on Sunday afternoons. More girls came and more helpers; then a room was obtained; and thus steadily through the years the work advanced until its present large proportions were reached, and there is not a worker above the rank of a working man or a small tradesman. The preacher came home with a never-to-be-forgotten lesson in his heart.

Dr. Barrett, of Norwich, fears that there is a danger all over the land of losing the passion for saving men. He regards this as a serious peril. This is the more remarkable because of the interest which is felt in the bodies of men. Were there not, he asked, many Christian people who had never in their lives spoken to one individual soul on spiritual things? There was a time for silence and a time for speech; they could not let the time to speak pass without unfaithfulness to Christ. If they felt what eternity meant, and what sin meant, they could not keep silence. We would add, that a far deeper enjoyment of the love of Christ is required.

The confusion of thought that sometimes marks the deliverances of notable men is astonishing. For example, the German Emperor told some sailors that just as he, their Emperor and Sovereign, devotes his every act and thought to the Fatherland, so they were bound to give up their whole life for him. This is an enormous demand, and sounds more like blasphemy than anything else; but the reason for it is staggering—"For you have taken the oath as Christians, and two servants of God have spoken to you in a Christian spirit!" This is unfolded, "Remember that you are Christians, think of your parents and how your mothers taught you—'Our Father.'" The confusion grows deeper at the end, "Thus will our navy prosper and grow great in the work of peace and for the benefit and the good of the Fatherland; and thus, as we hope in God, shall we destroy the enemy." How to destroy the enemy in peace is not easy to see. What a vain attempt these addresses are to blend the irreconcilable. They are sad reading.

We shall never know the extent of the sufferings of many brave poor people in the recent severe weather. We do know that many died, but the bitter reflection comes, "How many died who need not have died?" This story from near Dudley, told at an inquest, is enough to make an Englishman who pays the poor-rate indignant :—

Last Tuesday morning poor Gould left home early, with the intention of going to Dudley for some iron. There was some bread in the house, together with a little lard which had been given to the wife on the previous day; but Gould seems to have been unwilling to diminish this scanty store, and left the house without any breakfast. The sequel is simple. As he was trudging along a field-path in company with a brother nail-maker, he suddenly staggered and fell, expiring almost immediately. He had complained of a weak heart, and this cause, together with the inclement weather and the lack of nourishment, had brought his miserable and hopeless existence to an end. Being asked by a juryman why she had not applied to the parish authorities of Halesowen for relief, Mrs. Gould answered that it was "of no use," and that the people were "afraid to apply."

"This (says The Daily News) is a matter which clearly calls for inquiry." Certainly it does. And whatever the result of the inquiry, it shows the need for vigilant oversight by guardians.

Mr. Asquith's bills before Parliament for improving the condition of workers ought to be seized as an opportunity for raising the age of half-timers from eleven to twelve. Our national reproach of working such young children ought to be swept away at once.

REFLECTING HEAVEN'S LIGHT.

As shines the moon with placid face,
E'en at the midnight hour,
When human eyes might fail to trace
Her secret source of power,

So may we shine, tho' all around
In dreary darkness dwell,
And few may in that gloom be found
Our source of joy to tell.

Tho' oft our light uncertain seems,
The world we yet may bless,
Reflecting, Lord, thy gracious beams,
Thou Sun of Righteousness!

For thou canst make our faces shine,
Our hearts with joy o'erflow,
That others may, thro' grace Divine,
Thy power and goodness know.

Where he for forty days
Had talked with God, a look he wore
Too bright for human gaze.

That light his face from God received,
And only 'neath a veil
Its dazzling glory was relieved,
Lest trusting hearts should fail.

Thus should we in God's presence wait
As He in secret calls,
Until, from forth Heaven's golden gate,
The glory on us falls.

That glory e'en the least may know;
The feeblest of our race
May, 'neath that bright effulgence, show
A Heaven-illumined face!

THE BIBLE AS LITERATURE.

Every reader of the Bible is struck with the wonderful style of this book. There are in its pages a grandeur and beauty, a fervour and pathos, a brevity and comprehensiveness which no other literary production has ever equalled. The greatest authors, poets, and artists have noticed and acknowledged this. Johannes von Müller speaks of Moses as the grand model for historians. Goethe confesses that there never was an idyll written like the Book of Ruth, and that the narratives of Genesis possess a charm exquisite and unique. The opinions of Schiller and Lord Byron and many other great poets are often quoted and well known.

There is another peculiarity of the Bible style: it is homely and confidential. Its tone is fatherly, friendly, winning our trust and breathing out love. Scripture is wonderfully comprehensive, and yet very minute and personal; uncompromising and stern, majestic and awful, and yet most considerate and tender.

Oh, that we were wise, and would not confine ourselves to our favourite chapters, but launch out into the free, majestic, infinite ocean of Scripture!—Dr. Saphir.

Night and Morning.

Oh! for the peace of a perfect trust
My loving God, in thee;
Unwavering faith, that never doubts
Thou choosest best for me.
Best, though my plans be all upset;
Best, though the way be rough;
Best, though my earthly store be scant;
In Thee I have enough.

"I cannot see you, mother," said a little voice, in the darkness of the night. "Never mind, darling, you will see me in the morning. You can hear me?" "Yes." "And I am close beside you." "Yes, mother, and I am close beside you."

To many of God's children this is the dark night-season. They cry out of the depths. To all of us it is more or less so. The morning of everlasting joy and gladness has not yet dawned—that morning which shall know no night. It is the time for childlike trust and patient endurance.

We cannot trace the reason
Of all God's dealings thro' this trial season.

We do not need to trace it. Trials need not take us by surprise. How often, even in the little ups and downs, and contrary things in our daily lives, we look as if everything ought to run smooth and straight, according to our idea, and we "be carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease."

"If we seek," said one lately, "to make a millennium for ourselves down here, we cross God's purposes." Even so! Our Divine Master said, "In the world ye shall have tribulation" (John xvi. 33). Paul, in writing to the saints of his day, counselled them not to be "moved" by the afflictions which they should endure (1 Thess. iii. 3, 4). Peter warned them not to "think it strange, concerning the fiery trial that was to try" them (1 Peter iv. 12).

Through the valley of weeping lies the highway to Zion (Ps. lxxxiv. 6, R.V.). There is a meetness of position for the inheritance of the saints in light, which can never be increased (Col. i. 12). It rests upon the "It is finished" of the cross of Calvary! There is also a preparing, and a refining, and a ripening going on now, in those who are vessels of mercy, destined aforetime to glory. There is the hewing, and the squaring, and the polishing in the mountains, under the eye of the great Architect! (1 Kings vi. 7). He has in view the place which each of the "living stones" is to occupy in the heavenly Temple! An eminent servant of Christ once said, "If the feet of a child of God were nine-tenths through Jordan He would bring him back again, if his plan were unfinished." "The gold is in the furnace, and the eye of the Refiner is on it" (Mal. iii. 7). "God has now made me perfectly willing to be perfectly holy," said a dying saint. We catch a gleam of the pure gold as it is being removed from the fire.

"When the fruit is ripe, immediately he putteth in the sickle" (Mark iv. 29, mar.) God will not leave his children in this poor world a moment longer than is needful. Be it ours to trust Him every step of the way, to be reflectors of Christ, in all meekness and patience, and long-suffering. The morning light will reveal all!

Shall we not see with deep amaze
How grace has led us safe along;
And as behind, before, we gaze,
Triumphant burst into a song?

Then we shall see the face of our Guide! "A little while, and ye shall see Me" (John xvi. 16). "Thus sweetly did Jesus bridge between the parting and the meeting." Meanwhile, in the secret of our hearts, we hear his voice.

His spirit to my spirit, sweet words of comfort saith.

"These things have I spoken unto you, that in Me ye might have peace" (John xvi. 33). These are the "flagons," and the "apples" which stay and revive the drooping heart, until our Beloved Himself appear. The Divine Comforter delights to minister them. Like Eleazer of old, there are "all goodly things" in his hand (Gen. xxiv. 10 R.V.). "He shall take of mine, and shall show it unto you" (John xvi. 15). But, alas! we may grieve Him, we may limit Him, we may hinder these gracious revealings, to our present and eternal loss.

"Give thy servant therefore a hearing heart" (1 Kings iii. 9, R.V. mar.). And Jesus Himself is close beside us! Unseen, yet ever near! "Lo, I am with you alway." We need no change of position to hold intercourse with Him! "He, leaning back as he was, on Jesus' breast, said, Lord, who is it?" (John xiii. 25, R.V.)

Fellowship with Christ in suffering can only be enjoyed here. To walk with Him in white will be glory beyond our highest thought, but, meanwhile, in all our desert wanderings, and in every fiery furnace we are called to tread, He will walk with us. May we ever cling close to Him. One unconfessed sin will form something "between" the soul and Jesus. Why should it remain? One of the sweetest promises in the Word of God is in John xiv. 21. Dear child of God, be patient, be of good cheer!

The voice of our Beloved! Behold He cometh. "And He shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds" (2 Sam. xxiii. 4).

When I shall wake in that fair morn of morns,
After whose dawning never night returns,
And with whose glory day eternal burns;
I shall be satisfied.
When I shall gaze upon the face of Him
Who died for me, with eye no longer dim,
And praise Him with the everlasting hymn;
I shall be satisfied.

DOWN LODGE HALL, WANDSWORTH.

This centre of Christian work has received again a glad incitement to fresh endeavour from the visit of Mr. W. R. Lane, who has been holding services nightly from the 3rd to the 8th of March, in the large hall which forms part of the building.

On the Sunday evening, and again on the Thursday, when the story of "Bunyan and his Book" was told, with the aid of lantern illustrations, large numbers attended.

On the other evenings, though there were fewer present, the continuing evidence of the working of the Holy Ghost in our midst hindered us from being disheartened.

We were loth to part with the evangelist, as we were assured that could he have remained with us for another week the recipients of "the gift of God" would have been increased in number manifold. The mission was continued by other workers until Monday, the 11th, when the closing meeting was addressed by Capt. Moreton. The sweet singing of Mr. A. J. Mayers aided not a little to accentuate the tenderness of the Gospel story. Those who have laboured with us in prayer we now invite to rest with us in praise, for "the good hand of our God upon us."

AN EIGHT DAYS' MISSION was commenced in Wesley Chapel, York, on Sunday. At the morning service, Rev. H. T. Smart preached. The evening service, which was evangelistic in character, was conducted by the Rev. Wardle Stafford, who preached to a densely crowded congregation. The services are being continued.

DOCTRINE AND PRECEPT.—How sweet would Gospel doctrine be if Gospel precepts were observed. You do not enjoy the Word, because you are out of health and your spiritual appetite is impaired. The high and heavenly joys of the divine life shall be denied to you, if you live at a distance from your God; but if you keep close to Him, you shall have the finest of the wheat, and you shall be satisfied with honey out of the rock.—C. H. Spurgeon.

The 144,000 Sealed.

SOME INTERPRETATION OF THE SEALING IN REV. VII.

I am prevented this week from supplying my paper on "The Unveiling." But I hope others will find the following, which has been sent me by a friend, as edifying and suggestive as it has been to me, even if all cannot see everything exactly as the author sees it. M.

Previous to the beginning of this chapter, six Seals of the Apocalyptic Roll have been opened, and the varied experience of the visible Church of Christ in the world shown; from the going forth of the Rider upon his white horse, conquering and to conquer, to the final and consummating judgments of God. These, in their whole course, it is the work of the Seventh Seal to disclose.

Before such disclosure the Apostle sees an angel descend from heaven, having the Seal of the Living God in his hand, with which to seal his servants, and thus to ensure their safety and victory through whatever fiery trials they might pass.

Accordingly this angelic work proceeds under the symbolism of 12,000 being sealed out of each of twelve heads of Israel. Some interpreters assume here a sealing of Literal Hebrews at the close of the Christian dispensation; others regard the scene as Symbolic of God's care of his people during their Lord's absence and their exposure to evil powers in the world.

Both parties, however, encounter difficulties which the writer has not in any case seen met:—

1. The tribal list, as given, subverts the order of birth.
2. Levi, cut off from inheritance among his brethren, and devoted to the priesthood, is here inserted.
3. Simeon, omitted by Moses in his blessing of the tribes, is here sealed.
4. Ephraim, whose name is honoured by Jehovah to be the synonym of the Ten Tribes throughout the prophets, is not in this list, whilst Manasseh finds a place.
5. Dan is excluded.

In God's Word, assuredly, is nothing fortuitous, and these facts must have a Divine solution. No portion of that Perfect Word more markedly presses the importance of treating its solution with reverent exactitude.

Treat the scene as Literal of Israel, and the difficulties are insuperable. On such ground they cannot possibly be met. Let it be treated as Symbolic, and the fairest and most exquisite vision rises before us, perfect in every part; and with its every sacred word honoured in import and in sequence.

The names, "Judah," etc., literally regarded, have, of course, only designation of Jacob's descendants in their tribal divisions. But these names, in common with nearly all Scripture names, possess a meaning—a moral or spiritual significance, and this significance often becomes the symbol of something much greater than the object designated. That it is so in this scene of sealing, the following list makes most manifest.

The names are placed in the order given—the figures denote the order of birth, and the meaning or significance of each name, as given by Cruden, follows. The connecting lines are the writer's:—

(4) JUDAH, The Praise of the Lord.
JESUS, in person, life, and service, was this perfectly. The Lamb of God, Head of his Body the Church, and First-born of many brethren.

(1) REUBEN, Vision of the Son,
Judged by his father, Gen. xlix. 3, 4, as every sinner by God, Reuben is reprieved by Moses, (Deut. xxxiii. 6), as are repentant sinners by Jesus as Mediator, through "Vision of the Son." The Christian is then, as

(7) GAD, Armed and Prepared, with the truth and love of God, and with the Holy Spirit and his gifts. Henceforth he, as

(8) ASHER, Walks on Prosperously, in the path of faith and obedience, toward God and glory. Satan, the world, and the flesh opposing him at every step, he is seen as

(6) NAPHTALI, That Struggles and Fights,
even to loss of reputation, of possessions, of life itself. In deaths oft, in dungeons, in exile, and in reproaches, God's faithful witnesses have all in measure seemed as

MANASSEH, He that is Forgotten.
Yet amid all, strong in faith, trusting in the name of the Lord and stayed upon his God, he is ever like

(2) SIMEON, That Hears, that Obeys.
God's word is a fire in his bosom, the Holy Spirit impelling power; and if of father, mother, brethren, children, he say with Levi, "I have not known him," yet shall he assuredly be also as

(3) LEVI, Who is Held and Associated.
Held by a Father's almighty arm, and by an immortal Saviour's love. Associated with the hosts whom They shall bring to glory. These all shall royally receive, as

(9) ISSACHAR, Reward and Recompense,
even translation to the heavens, eternal life, marriage to the Lamb, the judging of the world and of angels, and to be a vessel for the Glory of God. Like

(10) ZEBULUN, Dwellings, Habitations
shall be universally free to them. The Father's many mansions shall be open to every child; and none may limit these who may not limit the Father. While, as

(11) JOSEPH, Increase, Additions to knowledge, to felicity, to power, will be evermore extensive and expansive as the Father's love. But it shall be over all eternally manifest how perfect to God is the Righteousness established by the Lord Jesus Christ, which places saved sinners with himself, as

(12) BENJAMIN, Son of the Right Hand.
God's person, favour, power, ever theirs.

Hallelujah! Amen!

No intelligent spiritual Christian will disturb one link of this matchless chain. Here in perfect symmetry is—

THE DIVINE PORTRAIT OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST:

GOD'S EVERLASTING DWELLING PLACE.

Not one difficulty remains. Dan-"Judgment, or He that judges," would have no place in this portrait of the Father's work of grace. When glory shall be added to grace, and the saints shall judge the world, Dan shall not be absent from the portraiture. And it may be added that this interpretation from its nature proves that this sealing is of the whole Church of God, and not of any portion of it during any part of the Christian dispensation.

Fellow-believers, survey well this marvellous portrait. Gaze and again gaze. Mark the Omniscient Eye which sees Faith's perfection in these uttermost depths with Manasseh!—and remember Him—yes, and them, of whom it is written, "Out of the depths have I cried unto thee, O Jehovah." Gaze and again gaze, until you see before you a very picture of "God's Inheritance in the Saints." Let it speak to you of the all-seeing and all-embracing love of your heavenly Father. For it tells not only of saved persons but by a Symbolic perfect number gives absolute assurance that not one will be lost, though the redeemed be a multitude which no man can number.

And mark the sublime and glorious truth which it further conveys—that whilst God's omnipotent hand saves, He yet does so in conjunction with the laws of harmony, beauty, and glory of his own name, in order to make his redeemed AN HABITATION—A HOLY CITY FOR HIMSELF.

Edinburgh. GEORGE GRAHAM.

Fellow-Christian Workers.

AFTER study of the great argument of St. Paul in the Epistle to the Romans, we may regard the last chapter as of very minor importance. Messages to people who died some two thousand years ago, and whose names are utterly unknown, may possess little interest. But as "all Scripture is profitable for instruction in righteousness," we should expect this chapter to prove not unworthy of its predecessors. Its chief lesson is the recognition of fellow-labourers in the vineyard of Christ. St. Paul, constantly travelling and preaching to multitudes, was observant of individuals, cherished their names, and was grateful for their help. He mentions no less than twenty-nine persons to whom he sends messages of affectionate encouragement, and he notices special features of character and service.

The first named is "Our sister," a servant of the Church, a succourer of many. Then he greets Aquila and Priscilla, "who have for my life laid down their own necks." Epænetus is "my well-beloved, the first-fruits of Achaia unto Christ"; and "Mary who bestowed much labour on us." Then he mentions two who had been his "fellow-prisoners, of note among the Apostles." He recognises their priority to himself in discipleship—they "were in Christ before me." Then come other names with various commendatory epithets—"my beloved in the Lord"; "our helper in Christ"; "approved in Christ."

How tender is the message to his friend's mother—"Salute Rufus, chosen in the Lord, and his mother and mine"—a spiritual and consoling mother to the Apostle himself; thus fraternally linking himself with this comparatively obscure disciple. In addition to individuals, he sends messages to "the church in their house," to "them of the household of Aristobulus," and of "Narcissus, which are in the Lord," etc.

We may learn that great works should not interfere with small courtesies, that service to the world should remind us of individuals; that zeal for Christ ought to encourage love and recognition of his friends. Kind words of sympathy and encouragement greatly strengthen one another as we imitate the Chief Shepherd, who "calleth his own sheep by name"; the chief Bishop who remembers the work and labour of love of all "fellow-workers with Him," and says to each, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

It is noticeable that different kinds and degrees of service are specified. Some "labour in the Lord"; some "labour much in the Lord." Christ notices all, distinguishes, remembers, rewards. He is "not unrighteous, to forget."

It is also important to consider how the Apostle designates all fellow-workers. They are not addressed in regard to their system of belief, or membership in a society, their citizenship, language or nationality, but in regard to their relation to Christ Himself. Nine times in this one chapter they are spoken of as being "in the Lord." They "labour in the Lord," are "beloved in the Lord," "were in Christ before me." This is the essential characteristic of Christians. They are in Christ Himself—in his heart—in his sacrifice, his resurrection, his intercession, his Kingdom and glory. "Abide in Me." "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." So Christ pleaded with his Father, "I in them and they in Me." If so, how sad that there should ever be alienation between those thus related to each other in Christ! What are all our seeming differences compared with this real and abiding oneness—that we all are "in Christ Jesus"! N. H.

SIGNIFICANT SYMBOLISM.

By Rev. WILLIAM CROSBIE, Nottingham.

In the Tabernacle of Israel there were three compartments, or divisions, designated severally the outer court, the holy place, and the holy of holies.

One of the contents of the holy place was "the golden candlestick," which was the symbol of the Church of God. "The seven candlesticks are seven churches" (Rev. i. 20).

The gold of which the candlestick was made symbolised the purity and the preciousness of the Church. The seven branches symbolised the Church's mystical and essential unity. The connection of the seven branches with a common stem or centre symbolised the Church's dependence upon Jesus Christ.

And what was the golden candlestick for? It was beautiful as a work of art; but was it for mere ornament? It was for use; for a most important sacred use. It was to give light. Its function, to employ a term applicable rather to a living organism, was to give light. When men light a candle, they do not put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light to all that are in the house.

The light of the golden candlestick was the product of the combustion of oil. "Oil for the light" (Exodus xxv. 6). No oil, no light. And the oil was called "Pure olive oil beaten" (Exodus xxvii. 20). It was extracted from the fruit of the olive tree by a process of bruising. The fruit of the olive tree was cast into a kind of mortar and crushed. Hence the name, "Pure olive oil beaten."

The oil was the symbol of the Holy Spirit. In the Scriptures the Holy Spirit is represented under a variety of symbols, and one of them is oil. And He is even called oil. "We have an unction from the Holy One" (1 John ii. 20). "An unction"—a chrism, an unguent, an anointing, an oil. There is only one word in the original: "Chrisma"—chrism—oil.

And how the process by which the oil was extracted from the fruit of the olive tree symbolised what Jesus passed through that we might receive the Holy Spirit. Was He not "bruised"? "It pleased the Lord to bruise Him." "He was bruised for our iniquities" (Isaiah liii. 5-10). And that "bruising" was necessary. Without it, without the sufferings and death of Jesus, there would have been no reconciliation, no forgiveness, no peace, and no Holy Spirit. "It is expedient for you that I go away, for if I go not away the Comforter will not come unto you" (John xvi. 7). And the going away was first to Gethsemane. Gethsemane! The very name is significant, for it means "oil-press." It was the place where the fruit of the olive tree was pressed, "bruised," crushed. "It is expedient for you that I go away to Gethsemane, to be bruised for your iniquities, to be crushed under the burden of the world's sin."

> Gethsemane! The olive-press!
> (And why so called let Christians guess!)
> Fit name! fit place! where vengeance strove,
> And grip'd and grappled hard with love.

"And being in an agony, He sweat great drops of blood, falling down to the ground!" Ah, Gethsemane! "It is expedient for you that I go there; and thence to Calvary, with its added suffering, and with all its darkness and shame; and thence to the throne of mediatorship; for if I tread not that path, if I go not thus away, the Comforter will not come unto you, but if I depart, I will send Him unto you." "And being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, He hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear" (Acts ii. 33).

"Oil for the light!" And oh, what oil! The sacrificial life of Christ. The Holy Ghost is the sacrificial life of Christ. Jesus had to die, to be crushed, to be "bruised," that the Holy Ghost might be ours! The Holy Ghost flows to us through the wounds of Jesus. The crucified, and now risen Christ, is anointed with the Holy Ghost; and all who are joined to Him by a living faith are partakers of that anointing. And it makes them lights; it makes them "burning and shining lights," if there is the fulness of the anointing; and there is the fulness of the anointing if there is conformity to the death of Christ; for "every sacrifice is salted with fire." The Holy Ghost is upon them, and in them, as "fire," cleansing and purifying them, and setting them all aflame with a self-sacrificing love and zeal, and impelling them forth to chase away the moral darkness of the world, and fill the world with the light of the glory of the Lord.

"Ye are the light of the world." Who are the light of the world? The men and the women who are crucified with Christ, and "baptized with the Holy Ghost, as fire." As fire! Filled with the sacrificial life and love of Christ! Living sacrifices! Whole burnt-offerings! Flaming! Illumining! And setting others on fire of the Lord! Compare Ezek. i. 13.

Oh for Christians like that! Oh for a Church like that! What a candlestick a Church like that would be! A candlestick of pure gold—holy; and "a burning and a shining light!" And how, in it, and by it, the great prophecy would be fulfilled: "Arise, shine, for thy light is come; and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the peoples; but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and His glory shall be seen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising.... And thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself; for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended" (Isaiah lx. 1, 2, 3, 20).

SOCIAL QUESTIONS IN THE ORIENT.

As our readers are aware, a most important campaign bearing on this subject has been carried on during the past few months, in the shape of a series of great meetings, of which about twenty have been held in as many of the largest towns of the United Kingdom. These meetings have been addressed by Mrs. Elizabeth Andrew and Dr. Kate C. Bushnell, the story of whose personal investigations into the facts of the opium habit and trade, presented with eloquence and feeling, has thrilled the large audiences, and aroused a widespread horror of the iniquities associated with opium. The close connection between opium and vice has been exposed in no sparing fashion, and the mere recital of the facts must in itself have been most painful for the two ladies, who have been most deeply moved by having witnessed the wretchedness and misery of which they tell.

The friends of this movement in London should rally to the support of these two heroic women. An opportunity of doing so will occur on Friday evening next week, March 22, when the final meeting of the campaign will be held in the Queen's Hall, Langham-place, W. A great gathering is expected, the more so as the chair will be occupied by Lady Henry Somerset, to whose initiative the holding of the campaign is due. This will be her ladyship's first public appearance in London after her return from a lengthened visit to America. Mdme. Antoinette Sterling has promised to sing at the meeting. The thrilling interest of the story to be told, the personnel of the speakers, and their distinguished service to the cause of righteousness, combine to warrant the expectation of a meeting worthy of the movement. If, however, this expectation is to be realised, the friends of the anti-opium cause must display an interest in the meeting, and attend it in large numbers. To a great part of the hall admission will be free, but, in view of the heavy expense, a charge is made for numbered reserved seats. Tickets for these (2s. and 1s. each) may be obtained on application, personally or by letter, to Mr. H. J. Osborn, Temperance Press Agency, 112, Fleet-street, E.C.; and also at the Ticket Office, Queen's Hall.

GLASGOW EVANGELISATION.

The twenty-first annual meeting of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association took place recently in the hall of the Christian Institute. There was a crowded attendance.

Lord Overtoun, who presided, said the Association had reached its majority. It was in 1874, on the first visit of Mr. Moody to Glasgow, that it took shape in a united committee of all the churches. He had a letter two days ago from Mr. Moody, who was on the road to Texas. Mr. Moody asked to be remembered in affectionate Christian love. It would be good news to him when he learned of their proceedings. Though the work was not officially connected with the churches, it was really the work of the churches; and though the office-bearers were not appointed by the churches they were representative of all the churches. The work was wholly unsectarian, and the churches had been strengthened in receiving members in consequence of the work of the Association. One of the special features of new work was the Bible Training Institute. No special appeal was made for financial support; but they knew the best way to receive it was to get people interested in the work. All Christian people in the city were asked to be fellow-workers, and to tell what the Association had done these last twenty-one years. The Association had been the means of converting many, of bringing in outcasts, and inducing them to become soldiers of the cross,

Mr. J. W. Arthur read the annual report. From the daily noon prayer meeting and the Monday evening fellowship meeting, both held in the Christian Institute, as the centres of the spiritual work, there radiate about 14 separate organisations, each doing useful work in our city. The Tent Hall covers the Saltmarket district, and with its Sabbath breakfasts and dinners, gives food to the hungry, and with its numerous indoor and open-air meetings preaches the Gospel to the poor. Bethany Hall ministers to the east end of the city, and, with a large band of working men and women, spreads the Word of God in many directions. The Mizpah band, with its 570 members and eight branches, carries on its operations all over the city. The Bonar Memorial Mission to the Jews does a quiet persistent work. Under the children's committee fall to be recorded the Sabbath afternoon children's dinner, which has gone on for 21 years without a break; the day refuges, three in number; the Fresh Air Fortnight, the Girls' Home, the Lantern Mission, and the Weary Workers' Rest. A home at Saltcoats provides for waifs and strays picked up from the city streets. The Bible Training Institute with its 30 students trains men of work and uses them in service.

Mr. Alex. Mackeith, honorary treasurer, gave in a report. The year began with a debit balance of £226 0s. 8d., and closed with a credit balance amounting to £458 8s. 11d. The extraordinary income amounted to £5812 11s. 6d. This added to the extraordinary credit balance of £2910 0s. 5d. at December 31, 1893, makes the amount at credit £8722 11s. 11d. This entire sum is "ear-marked," and falls to be expended during 1895; in the extension of the Catharine-Mary Fresh-air Home, the purchase of (and the supplying of water to) Holland House Fresh-air Home, the purchase and equipment of two new fresh-air homes and a Weary Workers' Rest Home, and in the building of the Bible Training Institute. For the Training Institute building, which the directors have resolved to proceed with, a sum of £8000, in addition to that which is already promised, will be required, and a sum of £4000 is expected for two fresh-air homes still needed.

Other reports of work done were submitted.

A PRESSING NEED IN BOARDING SCHOOLS.—"A Parent" writes urging the necessity of young people at boarding school being supplied with literature suitable for Sunday. She says: "It is the bounden duty of all in charge of children to try and make the sabbath a delight to them, instead of the dull day of the week. In their own homes there is usually some reading provided, at least by careful parents, who think it right to put aside on God's day adventure stories and other merely amusing books; and when boys and girls thus cared for go to a boarding-school, they sadly miss on Sundays the books they have been accustomed to find ready at home. I would then ask heads of schools to consider the advisability of starting Sunday libraries. A donation towards it from parents of pupils would certainly not be refused."

REVIVALS IN SCOTLAND.

By GORDON FORLONG.

When the great movement in 1855 and 1856 began, all denominations, one may say, were asleep; but the "Methodists" had in various country districts some very bold, true preachers. The most zealous, perhaps, in 1856 was

JAMES TURNER, OF PETERHEAD.

He provoked many others to earnest prayer, and preached with great power, but was taken away by the Lord soon. The loudest trumpet-notes came from Aberdeenshire and from Elgin at first. Some of us did not expect much. We were working in a modest way among the fishermen at Colliston and the neighbouring villages in Aberdeenshire, and we were reproved by some zealous fishermen. They were praying in a few very small villages for "thoosands o' souls." We modestly asked for hundreds, and when I said to one dear fellow, Sandy Phillips, "How can you ask for thousands in such a neighbourhood as this?" he said, "Oh, we maun ask for thoosands, and we'll get them."

And he was right; even in that county the work spread, chiefly through Mr. Turner, to all the coast villages and towns, almost from Peterhead to Elgin. About 7000 souls were believed to have found the Lord in that district. We spoke in villages at night south of Peterhead; oftentimes we went to harvest men at their dinner hour, and preached in the fields.

On Sunday the population at large all went to church, with a form of godliness; dead hearts, carrying the Bible to their churches mechanically—full of the world, and ready to discuss their farms, flocks, and herds as soon as the church service was over. One minister I remember was very fond of Saturday amusements, and when at a jovial party the clock came near to 12 o'clock at midnight, he rose and put the clock an hour back, so as not to interfere with the evening's amusements. He would tell this himself, and laugh over it among the fishermen.

Spiritual religion was almost unknown in some parts; yet, ere three or four years had passed, Aberdeenshire had more bold Christians in it than any other county could produce, and this applied not only to thousands of the working classes, but to the higher classes also. The Earl and Countess of Aberdeen were known as God's people long before the work began, and they greatly stimulated true-hearted ones. Miss Marsh was blessed, I think, to the conversion of Lady Kintore. Lady Errol encouraged work on the East Coast, and the Duchess of Gordon did the same in Huntly before long. Gordon of Parkhill and Dyce was a bold witness.

But the work was in its infancy in 1856: here a small fire kindling and there another. Reports suddenly reached us that a "military man" was preaching in Elgin. Mr. Gordon, of Parkhill, who had only lately found the Lord at our meetings, besought me to go and see the evangelist, and arrest the work if he were a deceiver, and encourage him if true-hearted. Lay preaching was a great novelty at that time, and we were in dread lest a false standard-bearer should damage it. Our inquiries were most satisfactorily answered; the Elgin district—like the Peterhead and Colliston districts—was roused.

The preacher was no dry schoolman, manufacturing sermons by human rules. He was a flaming torch, a brand just plucked from the burning, a man past middle life, and, like a comet, he was astonishing the cold little churches near Elgin. His heart was burning, I found, under the knowledge of what sin is before God. He had far clearer views of sin and of human depravity than of the Gospel; he set fire to the cold dead orthodoxy that prevailed. Thank God for that blessed orthodoxy but thank God the torch was at hand, setting fire, to the great piles of truth that were not only cold, but actually damp and useless. The preacher was

BROWNLOW NORTH.

In my ignorance at first, I did regret he knew so little of his Bible. He was a perfect babe in pure Gospel, but God is justified in all his children. The notes he struck were the needful notes that God sent to Scotchmen at this time. Mr. Peter Drummond's tracts were of the same character in 1855 and 1856, and Mr. Drummond was deluging Scotland with them. They even found their way to London. They destroyed false peace effectually; they tore up and rent men's consciences; they were tremendously earnest. Brownlow North preached in like manner; every Scotch evangelist was at that period a pillar of fire. Scotland had plenty of churches full of bonfire material, but it needed the kindling spark. The parish minister often preached soundly upon the "new birth," and then went home to enjoy his whisky-and-water at night. I write what I know well: the agency of the Holy Ghost was practically ignored.

"HOW SHALL YE ESCAPE THE DAMNATION OF HELL?"

was a question asked by the Lord Jesus Christ, and He did not vouchsafe an answer at that time. Such questions lie like good seed in the hard heart, and burst it up. We are very liable to overlook the gunpowder charge thus deposited, because the heart receiving it goes away, and no immediate result appears. Immediate results are sometimes weak and poor in comparison. A marvellous work once took place in Rutherglen. A number of preachers had determined to preach only the New Birth for weeks, and at the end of those weeks a wondrous explosion took place. Hundreds of anxious souls, and eventually thousands, were found. "Gospel-hardened souls" are now even actually sitting in great congregations, and only fear, dread, and the Spirit's fire can touch them apparently.

A Scotch parish minister, when asked by Mr. Gordon of Parkhill in 1857, "How many cases of new birth have you seen in this parish?" answered, "Oh, Mr. Gordon, you remember, perhaps, Daft Maggie, who used to go about the parish saying she was born again: that is really the only case," he answered in a jocular tone. "Then, please," said the laird of many parishes, "add my name to her name." "You don't really mean it?" said the parish minister. "Oh, I beg pardon for my answer; I had no idea you had become religious. Well, I am very glad, and hope you will forgive me being jocular about the new birth." This anecdote I had from Mr. Gordon of Parkhill's own lips a few days afterwards.

I was asked, after the work in Aberdeen had begun, to preach at a church in Montrose, and I induced the minister to take Brownlow North instead, as his power of awakening souls was very great. Crowds attended the services, and another place of worship was offered to me. Ministers advertised us as "Laymen of the Church of England." Even the streets were filled with crowds after the services began. One minister told me he never got down the street, and could not appear in his place of worship. Men were awakened in Montrose, but conversions were apparently few at the time. God was ploughing deep, so as to reach all Scotland.

Cold, dead, wicked Forfar was also open to us. "Wicked Forfar" truly, as it was reported at the time that one minister was about to be removed for drunkenness, and the police were actually in pursuit of another minister. The hard, intellectual inhabitants of Forfar believed in no religion whatever, but they came to the large parish church in which we both preached on a Sunday evening at six o'clock. It was filled in every corner; the pulpit steps were crowded. Mr. North went up first, and began the service, preaching for about an hour. I followed, doing the same, and as the people would not move North went up again. As the people determined not to move, I preached for fully another hour. We kept up the services till near midnight, and invited inquirers. William Reid, of Stirling, was with us, but he said he had no faith regarding Forfar, and we asked him not to preach there. About one hundred churches then sent preaching invitations—some say 200 churches. We separated, never again meeting in Scotland.

(To be concluded.)

MEXICO CITY.—Mr. W. H. Sloan, 515, Third Humboldt-avenue, Mexico City, writes on Feb. 22:—"Our church services on Sunday are well attended, and the congregations in the other three chapels are larger than usual. Souls have been born into the kingdom every week for the past five months, and inquiries for portions of the Gospels, tracts, and children's papers are more earnest and importunate than ever before. But we have had serious hindrances, both in spiritual trials, and in the use of physical force to hinder our work. We need more Spanish Gospels and tracts. Children's papers, too, are very acceptable. Early in April we are to have a national missionary conference at Toluca, treating of the person, offices, work, etc., of the Holy Spirit. Messrs. Moody and Sankey have promised to be with us, and we are looking forward to a series of blessed meetings."

REV. J. McNEILL IN INDIA.

MEETINGS AT CALCUTTA.

Mr. McNeill reached Calcutta on February 6, and the same evening met a number of friends at the Y.M.C.A. rooms, to arrange for his mission services in the city. He commenced these the following Sunday, preaching at St. Andrew's Church in the morning, and in a large tent in the evening.

Speaking of the first week's services, the Indian Witness says, "Mr. McNeill's work has daily grown in interest through the week. The tent is provided with eleven hundred chairs, and these have all been filled and numbers have had to stand. The power of the meetings has also increased; the week's experience is so encouraging that the service for the Sunday night has been appointed for the Rink, which will accommodate from two to three thousand persons.

"Mr. McNeill preaches the undiluted Gospel; after his departure the city pastors will have no need to purge the minds of their hearers from unsound doctrine gleaned from ignorant preachers of crude theology. He claims that his great aim here is to assist the pastors; his clear, forcible, convincing statements of the central truths of the Gospel cannot but serve as a theological tonic to the church-going people of Calcutta. The preaching is mixed with humour, sarcasm, denunciation of all half-heartedness in serving Christ, and exposure of some of the well-known weaknesses of some Calcutta Christians. These things trouble a few good people who are not themselves offended, but are in mortal fear lest X. Y. Z. should take offence. But Mr. McNeill knows his own business, and he knows his audience, and it is the height of folly for anyone to worry over invisible corns of imaginary people that are in danger of coming under the heel of this stalwart Scotchman, and still more stalwart Christian. The closing meetings of the week have resulted in great blessing to many."

In its editorial columns, the Witness has the following:—

"Mr. McNeill's success as a preacher of the Gospel is due in the first place to the fact that he preaches Christ as the Saviour of sinners; and in the second place to his manner of preaching. The infinite tenderness and compassion of God, the absolute helplessness and need of the sinner, the sweet reasonableness of serving Christ, and the inexcusable unreasonableness of living in sin, constitute the matter of his discourses. He talks about religion exactly as people talk about other things, and they understand what he says and know that each word means something. He tells people the plain truth which their own conscience has already told them, and he does it in a way which enlists the conscience of the hearer on the side of the preacher, and it is not strange that he wins. He comes very close to his hearers. He is intensely human. From the side pockets in his 'wicked bobtail coat' to the disorderly mass of hair which crowns his head there is nothing conventional, formal, repellant. He stands there, a simple, strong, earnest man, with an important message to men and women, and he tells it in a manner which shows that he believes his message is true, and it is very necessary for his hearers to receive it."

In describing the evening service of the second Sunday, The Statesman of February 19 says: "At least 3000 people were present at the Rink service on Sunday night. In opening the meeting Mr. McNeill declared that the sight of such an audience might well make a despairing Christian pluck up heart of grace. All is not lost when in a great heathen city we can have so large a gathering to hear the Gospel."

CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW.—A most inspiriting and memorable meeting was held at Miss Child's Welcome Home in Ratcliff Highway, on Tuesday last week, the 9th anniversary of the formation of the crew. Although young in years it has already become a great power in many ports of the world. This was shown by extracts from letters received from some of the branches, as well as from individual members. Miss Child gave out the text for the month, "The Lord is at hand," and impressed upon those present the need of continuance in prayer for as well as effort among the sailors all round the world. Count Bentinck told of the work in Rotterdam and of its success, notwithstanding the unusually great hindrances. The addresses given by Colonel Macgregor, Rev. T. J. Hazzard, and Messrs. Luff and Smith were very stimulating.

THE PALESTINE EXHIBITION.

An afternoon or evening spent in the Palestine Exhibition, now on view at Brixton Hall, is a deeply interesting and instructive experience. Three hours hardly suffice for the long array of attractive engagements provided. Each day the lecturing material is varied, and those who have been able to attend the exhibition with any degree of regularity will have acquired rich stores of new and helpful knowledge as to matters Biblical and Palestinian, at a comparatively infinitesimal cost in money.

On the occasion of our representative's second visit last week Mr. Neil lectured on the Wilderness or Bedaween life of the Holy Land. He had previously expounded and illustrated the town life, and the agricultural or fellaheen life. The dioramic scenes thrown on the screen to illustrate this desert life were fine specimens of pictorial art, broadly treated. One picture showed some leopards crouching for their prey in the dense thorny jungle on the banks of the Jordan. Another represented the valley of the river near its entrance to the Dead Sea; while a third vividly portrayed the dreaded simoom of the sandy solitudes. Among the other perils of the wilderness descanted on by Mr. Neil in a fresh and illuminating manner were wild beasts. One of the most dangerous of these is the great Syrian bear; others are the cheetah, the jackal, the vulture, etc. All these were shown in different pictures, and a wealth of suggestive remark made, giving added light and meaning to many Scriptural references. Other desert marauders are the brigand and the Bedaween. These Ishmaelites are dangerous not only to unwary and unprotected travellers, but to the shepherds of the hills and their flocks. Much that was interesting and suggestive was said by the lecturer about the bravery of the shepherd in guarding his sheep from beasts and evil men. The shepherd's club and crook, veritable specimens of which were shown, formed a theme for profitable and lucid Scripture commentary. As, for instance, in verse 4 of Psalm xxiii., where the rod and staff were changed into "club and crook"—the one for protection from enemies, and the other for rescuing the sheep or lamb from perilous positions. The whole lecture teemed with helpful allusions to Bible teaching, some of them bearing on the special circumstances of the religious world of to-day.

We wish we had space to reproduce the graphic and highly suggestive descriptions given by Mr. Neil of some of the floral and plant specimens shown in the remarkable picture we referred to last week—a "Peep into a Paradise." This composite picture comprises more than 140 species of Palestinian plants and flowers; the general effect being singularly brilliant and attractive. Among the items noted in the lecture we heard were the yellow poisonous gourd, of which it was said (2 Kings iv. 40) "There is death in the pot"; the olive, the fig, and the vine, all referred to in the fable of the trees and their king, and the three principal fruit-bearing trees of the country; the red lily; the rose of Sharon—which Mr. Neil sets down as the white rose; the locust tree, whose fruit was the food of the very poorest, the fare of austere prophets, and the last resource of the prodigal son; the cedar of Lebanon, etc., etc. This lecture on plants and flowers is one that must be of great service to Sunday-school teachers, in making real to their scholars the numerous Scripture allusions to the natural products of Palestine.

Some further notice of the "side entertainments," such as the rock-hewn tomb, the town and country houses, the raised map of Palestine, etc., must be left to a succeeding issue. We must, however, add a word of commendation as to the very interesting display of lantern slides of Egyptian scenery, cities, temple ruins, and such unique structures as the Pyramids. These were briefly described by a gentleman who had visited the land, and seemed well qualified to point out their specially interesting features. The exhibition closes at Brixton to-morrow (Friday) evening, and we hope any friends who have the opportunity will make an effort to see it.

"THE WAY THE LORD HATH LED."

Not only when the pathway forks before us,
Not only then for guidance would we pray,
Not only from our wanderings restore us;
We need Thee every step of all the way.

For the encouragement of the Lord's people, and as illustrating the way in which He does in daily life and service definitely lead the steps of those whose "way" is committed to Him, I give the following incident, with the permission of the friend who gave me the particulars of her experience:—

For more than a year, Miss H—— had been in the habit of going, on Sunday evenings, to a Home for Fallen Women, to speak to the inmates of Jesus and his love. She was deeply interested in them, and had been encouraged by tokens of the Lord's saving grace.

On arriving at the Home, one Sunday afternoon in summer, the matron pleaded with her to go and visit a young woman who had been sent away to the ——— Hospital in a dying condition, as she herself was unable to do so. It was an urgent request, and one to which, in an ordinary way, Miss H—— would readily have acceded; but it happened that her plans for the week were already fully made, and could not well be set aside; she therefore excused herself in spite of the matron's entreaty.

Monday morning came, and Miss H—— began to carry out the day's programme, which included a visit to Brixton for the purpose of executing some commissions for her sister. But, in the midst of these, she became forgetful, worried, anxious, and altogether unsuccessful. Vividly she remembers, even now, the narrow street in which, distressed and perplexed, she paused to inquire why she was thus troubled. Instantly there flashed through her mind the remembrance of the matron's request, and she felt as if, like Jonah, she had fled from the presence of the Lord, and had refused to carry his message of mercy. Instant confession brought swift restoration of peace, and there was the prayerful resolve to do the Lord's will with regard to this visit.

But she had no particulars, and only knew the name of the hospital. With regard to all this, however, a calm fell upon her spirit, the difficult commissions were remembered, and most satisfactorily fulfilled; and with a happy consciousness of the Lord's presence and approval, she returned to her home.

Next morning she had a teaching engagement, but the conviction became only deeper that she must go and explain matters to the lady who expected her, herself an earnest Christian. Her mother, however, objected to this at first, and suggested waiting until she could obtain from the matron particulars as to the journey and the proper day for visitors. When she learnt, however, how clearly the Lord had spoken, she ceased her pleadings, and gave full consent and blessing. Mrs. B——, also, most readily released her from her duties for that day, feeling sure that the errand was of God.

Arrived at the station, Miss H—— asked for a ticket to what she believed to be the correct station. The clerk looked at her and hesitated. "I want to go to —— Hospital," was the involuntary reply to his unspoken inquiry.

"That is not the way," he said; and he then took great pains to explain the proper route, and what trains she should take. So lost was she in the reality of all this as she journeyed on, that some of his directions slipped her memory, and she had to appeal to a porter before she reached her destination. She was hardly surprised that he most readily conducted her to the proper train.

Soon the hospital was reached, but here arose a more serious difficulty, for the gates were closed, and it was a day on which visitors were not admitted. Could it be that, after all, she had mistaken the Lord's leading? Walking round the hospital, and beyond the huge gates so firmly shut against her, she came to a side door, which was being opened by an aged man, who was tending the flowers. He listened as she mentioned the distance she had come, the conviction she was sent, and the difficulty of the closed gates.

"You may go up," he said. "The house-porter can let you in, if he will. Try!" The porter also listened kindly to the request; and with a quick glance of intelligence made the simple inquiry, "Are you meeting in the name of the Lord Jesus?" "Yes." Here was one who, like some "in Cæsar's household," was a saint of the Most High. Only that very morning had his own faith been tried, for he had been threatened with dismissal for speaking of the Saviour to a dying patient. Though thankful that his message seemed to have borne fruit, and that the seeking one had found rest in believing, the man was cast down, but it seemed as if his visitor's first mission was to strengthen his courage.

Miss H—— was soon at the side of the sick girl, who had, however, taken a turn for the better; and, alas! with the immediate danger her anxiety had passed away. It was as if she had neither ears nor heart for the message her friend had come so far to deliver. Faithfully Miss H—— read to her words of warning and of gracious invitation, but the invalid did not seem interested, and made it manifest that she wished to be left undisturbed. "That poor girl over there is dying. Will you not go and speak to her?" she suggested. The lady had already been struck by the eager attention of the dying one to whom she was thus directed, whose bed was just opposite to where she stood. With a sense of relief she sat down beside her, and saw that the end was evidently approaching very rapidly. She had been trying to raise herself in her bed in order to hear more distinctly, and now, putting out her thin white hand, she grasped the hand of her visitor, and exclaimed:

"You were sent for me. You were! Wait till I tell you." As her strength permitted, she continued, "Yesterday, about twelve o'clock, I was lying here, so miserable. It was no use to tell me there was no hell, for I knew there was. I knew, too, that the work of Christ was all-sufficient for the sinner; but I was not saved. I hoped, but oh! it is an awful thing to die only on hope. I asked the Lord if He meant to save me, to send some one in as his messenger to tell me, and He sent you. Now I know He wants to save me."

Miss H—— could not restrain the flowing tears as she told the story of how the Lord had spoken, and how slow she had been to accept the work.

She distinctly remembered, too, that it was at twelve o'clock on the previous day that her steps had been arrested in that narrow street at Brixton; for she had looked at a clock near by. She told all, and when the other had listened, the wondering words came—

"He took all that trouble for me! He sent you all this way for me."

Both hearts were melted at this sure evidence of his love; and, in answer to prayer for the right portion of his word to be given, Miss H—— turned to 1 John v. 13: "These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life."

"Does it say that? May I read it for myself?"

Miss H—— helped to raise her that she might see the precious words as they stood in their context. As she sank back again upon her pillow, she said, "Now I know. I will never say 'hope' again."

A happy time of intercourse about the Lord Jesus followed, and then Miss H—— rose to go. As she did so, the sick girl said, "We will never meet here again, but there," and she smiled. "I know, I know I have eternal life." A few more words and they separated, to meet next in his presence, where there is "fulness of joy."

How the good porter rejoiced, as those two praised the Lord together, and acknowledged his hand. Surely we, too, must confess, with added confidence, "He led them forth by the right way."

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.—The deputation secretary, Rev. W. J. Mayers, accompanied by several boys from the Homes, visited Croydon on Wednesday week and held large and enthusiastic meetings in the Public Hall. In the evening a lecture was given by Mr. Mayers, illustrated by lantern views, giving different aspects of the work in its manifold forms.

IN DARK AFRICA.—In the March issue of Dr. Harford-Battersby's Niger and Yoruba notes, Mr. Nott, writing from Lokoja on the Niger, on December 14, reports himself the only European left in that place, with the exception of Miss Taylor, who had again been very seriously ill. He speaks of three Mohammedans who are visiting him regularly and who are well known to all those who have worked at Lokoja. Ever since Mr. Wilmot Brooke first went to Lokoja two of them have been accustomed to read the Bible, and the third has done a considerable amount of Bible translation. Still, they do not seem to be much nearer to a decision. Prayer is asked for them that they may be led to count the cost of taking their stand on Christ's side.

AUSTRALIAN NOTES.

By Mr. HENRY VARLEY.

This is indeed a wonderful country. We are now enjoying the height of summer, and in Victoria we have marked prevalency of warm east winds. Except for two days the month of January has been one of peerless sunshine. The sunsets are wonderful and gorgeous; the nights magnificent and radiant in their starlit glory. We have had one hot spell, lasting about four days, the glass reaching 98deg. in the shade; but from 68deg. to 82deg. fairly describes the atmospheric condition for the month. The air has been dry and exhilarating. A more striking contrast to an English January it would be difficult to conceive. I believe that many valuable lives in England might be strengthened and prolonged by a voyage and sojourn for two or three months in the sunny south—only thirty days from London to Melbourne.

The great golden idol which the Victorians set up and worshipped lies, like Dagon of old, with his head off. The money worshippers go about the streets as though Mammon were sick unto death. For this I am not sorry. The living God has a contention with this people. They say, "Gain and gold stand first." God says, "My Kingdom stands first." The controversy is just here; it is not a colonial, but a world-wide controversy.

In my judgment the exaltation of mere representative values during the past thirty years has wrought immense mischief. Because men cannot heap up gold and "make money," they complain of "world-wide depression." What stupendous folly! Take this colony, for example. If gold cannot be accumulated as it was ten years since, yet the abundance of stock and produce is simply marvellous. Breadstuffs are plentiful, and the staff of life excellent and cheap. Meat (best quality) from 1½d. to 4d. per lb.; potatoes, 2s. per cwt. First-rate cows can be had from £3 to £6; cases of magnificent apples, 36lb. for 2s. 3d. Plums are 5s. per cwt.; apricots 2d., and peaches 3d. per lb. Near this city, one fruit-grower supplied seventy tons of plums to a firm for preserving purposes alone. Bananas are 3d. per dozen, pineapples from 1d. to 4d. each. As an illustration of producing power—we have a pleasant little homestead, keeping cow, fowls, etc. From August last to January, our eggs numbered 1261. There is a corner in our garden which, three weeks since, was dug over and planted with maize. I have just measured the height of the plant; it is green and luxurious, from 8in. to 2ft. high! Now, do you not think the Victorians are to be commiserated? Are not times deplorable? and should not a national subscription be set on foot to aid this depressed people? I feel like saying, "Get away, old money-bags, with your whining talk about 'can't make money'; make room for production."

Bad government and extravagant expenditure have greatly injured the colony of Victoria. Men in many cases quite incompetent and unprincipled, have essayed the functions of government, and have in various ways squandered millions of the wealth of the colony. The buildings which comprehend the Chambers of the Legislature represent an outlay of nearly £2,000,000 sterling, and yet they are still unfinished. A massive and admirable building, suitable and ample for all the purposes required, might have been erected for a quarter of that sum. The three principal railway centres, where a mass of people daily congregate, are low, cramped, and ill-adapted, and a disgrace to any city; yet close to them stands a colossal pile of most elaborate railway offices. A building costing one-third would have been sufficient, whilst the remainder should have gone to provide a commodious railway station, instead of the beggarly little suite of wooden shanties which now compose it. These are typical instances of the unwisdom which has wasted the substance of Victoria.

The effects of bad government are serious enough, but the habits of the great majority of the colonists are mainly responsible for the present depressed conditions. The land boom mania of 1887 and 1888 suited the gambling and speculative tendencies of the people exactly. The whole community believed a lie. In eighteen months enough land was sold and resold for building purposes in the suburbs of Melbourne to accommodate a city of 7,000,000 inhabitants.

The money god was the leader into this delusion, this latest "South Sea bubble." Had it not been for the scandalous policy of the joint-stock banks in their lust after unjust gains, this huge fraud could not have lasted six months. The result has been one of terrible disaster; tens of thousands of the people have been utterly ruined, and the credit of colony seriously compromised for years to come.

The next painful factor is the wide-spread intemperance which has had place in the habits of the colonists. Take the following fact. During the 54 years during which Victoria has had her position in the sunny south, no less than £280,000,000 sterling has been dug out of her gold mines. It is a hideous fact to state, but every shilling of that enormous sum has been spent upon brandy, whisky, and ales. This does not give the publican's profits, which are large, nor does this sum touch the poverty, crime, and imprisonments which are everywhere the fruit of the liquor traffic. I have no hesitation in saying that no less a sum than £400,000,000 has been lost to the resources of Victoria by the import and sale of intoxicants.

A third factor may be described as Australia's national vice; gambling in stocks, shares, mines, money, horse-racing, cards, etc., appears to be the Colonists' fascination. As one truthfully expresses it, "the Victorians appear to be born gamblers." Certainly the outrageous gambling transactions of the joint-stock banks, as also the insane speculations of prominent moneyed men in Melbourne, floated and maintained for months the great land boom swindle.

To such lengths is betting carried on in connection with horse racing, that more than £1,000,000 of money has changed hands on a single race, viz., the Melbourne Cup. From three to six columns a day represents the space only too willingly given by the leading Melbourne papers to this demon of unjust gain. "The Betting Market," forsooth, is quoted, when the editors know perfectly well that no such market has existence. Market means commodity for legitimate sale. How respectable journals can lend themselves to become the medium for the deceits, frauds, and misrepresentations of betting men is astounding.

Licentiousness, with its awful depravity and far-reaching physicial and social ruin, stands next upon the list of demons which have wrought such havoc in the welfare of a colony which, in many respects, might be called "one of the fairest gardens of the earth."

Last, but not least, of the evil forces which have had place in Victoria's present depression must be mentioned the inordinate and extravagant love of pleasure, united to, as is the fact in so many cases, a positive dislike to honest and painstaking toil. There are in Melbourne large numbers of men who are mere idlers. They will not dig, to beg they are not ashamed. They lounge about the streets, wait outside the newspaper offices by the hour for racing and sporting results. The billiard-table, the theatre, the card-room, the racecourse, the athletic ground draw them as a loaded magnet. There they are, many of them loafing and lawless young fellows, who handicap the welfare of the colony and blight the social and commercial prosperity of the city. What this love of ease and preference of pleasure to labour and discipline means as unfitting for work, study, and duty the social economist knows right well.

In conclusion, let your readers remember that my letter is written to show how practical ungodliness has been the chief cause of the depression which has held sway here during the past four years. I would not have it forgotten that there are here thousands of devoted Christian men and women. Many of these are "holding the fort" gallantly and courageously. I gladly recognise what has been and is being done by the servants of Christ in this goodly city. Gladly do I write it. "The Lord has much people in Melbourne," and unless I greatly err, many are learning at this time of acute commercial and social depression not to "trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us all things richly to enjoy."

We had the pleasure of receiving to our home for some hours our brother, John McNeill, before he left this city for Calcutta. He looked fairly well, but worn with incessant work and crowded assemblies. He needed rest, and his journey to India would yield this. Oh, that our God may go before his servant, to make him a wonderful blessing there. Our brother's work in this city, I am told, was very remarkable. In this how greatly we rejoice. All praise to our God. The "day" will declare the "great things He hath done."

I am just commencing a Gospel campaign in Hawthorn Town Hall, close to where we reside. The beloved friends in connection with the church under the care of Pastor Alfred Bird are co-operating very heartily. The meetings yesterday were large, and the people interested and impressed. There is, I trust, "the sound of an abundance of rain."

As to my own way I am not clear. Some things have happened which may prevent my returning to England as early as I had anticipated.

THE L.M.S. CENTENARY.

In connection with the Centenary of the London Missionary Society a series of united meetings have been arranged in London. The first of these was held in the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Tuesday week.

Dr. J. Guinness Rogers, who presided, opened with a ringing address. One point was singularly suggestive. Having spoken of the past century's trials and triumphs, he called for bolder efforts, adding:—They knew that mistakes had been made, and they knew that in the future it was quite possible that they might have to strike out new paths of service and initiate new methods of labour. He thought they would have to consider beyond, and, perhaps, above every question that presented itself at the present time, this great question,—To what extent was the agency of Europeans absolutely necessary for the conversion of the heathen? How far ought that agency to be limited? To what extent was it possible that they could call forth the work of the converts in the heathen world itself? He believed that the history of the future depended on the right solution of that problem. They would never have been converted if they had been left to foreigners to convert them. The men who were to move nations must for the most part be men of the nations themselves.

After an able speech by Rev. J. M. Gibbon, great enthusiasm was aroused by a short but telling address delivered by the Rev. James Chalmers, of New Guinea. He showed what the people were, how an entrance had been gained, how much had been done on the south-east coast, and how much of the island remained untouched. In closing he remarked that he wished his hearers had been with the secretary of the society and himself at the rooms of the Royal Geographical Society in Burlington-gardens. It would have thrilled their hearts to have heard Sir William McGregor, the Governor of New Guinea, speak and plead for missions. Was there ever before a plea like that, he wondered, in that room? The governor pleaded that missionaries should be sent to New Guinea immediately in order that the people might be Christianised. Sir William McGregor said: "I am not going to find fault with the people of this country trying to civilise or Christianise China and other places; but the New Guineans are fellow-subjects with us of our glorious Queen Victoria, and they demand it of us, they require it of us, that we give them that which we consider the best thing we have—the Gospel of the Son of God."

Amongst the other speakers of the evening were Revs. A. A. Ramsey and Dr. Newman Hall. It was announced that a National Missionary Convention is to be held in London by the L.M.S. at the end of September, in the week preceding the Congregational Union's autumnal meetings at Brighton.

B. AND F. BIBLE SOCIETY.—No better illustration can be given of the width and the variety of the Bible Society's linguistic operations than a précis of the proceedings of the last meetings of the editorial sub-committee. There were more than ninety items. These included questions affecting versions or new editions in French, German, Polish (two versions), Italian, Latin, Rouman (two versions), Esthonian, (Reval), Georgian, Hebrew, Arabic, Pashtu, Persian, Urdu (three versions), Hindi, Hindustani (Dakhani), Manipuri, Lushai, Singpho, Bengali, Badaga, Khondi, Koi, Conkani, Tamil, Telugu, Malayalam, Tulu, Burmese, Karen, Chinese, Maori, Swahili, Yao, Malagasi, Maré, Uvea, Cree, and Dominican Patois. Several of these languages are entirely new incursions, as in many other cases, into linguistic regions hitherto unvisited, and which are now being peacefully annexed to the everlasting kingdom of Christ. One of the subjects of discussion was the preparation of a new reference Bible for the Christians of Madagascar.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MARCH 17.—ROM. XVI.

Salutations and Messages (1-16).—We learn the warmth and courtesy of Christian intercourse in this tender enumeration of names, with appropriate greetings. How careful was the Apostle to treasure up all kindness shown him. It is profitable to consider whether the Lord Jesus could speak thus of any of us. Does our name occur as readily to Him, and is it as sweet, as these names to the Apostle; may we appropriate such messages as these as coming from the lips of our beloved Master? Many of those mentioned are women. In those early days women were already beginning to realise the freedom of Christ's Gospel, emancipating them from the thrall of centuries, and giving them a sphere in the service of the Church.

Warnings (17-20).—Let us carefully ponder these words, and avoid all who introduce suspicion, jealousy, or strife into families or societies. It is so easy to be poisoned by the bitter words that some freely utter against their fellow Christians. Turn away from all whose speech and life are inconsistent with the Gospel. How glad the assurance that we may share in the victory of the woman's seed. All things are under our feet, even Satan himself, if we are in Christ. Let us ask the God of peace to make this our daily experience.

Concluding Words (21-27).—God's secret counsels are opened to us in the Gospel. Its root was in eternity, its flower is in time. It embodies the commandment of the eternal God, and is contained in the scriptures of the prophets and the preaching of the Gospel. It may be known only by those who are prepared to yield to it the obedience of faith. Let us give glory to God that we were ever permitted to know these glad tidings.

MONDAY, MARCH 18.—1 COR. I.

Our Calling (1-9).—We have been sanctified and set apart for God, in his purpose and in the person of our blessed Lord; and we are called to saintliness, i.e., to realise in our daily walk and conversation that ideal for which we have been apprehended. (5) For this great purpose we are enriched with everything. We may have nothing of our own to set before our poor friends who come to us, but our stores of speech and knowledge are filled from the Divine resources. We have received freely, let us freely give. (9) We have been called into partnership with Jesus. All that He has, is ours. Co-heirs with Him of the fulness of God, let us make more use of our inheritance.

The Cross of Christ (10-25).—Paul had no desire to make a party. His one aim was always Christ, the glory of his Master, whilst he chose for himself the cross. The cross here is not only the doctrine of the Atonement, but the humbling teaching of the crucifixion of the self-life. (17) We must preach Christ crucified in a crucified spirit. (18) The R.V. brings out very clearly that perishing and being saved are processes, as well as critical experiences. (22) These types of mind are present in every age, the one seeking the outward rite and impressive ceremonial, the other the gratification of mere intellectualism. Oh to have grace to remain true to the preaching and living of the Cross.

God's Choice (26-31).—It was the poor persecuted Church of the first three centuries that vanquished the might of Rome. (29) The boast of intellectualism, wealth, and honour is very ensnaring and captivating. We can only be rid of it by living in the presence of God, and by bringing thither the things of sense and time. Lo! how they wither in that atmosphere. (30) All our life should then be full of Christ. Everything we need, He is made unto us. Let us make more use of Him; our pride, our boast, our glory, being in what Jesus has become to us. If only He be glorified, we should be glad, though it cost us all that the world counts dear.

TUESDAY, MARCH 19.—1 COR. II.

Still the Cross (1-5).—Paul came to Corinth from Athens, where, if ever in his life, he appears to have studied excellency of speech and wisdom. But as he entered the elegant, fastidious, eloquence-loving Corinth, he appears to have deliberately determined that his theme should be the crucified Lord in the simplest phrase. What he taught orally the Holy Spirit demonstrated to the eye of the soul, and enforce with mighty cogency. So when we are speaking the truth as it is in Jesus, we may reckon on the co-ordinate work of the blessed Spirit of God.

The Hidden Wisdom (6-10).—The perfect are such as are full grown or matured in Christian experience. They need strong meat. For them there are secrets in the Gospel, blessed unveilings of the secret things of God, insight into the Divine wisdom, which the profoundest philosophy of man has never penetrated. Those who adopt the Apostle's programme should not be content with the simplicities of the Gospel, but should go on to know those deeper things, which evade clever men, but are made known to good ones by the Spirit of God, (9) These words must not be applied only to heaven. In their first meaning they are ours for to-day.

Two Types of Man (11-16).—The spiritual man is he whose spirit lies unveiled to the influences of the Spirit of God, playing freely over him. By a quick instinct, and through union with God, he knows the thoughts of God. He receives the Spirit of God, and through Him the hidden things of God are freely revealed. To the man who lives in perpetual fellowship with God, and puts in practice all he knows, there are no limits in knowledge or experience. (14) The natural man is altogether destitute of the life of God, and is conscious only of the play of natural instincts.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 20.—1 COR. III.

Carnal (1-9).—We may be in Christ, and yet be carnal, because the spirit, infilled and energised by the Divine Spirit, has not yet obtained complete mastery over us. (3) When jealousy and sectarian strife dominate our hearts, we are yet carnal. (5) The present divisions of the Church show the strength of its carnality. (6) It is not easy to learn this lesson, that the planter and waterer are just nothing at all, and that God is all. Let us think less of our own share in the great work of soul-saving, and let the perpetual cry go up to God for increase. (8) The work of character-building is one, though many hands are engaged in it, and each will get his own reward at last, which is something different from forgiveness and redemption. (9) Ah blessed partnership, let the Christian minister remember this fellowship for his comfort; and let us all yield ourselves to God's tillage and upbuilding.

The Test of Fire (10-17).—This paragraph has special teaching for Christian workers. Christ is the foundation of the Church, and we are engaged in building up its walls; every newly-saved soul is an addition to them; but how many apparent additions to the Church are as wood, hay, and stubble, which will not stand the test. When converts depend on the human teacher, rather than on the Divine word; when they do not confess Christ, or work for Him; when they are carried about by every wind of doctrine; they give every reason to suspect that they will not stand the ultimate test of fire. We may also apply this paragraph to our inner life. We are all engaged in character-building; mere opinions, crude undigested notions, speculations about various aspects of truth, which are not wrought into the obedience of the life, are wood, hay, stubble.

Ministry (18-23).—All things are bound to the foot of the throne by the chain of golden service. All things are ours in the sense in which Christ is God's; i.e., they serve us and execute for us blessed and useful ministries. All things serve the man who serves the true servant of God.

THURSDAY, MARCH 21.—1 COR. IV

Our Stewardship (1-5).—Our attitude should be to God, and to God only. We must not continually be looking askance to the world's estimate of ourselves and our work. We are called to be God's stewards, to be faithful to Him, to bring out of his storehouse things new and old. (3) There are four judgment bars mentioned here: you, man, that of conscience, and God's. (4) We may know nothing against ourselves, as tested by our own standard, but our standard itself may be faulty. (5) Let us live up to the light we have, assuming and boasting nought. Christ will estimate our service as it deserves, and his standard is not the success of this world, but faithfulness and sincerity.

The Refuse of the World (6-13).—Paul appealed from the estimate of his age to the judgment-seat of God. His contemporaries treated him and his fellow-apostles as the captives of a conqueror's triumph, led in captivity behind the triumphal car to death. He gives us an insight into the character of his life, so full of privation, toil, and scorn; and he hallows us to see the cause of his comfort and congratulation, that, amidst it all, his converts were becoming wise and strong.

The Kingdom of God (14-21).—There is a mysterious power in those who are possessed of the Spirit of God, which does not show itself in the words they utter, but the force they exert. We expend ourselves in words. We generate true force only when we are under the kingship of Christ, and wait in silence till He bids us speak. (21) The rod is needed sometimes, but we may by our amendment make it unnecessary. Then for us the love and tenderness of our Lord.

FRIDAY, MARCH 22.—1 COR. V.

A Grievous Sin (1-8).—A son appears to have married one who had been his father's second wife, and this had been permitted by the church. The apostle felt that some notice must be taken of so flagrant an act of immorality, which was likely to infect the whole Church. He therefore conceived of himself as present in the convocation of this little Christian community, and as consigning the offending member to the operation of any disease that Satan might inflict. Better thus than that the spirit should be irreparably injured. (6) As the Jews cleansed their home of leaven at the Feast of the Passover, so should we put out of heart, life, and church the leaven of evil. The present age is one long feast, consequent on the death of the great Paschal Lamb. How beautiful the thoughts suggested by the Passover, and the emancipation from Egypt, as read in the light of the Gospel.

Our Companionships (9-13).—It is impossible to avoid contact with the evil of the world; we must go in and out about our daily business. Besides these are not sinning against so much light, as those who profess Christ. For the latter we can have no mercy. If a brother is covetous, or a drunkard, we must beware of him. God will judge those that are without, but we must judge those that are within the circle of the Church. The most rigorous excision of the offending member is the one hope of saving the gangrene eating right through the body (Matt. v. 29, 30).

SATURDAY, MARCH 23.—1 COR. VI.

Going to Law (1-8).—The apostle's judgment is clear against fellow Christians going to law. He advises that all matters in dispute be brought before the church for arbitration. It was his fixed belief that, according to the Master's word, the presence of the Spirit gave a dignity and insight to the assembled saints, which imparted to their decisions validity and weight. We must never forget that one sign of the Spirit's operation on such a board is absolute unanimity. Some day the saints are to be associated with their Lord in the judgment of fallen angels; surely, then, they are not incompetent for the task of judgment. Better bear wrong than do wrong.

Such were Some of You (9-11).—Washed in the blood; sanctified by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit; justified in the name and righteousness of the blessed Lord, and because we stand in his finished work. What a contrast this to our former state. And there is no one so degraded that may not rise to share our blessed standing.

The Law of Christian Purity (12-20).—We can only wield power over others when we possess it over ourselves, and we must sometimes forego things which are legitimate but not necessary in order to keep our body under, and render it the fit vehicle of the Spirit of Christ. To remember that the body is for the Lord to use and keep, that the resurrection power is within our reach for its quickening and sanctification, that we are one with the living Saviour, that our nature has been purchased by precious blood, and is the temple of the Holy Ghost—these sacred considerations are in the highest degree conducive to purity.

THE CHICAGO WOMAN'S CLUB has decided that coloured women are as eligible as white women on the same terms. Miss Willard stated in a public meeting in Boston recently that if this action were not taken, she should withdraw her membership from the club. It is the largest woman's club in the United States, and one of the most influential.

A CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIAN WORKERS is arranged to be held during April at the Bible Institute in Chicago, Ill. It is proposed to devote the whole month to a special course on the various methods of personal work and to Bible study. The latter is to include Old Testament prophecy, with Isaiah and Jeremiah as a basis, and the Acts and Epistles. The evenings are to be employed in studying the missionary activities of the city.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

MARCH 24.

PURITY OF LIFE.—Rom. xiii. 8-14.

GOLDEN TEXT, 1 Thess. v. 22.

FAITH in Christ not only changes a man's attitude towards God, and secures the blessing of present pardon, but also changes his conduct towards men. Christianity is a creed, hence its first demand is faith; but it is a creed that leads to a life. Faith is no mere assent to a set of opinions, but a living union with Christ, and this union bears fruit in a Christ-like life.

(8-10) What we "ought" to do to another is what we "owe" him. It is a debt, and cannot be ignored without guilt. Some debts are easily discharged. One payment of the amount demanded releases us finally from that obligation. Here is a debt (8) that is perpetual. The obligation does not cease when we begin to love. Indeed, the more we love, the stronger becomes the claim to love, and the greater the capacity to respond to it. It is a debt in the payment of which we are not impoverished. He who gives love finds that he has more love to give. It is he who gives none that has none.

For only while we share we keep
That blest thing from above;
Ceasing to give, we cease to have—
Such is the law of love.

What we ought to do the law has declared (9). The apostle quotes substantially the second table of the law. All the commands are negative. They forbid certain things that would injure. The solemn circumstances surrounding their first promulgation (Exod. xix., xx) were calculated to impress the minds of the people, and prompted them to promise obedience. Their subsequent history proves that the law has power to demand, but cannot secure obedience.

But love triumphs where law fails. Each of these three verses closes with substantially the same statement. He who loves keeps the law. The command forbidding him to injure another, and the threatened punishment for disobedience, are not needful where love is active. A true mother does not care for her child because she is commanded to do so. Her love prompts her to do, not less, but more than law could require. So the Gospel brings us into participation with the love of Christ, and so renders obedience not only our duty but our delight.

And this love does not restrict itself to a few who are like minded with ourselves. "Our neighbour," as interpreted by the parable of the Good Samaritan, is everyone who comes within the range of our influence. Does this life seem beyond us? Not when Christ, in the presence of the Holy Spirit, lives and loves in us.

11-14.—To understand these words it is needful to remember the surroundings of the Christians in Rome. "The night" refers to the ignorance, and vice, and wretchedness of the people of pagan Rome. "Rioting," etc. (13), exactly describe the kind of life the people lived. The nearness of "the day" (11, 12) refers to the uncertainty of life, and the possibility of persecution speedily introducing them to the presence of God. The call is to walk in the "light" as the best way of resisting the darkness. And the power to do this consists in "putting on the Lord Jesus Christ" (14)—not as we put on a garment, but as the trees at spring time put on their garment of green. The life is within them; their equipment comes when the surrender to this in-dwelling life is complete.

The story of Augustine's conversion constitutes the most forcible and practical exposition of these words. In his youth he yielded to grossest sin, and adopted any opinions that seemed to justify or excuse his sin. His mother continued to pray for him, godly friends sought to warn and instruct him, and God by his Spirit strove with him. When in Milan, where he heard the preaching of Ambrose, he became the subject of deep conviction. In the bitterness of his spirit he cried out to God for delivery from his uncleanness, when the voice of a child in a neighbouring house said, "Take up and read." Checking his tears, he turned to the volume of Paul's epistles, and read verses 13 and 14 of our lesson. He adds: "No further could I read, nor needed I; for instantly, by a serene light infused into my soul, all the darkness of doubt vanished away."

THE MALAGASY PEOPLE are very fond of money. They love it, and long to possess as much of it as possible. But the love of Christ proves stronger than the love of money sometimes; and Mr. Huckett, writing from Fianarantsoa, in the south of Madagascar, mentions that during a week of special meetings, the native Christians of that town raised £125 for mission work. This sum means for them about what five times the amount does for British or American Christians.

For the Young.

A MESSAGE FROM THE SEA.

SOME time ago a sad story of the sea reached us through the pages of our daily newspapers, which brought tenderly home to us the truth that love and faith are undying.

"Whoever picks this up shall know the Caller Ou was run down by an unknown steamer." This was deciphered, after careful examination, written in pencil on one side of a batten cast up on the beach at Kilnsea. On the other side could be traced the tender words,

"May the dear Lord comfort my poor mother! The Caller Ou is run down by an unknown steamer.—DAWSON. No more time! (Sinking.)"

Who had sent this sad message from the sea? It did not take long for the shipping agents to find out, when once the fatal news was made known through the papers. On a dull dark morning of November 19, 1891, the barque Caller Ou left Hull. Young Dawson kissed his mother "good-bye." "I shall soon be back again; don't fret, mother," were his cheery words as he left her, noting the tears filling her eyes, and how white her lips turned at the parting. Thus he left her, and took his place as an apprentice on board the Caller Ou. Away sailed the barque, every heart beating high with hope on board her. She sailed away into nothingness, for from that fatal morning no tidings were heard of her until the message written in pencil was found by a coastguard on January 9, 1893. Who had written it?

Very soon the answer came. "I know the lad," said the head master of the Trinity House School, Hull. "It is that nice intelligent fellow, Dawson," turning to his wife, as he read the particulars in his morning newspaper. "I remember what a fancy he had for going to sea, and how nothing would put it out of his head. He left the school without a stain on his character. He came to me the day before he embarked, looking so smart and bright. I must write to the shipowners, my dear, and ask them to allow me to run down and see if I can identify the writing on the batten."

"You may be mistaken," replied his wife, "and start on a wild-goose errand." But the master had made no mistake; he recognised the writing on the piece of wood, and thus added certainty to the fears of the heart-broken mother.

And now we must fill up the bare outlines of the sad story. Thirteen months after the vessel had left port the boy's message came to tell the people on shore how it was lost and how he died. We can imagine the storm and the tempest, the wild strife betwixt wind and wave, the blackness of the lowering sky, the boiling rage of the angry sea as it threatened to swallow up the frail barque, and its freight of precious lives. Perhaps some of the seamen were washed overboard or maimed by splintered wood and falling spars. White as death, but still fearless, our lad Dawson must have stood, for we find in the midst of the scene which might have appalled a stouter heart, he was able to think of God and of others.

To add to the horror of the scene the looming shape of a swift oncoming steamer could be clearly discerned, bearing straight down on the ill-fated Caller Ou, threatening instant destruction! The boy had just time to seize upon the thin strip of wood, the only thing on which he could lay his hands that would float. Sailor like, he first wrote up his log, the last entry he could make, and recorded the running down of the barque. Then he found he had another moment or two before his ship went down, and the strong young heart went upwards to God and homewards to his mother. He was standing on the very brink of Eternity, and yet he could think of the LORD, and of the Lord's comfort, and he knew enough of prayer to find it no strange thing in the hour of death and time of danger to flash his heart-need up to God. He had just time to write down his faith in God, and a prayer for the dear mother whose tender eyes, full of tears, had followed him all the voyage through. "No more time! (Sinking.)" The boy was about to cross the threshold of death, but he was calm enough to put an explanatory word in parenthesis, and he in the glory and dawn of life!

What do you think, boys? What gave him calmness and peace at that awful moment? Must it not have been a steady hope in the sure salvation of Jesus Christ and strong faith in the God who had redeemed him from all evil? That little piece of wood, the batten of the barque Caller Ou, is a wonderful monument, far more precious than bronze and marble tablets, because it enshrines the story of simple trust. You may depend upon it nothing helps us in the day of danger or the hour of death but the knowledge that we are safe because Jesus died; then, and only then, can we calmly face death and think lovingly of others, sending them sweet messages of hope and comfort from the very borderland itself. EVA TRAVERS EVERED POOLE.

THE MISUSED WOODCHOPPER.

"BUT I can't help being angry, mother!"

One could see that Tom was very angry; his eyes flashed, his face was flushed, and the words he was addressing to his little sister were very unpleasant. Mary had certainly been tiresome, and she had managed to upset Tom's toy engine, doing it some damage.

"I am sorry you cannot help being angry," said his mother, taking up the broken toy, "but come with me. I think I can mend this."

"Oh, mother, you are good," and with another nasty look at his little sister, he marched off with mother to the kitchen.

"Look here, Tom!" said she, "on second thoughts, you had better mend this yourself. Here is the wood-chopper; give it two or three good blows, that will put it right."

"Mother!" cried Tom. He could not believe his ears. "Not the wood-chopper! that would break it all to pieces. You are surely making fun."

"I am no more making fun than you were two minutes ago, when you were using Anger, the wood-chopper of your mind, to Mary. Sit down here, please, and listen to me. You dealt a heavy blow with it on your friendship with her, trying your whole strength to destroy it. You struck at my respect for you as you said 'you could not help' using it, thus making confession of your sad lack of self-control. And your own peace of mind, I see, has been hurt by your needless strokes. Shame to say you had no other tool than Anger at your disposal. You have a whole chestful, Tom, at your command. Did you not think of trying Patience? Where was your Forbearance? had you lent that out—and could Soft Answers not be found? Did not Gentle Remonstrance lie ready to your hand? But you must clutch at this Anger to spoil everything! Keep it my son, for its right use! When you hear evil speaking, when you see cruelty, when you learn of injustice, when you know of cheating among your companions, use it wisely and well; it is a weapon to fight the enemies of your soul. But your dear little sister, never!"

Tom's tears were tears of repentance, and before he went to bed his cheeks were sealed with kisses of forgiveness. He lay awake for a long time rearranging his tool-chest, placing certain of its furniture handy for daily use, that up till now had not been in much demand. Many of the things were rusty, and these he promised to himself to put into better order. But when he slept he slept soundly. W. MAIN.

DRIFTS AMONG BAPTISTS is the title of a posthumous article by Dr. A. J. Gordon, in The Watchman. He noted a tendency to ritualism in some churches and said: "Ritualism, like eczema in the human body, is generally the symptom of a low state of the blood. As a rule, the church when it becomes secularised becomes ritualised. A revived Christianity breaks from a ritual as inevitably as formal Christianity takes one on. A secularised ministry always tends to dress up in clergy-clothes; a revived ministry always instinctively undresses itself of traditional vestments and puts on the working garb."

World-wide Evangelisation.

Has it not been well ordered that the intended large meetings for united prayer proposed to have been held in the Great Assembly Hall in the east of London have been postponed, in order that the repairing and painting of the hall may immediately provide some work for the unemployed, for the postponement can give opportunities for the multiplication of many smaller meetings throughout London? When we consider the enormous amounts spent on places of worship in Britain and our low state of aggressive Christianity, is it not time for every one of us who is a follower of Christ to consider our ways and pray to be filled with the Holy Ghost and to bring forth the fruit of the Holy Spirit?

Christianity in our day is set on a hill. It cannot be hid. Is it too much to say if all of us who profess to be believers were filled with the Spirit whose fruit should be such love, peace, and joy as would be accompanied by irrepressible utterance, the Church throughout the world would be in a glorious state of rapidly spreading, and in every country of the globe the Gospel would soon run and be glorified?

It is not money we need, nor are we in the least dependent on great buildings or on great gatherings, but "by my Spirit saith the Lord of Hosts." At the present juncture of this painting, etc., let us every one stand still and look up to the Lord to see the salvation of God.

How blessed as one consequence if, say, a hundred to a thousand fresh little prayer meetings should at once spring up all over London, even if these counted but three persons each, or even two persons, and if in a number of cases there came but one person, and that one a woman, like that other woman who prayed for her daughter, and to whom Christ replied, "O woman, great is thy faith, be it unto thee even as thou wilt" (Matt. xv. 28); or if in some place there came but two children, and they but two little believing girls, and one of these said to the other, "Has not our Jesus said, 'Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings Thou hast perfected praise'?" (Matt. xxi. 16); and then they both sobbed in each other's arms and said, "I wish God would stop all fathers and mothers getting drunk all over London." Then might not the two kneel, and with arms round each other say, "Our Father in heaven, do bless my own dear father and my own dear mother for Christ's sake."

What a sight it will be for the angels to look over the battlements of heaven down upon London, a place that has been doubly dear to some of us since 1859-60, and now in 1895 should see a multiplication of thousands of little prayer meetings set agoing throughout our capital by the mighty moving of God the Holy Spirit, and this, too, before ever the painters, rightly provided with work in these hard times, can get through their task, and then that we should gather with joy and gratitude in the Assembly Hall and in divers other places also.

We are apt to look back to the Lord's working about 1859-60. But we must never forget that that was a time prefaced and attended as is believed by an abounding increase of closet and social prayer. But does not God say, "Prove Me in 1895 if I will not open the windows of heaven now so that there shall not be room enough to receive it." He! Who? The All mighty can pour us out such a blessing as that there shall not be room enough to receive it.

Let us—I write it with deep humility—prove Him in London and throughout Christendom. Christendom needs it, Mohammedanism needs it, Judaism needs it, heathenism needs it, cannibalism needs it, and perhaps Christianity most of all needs it, for Christianity has very much forsaken its first century practice of abounding prayer and of every Christian being an active disseminator of the precious glad Gospel—not Apostles only, but every believer. We might well weep for poor London and be cast down, were it not that the Holy Spirit would rather that we take hold of the arm of our Almighty Father, and plead for a glorious Pentecostal outpouring of the Spirit.

LOCKSFIELDS MISSION CHAPEL.

"This is not a socialistic club, but a salvation centre." Thus tersely and tellingly did the energetic missioner at Locksfields, Rev. H. T. Meakin, in the course of an interview I had with him last week, sum up the aims and objects of an extensive work. By way of illustrating his meaning he added:—"We go in for winning sinners to Christ; we are content with nothing short of conversion. When a man, or a woman either, is born again there is hope; till then, we may spend pains and toil in seeking to raise them, only to reap disappointment in the end. Thank God, scarce a service is held in this place at which some are not found convicted of sin and seeking peace."

Locksfields is a branch of the South London Wesleyan Mission, a mission which is doing at four important centres in Southwark, Walworth, and Bermondsey evangelistic work similar to that of the West London or East London Missions. The whole operations over S.E. London are full of interest; but to avoid diffusiveness, I confine myself to Locksfields. Five years ago, when this mission was started, the cause had dwindled to small proportions. Now all is changed, through the efforts of Mr. Meakin and his helpers, amongst whom Mr. J. O. Bairstow and Miss Crossley should be specially mentioned. Mr. Meakin is evidently a man called and qualified of God for this special work, into which he threw himself after twenty-one years' service with a large railway company. His whole conversation reveals one animated by an intense faith in the Gospel, and by a genuine passion for souls. Moreover, he knows the people and their difficulties, and can adapt himself to them. A good example of this adaptation may be found in his a remarkable service held each Friday evening. When he first came into the work he found the place well-nigh empty and the people he wished to reach mostly outside. Walking along, musing over this, he observed how the poorest would stand to look at pictures. The thought struck him, "They love pictures. I must win them thus." He learned photography, got permission from the Graphic and Illustrated London News to copy their pictures, and commenced week by week to reproduce these, showing them by means of a magic lantern, and turning everything into an illustration of higher truth, "using," as he says, "the common things in which people are interested to set forth the Gospel." The thing took; and the people coming on Friday soon learned to come on Sunday. How useful this proved is thus shown:—One women's class has 111 members, two-thirds of these first came as careless outsiders, to see the pictures; then they came on the Lord's Day; and by-and-bye were won to the Saviour. Many who were formerly the worst of characters are now leading new lives. Mr. Meakin himself feels strongly that in utilising such an agency great wisdom is needed—it would be quite easy for the social and political interest to submerge the spiritual teaching to be conveyed.

SAVED FROM SUICIDE.

Here is one instance from many such:—"A poor young woman, tired of struggling against illness and poverty, had resolved on ending her weary life by suicide. On her way to the river, she was arrested by seeing a bill announcing Special Mission Services. She turned into the chapel, and there the Holy Spirit spoke to her, and led her to rest and peace in Christ. One of our sisters, who was sent to visit and counsel her, found her humbly trusting in her Saviour, and deeply sorry for her impatience under the trials of life. Her husband, who was steady and industrious, was out of work and dispirited. He was not then converted, but was induced also to come to the Mission. After one of the Sunday night services he went into the inquiry room and found peace with God. Both are now consistent Christians, though they still live on pitifully small means; they are earnestly following in the footsteps of the Lord Jesus Christ. We are pleased beyond words to notice the real growth in grace of this young couple."

The result of the various aggressive efforts is that the chapel is crowded to the doors on Sunday evenings—although it was recently enlarged—and that at least 5000 people pass through the mission premises every week, each one coming under Christian influence in one way or another. A splendid band of voluntary workers have gathered round, the vast majority having been saved on the spot. These give themselves to visitation, work of various kinds, and above all (led by a strong band) to open-air testimony, whereby many have been won.

There is a large and flourishing work among the children as well as among the adults, and God has greatly blessed the efforts made for the young folks.

Speaking at the recent anniversary, Rev. H. Price Hughes said that Locksfields was at one time described as the white elephant of London Methodism which they could neither feed nor keep. The success of Mr. Meakin had been a stimulus and inspiration to tens of thousands in various parts of the country. He must say that the congregation before him was one of the most gratifying sights he had seen in his life. They had the working-class there and no mistake. They were not shoved away into the back seats but swarmed all over the place.

Statistics are often dry reading, but the following are pregnant with meaning:—

Apart from the more direct evangelistic work—though all is made to tell to the same end—there is a great amount of social and helpful effort. Indeed amid pressing poverty this is imperative. I found the missioner immersed in correspondence, every case put before him is carefully gone into, and pains taken to do the things most needed. So, many unemployed, have been aided, distressed and deserted wives and despairing widows relieved and set on their feet. The sick, the blind, the aged are helped in various ways. Besides, for the winter distress, there are free breakfasts to destitute children (four times a week), the soup-kitchen, and similar relief agencies. Numberless are the stories the missioner has to tell of families saved from the direst despair and helped into work.

"LIVING ON THE PAWNSHOP,"

Amongst his correspondence were also letters of the following type:—An aged father wrote from a seaside town bewailing his prodigal son, lost in a London slum, and imploring that he should be sought out. He was sought for, found in a sad state, and by the blessing of God led to the Saviour, together with his wife. As Mr. Meakin comments: "All our efforts do not end so happily, but many do."

Thus I have touched a few salient points in what is described as a "converting agency, everything being made subservient to that." What I have mentioned is sufficient to awaken wide sympathy with such service in a poor and populous district. Apart from mere denominational concern, the whole work at Locksfields is of the deepest interest to all who seek the evangelisation of the teeming population of our mighty metropolis. The responsible missioner at this centre is Rev. H. T. Meakin, whose address is 18, Ossory-road, Old Kent-road, S.E.

IKWEZI LAMACI MISSION.—Writing on Feb. 5, Rev. S. Aitchison says:—"You will rejoice with us that the Word is being 'preached with signs following.' We hope soon to have six schools in operation, which will mean about 140 children under instruction. The Christian reaches us regularly, and is most helpful to ourselves and to others to whom we pass it on."

Rev. John Calvert.

A few words about the place in which Mr. Calvert has laboured for thirty-seven years may fitly introduce our biographical sketch of himself. It is called Attercliffe, and forms now the principal manufacturing quarter of Sheffield. Enormous furnaces, belching flame and smoke, tower aloft; smaller furnaces pour forth their blinding clouds close to the passenger; a kind of grittiness is on everything you touch; dust and smoke threaten sometimes to choke you. No man would choose to live there who sought comfort or quietness or pleasant scenes. That any man should voluntarily have made it the field of his labours for the whole of his life, may well appear an evidence of warm love and of strong faith. Certainly it has its compensations in the people, as we shall see, and few men can say that they have had more to encourage them than has Mr. Calvert.

This strange region of furnaces, mills, and factories; of rows of working-men's houses; and its one main road filled with shops and public-houses, was once a lovely village and a seat of sacred learning. The first Congregational or Independent Church was gathered by Matthew Bloome, one of the assistant ministers of Sheffield Parish Church, who, together with the then vicar and the other two assistant ministers, was ejected in 1662 from his position by the Act of Uniformity. Life went hardly with the faithful man, and he had to eke out his living by engaging in secular work. His congregation held together for some years after his death, and then dwindled altogether away. In 1686 another ejected minister, Richard Frankland, settled in the place, bringing with him some students for the ministry. A brave man, as well as learned, was Frankland, for when in London he sought and obtained an audience of Charles II., and enjoined him "to reform your life, your family, your kingdom, and the Church"—adding an impressive warning. The king promised to do what he could, and thanked Frankland for his words.

In the humble academy thus begun and continued by others for many years some of the best of the ministers of the last century were trained, among them being Joshua Bayes, expositor of the Epistle to the Galatians in Matthew Henry's Commentary; Dr. Samuel Wright, expositor of the Epistle of James; and Dr. John Evans, expositor of the Epistle to the Romans, pronounced by Dr. Doddridge to be the best commentary on that Epistle in our language. There was also Thomas Bradbury, thought by Rev. Giles Hester, of Sheffield, to be "in many features of his character, and in many attributes of his ministry, the Charles H. Spurgeon of the last century."

Of those times of earnest godliness the Independent Church is the child. It had, however, waned sadly in power when Mr. Calvert came to it, there being only some forty members, their combined means not being able to give him more than £80 a year as an income. But there was a living root of faith. Mr. Calvert had studied at Rotherham College, which was only a few miles off, and had become known to the congregation, among whom was a band of devout women. These having conceived a strong persuasion that he was the right man to be their pastor, waited constantly upon God to grant them their hearts' desire and send him. His health not being strong he had to leave college before completing his full term of study, and, by one means and another, their prayer was answered. Very likely one chief reason for his coming was his own modesty, which saw in a church so small and so poor a field of labour he judged to be not too much for his powers.

Although his feeble health prevented him from becoming a successful student in the common acceptation of the term, it did not prevent him from exercising in the college, among his fellow students, a most powerful godly influence. His name was the synonym for prayerfulness of spirit and consecration of life, and long after he had left, his peculiar power seemed to linger about the place; indeed, he may be said never to have left at all, for his nearness to the place enabled him to see much both of the students and professors, and over both alike he had a charm. If devout and zealous men have gone forth from that college he had no small share in moulding and inspiring them.

His own church was a bright example of what may be done by wise, patient, believing work; by unceasing prayer, and by consistent conduct. It grew in numbers so greatly that the old chapel had to be pulled down and a larger one built in its place. The fifty members who invited him to the pastorate have grown to more than four hundred, and the congregation to well on to a thousand. One feature of the place has been the large number who have gone forth to settle in other lands, thus carrying the good seed with them. The Sunday-school has 634 scholars, and there is a branch church under the charge of one of the deacons.

Mr. Calvert has always encouraged evangelistic or revival work in his congregation; he has never thought that his ministry alone was sufficient to meet every need. From time to time he has sought the services of accredited men and women, who have been called of God to go from place to place, and on the whole the result has been good. Knowing the peculiarities of the neighbourhood, he has wisely kept a guiding hand on affairs. If a helping brother was not discreet in his management of meetings, Mr. Calvert has quietly interposed and given things a new trend; gentle courage and prompt decision never being lacking when the occasion required.

Young persons have always found in him a tender and sympathetic friend; his heart yearns towards the helpless and sorrowful. He has a rare gift, born apparently of his thoughtfulness, and love, of letter writing. Times of joy as well as of sorrow afford him the desired opportunity of sending some loving greeting. Birthdays, success in some important enterprise, changes in life, the well-doing of a child, as well as losses and disappointments, become occasions for the manifestation of his pastoral solicitude. These letters are sometimes treasured for years.

Labouring among working-men, Mr. Calvert has acquired an intimate knowledge of their vices and virtues, of the difficulties and dangers of their work, and of the methods by which they may be aided. His has never been a coddling ministry, but one calculated to develop independence of character and manliness of behaviour. He has been an unsparing enemy of the drinking and gambling habits which work such harm. His preaching has always had a strong ethical vein, while never lacking in a clear and affectionate statement of the Evangelical verities. Faith and works have been happily joined in his teaching and practice; and no doubt this vigorous moral tone has been agreeable rather than otherwise to the hardy men who compose so large a portion of his congregation.

Mr. Blackham's work in the P.S.A. movement early won his sympathy, and his own P.S.A. contains 700 members. Whatever use others may have made of it, he has never ceased to use it, and that successfully, for the salvation of souls. His willing band of workers visit in a regular and systematic way every house within a given radius, and nothing is left undone to counteract evil temptations. In times of depression of trade, and in questions in dispute between men and masters, Mr. Calvert has been an active power for good.

The tender regard in which his people held him has often been displayed. For instance, when his health was very low they insisted on his taking a year's rest, while they promised to see that his income was the same as usual, that his pulpit was supplied with suitable preachers, and that all the work of the place was carried on as if he were present. On his return he found the church in a more flourishing condition than he had ever seen it before. The blessing of God had been granted on their love.

Three years ago they eased his burdens by providing him with aco-pastor, Rev. W. A. Guttridge, M.A., formerly of Cambridge, to whom (so Mr. Guttridge says) he is both fatherly and brotherly, a loyal senior colleague, taking a real interest in his welfare, and seeking to open for him a path of usefulness. Again and again, when he has felt below his work, he has offered to resign his post, but his faithful people will never hear of it. He is now away in the South of France, seeking fresh strength, which we hope he will find.

His friends in Sheffield are to be found in all churches, and among all classes, for he has never been denominational in spirit. A Baptist brother writes:—"I would that all those who are sceptically asking the question, 'Is Christianity played out?' could be induced to come and spend a few weeks at Attercliffe and attend Zion Chapel. Surely the question would be answered by a strong and decisive negative. In this congregation the poor have the Gospel preached to them. Here young men are taught wisdom, and old men gain comfort. Here the critics may see Christianity planted in the heart and not played out of the life. Here politics are baptized into the spirit of religion, and religion used to illuminate politics."

BIBLE WORK IN JAPAN.

BY REV. H. LOOMIS.

Some four months ago I made a visit to southern Japan, and found so much of interest and encouragement that in December it was repeated. On arriving at Hiroshima it was evident that an attempt ought to be made at once to supply with the Scriptures the thousands of soldiers who were quartered in the garrison and other parts of the city, many of whom must be reached soon, if ever, with the Gospel. On Sunday, finding great numbers walking about the streets, I took a basket filled with copies of Gospels, and rode about giving them to all the soldiers whom I met. With but few exceptions they were received with evident pleasure and interest. Many expressed sincere thanks, and some of them told me they were Christians. In this way more than a thousand portions were distributed in the course of an hour and a half.

The work was continued for three days, and the result was, that with some help from others, more than 4000 portions of the Bible were thus placed in the hands of the soldiers at a most opportune time to secure their interest and do them good. It was especially fortunate that the work was begun on the Sabbath, as on Monday night several thousand left for the seat of war.

The most remarkable event of the trip was the result of a visit to a man who is one of the assistant secretaries to the Cabinet and an earnest Christian. On hearing of the work already done he expressed his hearty approval, and volunteered to send to the men and officers in the navy whatever donation of the Scriptures might be made. He promised to forward them by one of the supply vessels to a Christian officer on board of the flag ship, and this officer would distribute them to all the ships in the fleet. We have sent 2000 Gospels and fifty New Testaments to be distributed in this way.

Since my return to Yokohama some of the missionaries and native helpers have continued the work of Scripture distribution in Hiroshima, and have met with great encouragement.

Upon application, permission was given me to visit the hospitals at Nagoya, Osaka, and Hiroshima where the sick and wounded Chinese are kept. Copies of the Chinese Scriptures were supplied to such as could read, and they were received with evident pleasure. I have since been to the Red Cross Hospital in Tokyo, where there were about thirty Chinese. At my request Dr. McCartee accompanied me; and as he had spent some thirty years in China he was able to converse with many of them in their own language. Opportunity was given to explain the object of our visit, and also tell them something about Christianity. The men listened with the deepest interest, and received with expressions of gratitude the books that were given. Three of the number were Mohammedans, but they were apparently quite as glad to get a copy of one of the Gospels as any of the rest. In all cases the same care and attention is given to these prisoners as is bestowed upon their own people. I was told by the chief surgeon at the military hospital that artificial limbs are to be supplied by the Empress to both the Chinese and Japanese soldiers alike. Most of these Chinamen belong to the coolie class, and but few of them are able to read. They are greatly surprised at the kindness which they have received, and under the circumstances they have great reason to be thankful.

I am satisfied that this charity on the part of the Japanese is something more than a formal and outward show of generosity toward their enemies; and that the Japanese are hearty and genuine in this matter. From what I have actually witnessed I am disposed to discount very largely the reports that have been circulated in regard to what occurred at the capture of Port Arthur.

Having found the vice-commander of the Tokyo Division very friendly to my work among the prisoners, I ventured to ask if permission could be obtained to distribute Scriptures among the Japanese soldiers also. He answered very promptly, "I have the authority, and willingly grant such permission among these who belong to this division." Then he proposed, as there were 1000 wounded and sick men in the hospitals, who had nothing to occupy their minds, that they should be supplied first.

When I asked for the same privileges among the soldiers of the Imperial Guard I was informed that it would not only be given, but the Commander-in-Chief, Prince Komatsu (who is a cousin of the Emperor, and has since been made head of all the army), had designated an hour when he would receive me at the Palace. I was met by Colonel Sameshima, the chief of the staff, and military adviser, and presented by him to the Prince. He received me very kindly, and expressed both his approval and thanks for the work which the Bible Societies are doing. The Imperial Guard are the select men from all over Japan, and Colonel Sameshima remarked that it is the ambition of both officers and men that they shall be the models for all the soldiers in the country.

Finding so much favour, I then went to the War Department and requested from General Kodama, the Vice Minister of War, a permit to visit all the garrisons in Japan and supply the men with copies of the Gospels. This was at once granted. The details were not then settled, but letters have since been furnished to the commanding officers of each division instructing them both to permit my visitation, and also give me such assistance as I should require. I have also been provided with such a list of the location of the soldiers and the numbers in each place as will enable me to do the work readily and efficiently.

In connection with the work of Bible distribution in Tokyo regular Christian services have been established in one of the barracks, and there will be preaching in another place also on Saturday next.

The War Department has intimated that there is no objection on the part of the Government to Christian teaching, and it is simply left to the local commanders to decide whether it may be done or not.

Thus far about 30,000 Gospels and Testaments have been distributed. On February 1 20,000 more are to be completed for the supply of the Imperial Guard; 40,000 more are to be ready by February 10, and in the course of about a month more we hope to be able to place a copy of some portion of the Scriptures in the hands of every soldier and sailor in Japan, and a considerable portion of those now in China.

Hitherto the work of the Bible societies and all missionary bodies has been looked upon by many of the people as an intrusion that was without official sanction and simply tolerated. Now it is placed on an entirely different basis; which in a country like this marks the beginning of a new era in all Christian work. From this time on hundreds and thousands of the young men of Japan will no longer be restrained from the study of God's Word by military or other restrictions, and permission will be to them the evidence that the religion of Jesus Christ is approved by the highest authorities in the land.

Some have surmised that the Government anticipate announcing that Christianity is henceforth to be the State religion, but such a step is hardly to be expected at this period of the nation's history. All that the Christian workers in Japan should ask, and all that the most of them desire, is to be given full liberty to preach Christ as the only guide and Saviour to all classes, and then leave the seed of divine truth to spring up and develop its fruit in the renewed and sanctified hearts and lives of the people.

THE STUNDISTS.—The Friend states that Edmund Wright Brooks and Thomas William Marsh had a satisfactory interview, on the 17th ult. at St. Petersburg, with the Emperor and the Empress of Russia, at which they had the opportunity to present the memorial on behalf of religious liberty from the Meeting for Sufferings. We shall be exceedingly thankful if this interview may have some effect in staying the hand of persecution against those who are suffering in Russia for conscience sake.

THE LATE DR. GORDON.

MR. MOODY'S TRIBUTE.

The following hearty tribute to the memory of the late Dr. A. J. Gordon appears in the New York Independent:—

San Antonio, Tex., February 10, 1895.

In the death of Dr. Gordon we have lost a wise counsellor, a respected teacher, and a true and beloved friend. It would be impossible to measure the good that has been accomplished in the Northfield and Chicago schools and summer conferences through his instrumentality, and eternity alone will reveal the depth and breadth of this man's influence on thousands of souls throughout the world.

Especially remarkable and significant is the fact that the last address Dr. Gordon gave in Northfield was upon the Resurrection. The audience which he addressed was the largest that has ever been gathered there, and the words of blessing and comfort to the many hundreds of bereaved ones present were like bread cast upon the waters which have now returned as a comfort to us who loved him and mourn over his departure. Next summer we shall hope to have his sermon, which was published at the time, read as a memorial service that will be held in his memory.

My first personal relations with Dr. Gordon began during the special evangelistic work carried on in Boston during the winter of 1877. At that time Mr. Henry Durant, Dr. Gordon and myself were brought together in after-meetings and prayer-meetings, and a friendship was cemented which became stronger and more helpful each year of their lives, and now adds still more attractions to the "Home Land."

Dr. Gordon was one of those men whom it was a blessing and privilege to know. His life's work and lasting influence are in themselves more eloquent tributes to his memory than mortal eulogy. In him we saw not so much the man as the reflection of One whom he loved above all else, and served with untiring energy; and in his presence "We took knowledge of him that he had been with Jesus."

By his life we were strengthened and helped; let us by his death be inspired to work more faithfully in the cause of our common Master.

CHINESE AT PRAYER.

Dear Sir,—This week (the native new year) our Chinese friends are giving themselves afresh to the study of seeking after God. All through the week earnest thought is given to the critical condition of their country. To-day, this subject was specially in the minds of all.

Rev. Mr. Parker, of Mongolia, appropriately gave an account of a great rising and trouble in Mongolia, by which many lives were lost, and great damage was done; in the end it turned out to the furtherance of the Gospel. News was brought that at a neighbouring city, Changchiu, strong opposition had been raised to a missionary's house being built in the city. Earnest prayer was offered on the subject. News of a more encouraging nature came from another quarter of the field in the opening of a city named Eng-chun, where opposition long existed.

It is observable that our native friends are really capable of deep earnestness, especially when questions arise in which great interests are at stake. The Christians are the hope of China. Oh, may they see both their opportunity and responsibility. To-day news was circulated to the effect that the Chinese had won a victory over the Japanese. We do not know if this is correct. In some minds there is a strong feeling that Europeans in authority may secure great advantages in connection with the humbling China has received.—Yours,

Amoy, Jan. 30. J. Sadler.

ROCHESTER.—Large and appreciative audiences assembled in Rochester Baptist Church on Tuesday, March 5, when a conference on the Second Advent was held. The speakers were Pastors W. Fuller Gooch and J. Urquhart, and Mr. J. Monro Collings.

BLANDFORD.—Mr. H. W. Baker has concluded his engagement at the Mission Hall, Blandford, where he has laboured for over two years. Farewell services were held, and numerous testimonies were given as to blessing received during Mr. Baker's term of service; several have recently decided for Christ.

THE CRISIS.

BY MRS. HARVEY-JELLIE.

"Don't call me back by a word or a sound," he said.

They saw the rapture of bliss on his face, for he longed to enter into the joy of his Lord.

His mother and sister stood by the fire; other lights were low; the room was to be quiet and dark.

Precious was that life to them—a faithful, earnest soul, fully consecrated to a holy life; but it was evident to those who tended him in his illness that he was dying. It was certain, too, that he rejoiced at the thought of leaving this world, for the perfect freedom of the eternal home.

"The crisis will be about daybreak," the doctor had said, and neither mother nor sister would leave him till that had passed.

Aubrey Burlton had lived thirty years; no one could remember aught but good of him, the cheer and help of the home since his father was called away.

"Shall we let him die without a word?" whispered Amy.

"He wants to go, yet I had hoped the Lord had work for him. We will pray and wait," said the mother.

Very still was all around, the critical hour drew near, they gently ministered to him, but he turned his head away with difficulty, and once he faintly said, "Jesus only." Silently moving the curtain, Amy saw one pale grey streak of light across the sky. A shudder went through her being at the fear of what might be, when turning she saw Aubrey's hand feebly raised, as if to beckon them.

"Not now! not now!" he said. "Forgive! forgive!"

What could he mean? they wondered, but as the hour went on they saw a change, and not for death. He was quiet again, and, thinking he slept, they moved from his side. Sitting by the fire, they feared to disturb him. "Daybreak"—"the crisis." So it proved to be.

One hour later he almost alarmed them by speaking suddenly, "Mother! Amy!" Quickly beside him, they saw him raise his head with a new power, and a subdued look was on his face.

"I was wrong, selfish, weak; I thought I was nearly there."

"You must not talk yet, Aubrey; rest awhile, and thank God you are better."

"But I wanted to go. Just now it was like pure morning light, in summer time, for Jesus appeared and spoke; his face wore a pained look at me."

"Stay till you are stronger—you shall tell us soon."

"The One who spoke gives strength, mother. I shall live. Pray that I may be forgiven. I was willing to be gone, and He showed me in a vision a multitude of people—men, women, and children—wandering away from Him, and heaven. He said, 'Do you not love Me enough to labour for my kingdom? Who will call them in for Me?' and then He looked at me."

"But, Aubrey, you have worked for Christ—do not reproach yourself, my son."

"I thought I had, but that look, that vision, made me feel so selfish; I can't describe it, it was for me alone."

"Thank God the crisis is over—at daybreak doctor said, and just then you beckoned me."

"Daybreak indeed, a memorable crisis to me. I shall not die, but live, and declare the works of the Lord.'"

Slowly but surely the weakness gave place to strength, out of the shadowy valley came forth a man from whom spiritual selfishness was gone, one who could truly say, "For me to live is Christ."

Six months of newly devoted life, inspired by the holiest motives, had gone, when an accident in driving laid the doctor on his bed in pain. Aubrey Burlton, his patient and friend, sat with him one evening.

"Aubrey, that illness did wonders for you. Do you know what you are doing? You are setting people on fire for Christ."

"It was 'the crisis,' doctor, that did it. I saw my Master and Lord that daybreak; I saw how selfish, even in my religion, I had been; I saw souls, I heard words which can be put as our hymn reads,

'Not now—for I have loved ones sad and weary;
Wilt thou not cheer them with a kindly smile?
Sick ones, who need thee in their lonely sorrow;
Wilt thou not tend them yet a little while?'

And when that crisis passed, new energy came, the chord of self was smitten, and the music of love divine, and goodwill to men, rang through my chastened soul."

"A grand crisis that; would that all my patients had seen such a vision as they came back from death's door to health. I believe selfishness with all of us is the besetting sin."

"Yes, doctor, we are slow to say from the heart, 'None of self and all of Thee.' But I came to inquire about you."

"You are the one I wanted to see. I am recovering, and shall soon be strong, but, Aubrey, there lies a weight on my heart, and to you I will make an open secret of it. I am professedly a Christian man. I have a large practice, yet among the many who have thanked me for help to their bodies, not one has had to thank me for revealing Christ, or leading them to desire the best healing of all; and last night, as I lay here thinking of this, it reminded me of what you said of your turning point, for the words came forcibly to me, 'This ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone,' and, in sincere penitence, I vowed before God to be what I professed to be."

"So it has proved that we each have a crisis from which we date solemn responsibility. God help us both," said Aubrey Burlton.

Two men, holding different positions in life, both from that time were new creatures, pervading their own sphere with the true spirit of Christ Jesus.

Ten years of downright earnest, service and the doctor had finished his course. He was passing to his eternal home. It was his old friend he sent for, that they might clasp hands and rejoice together.

Aubrey was in time to receive a smile of recognition and hear the faint words he spoke. "You were right; that crisis did it." From one after another the story came of the glorious influence of the doctor's visits, and souls who traced their salvation to his earnest life spoke of his devotion. Aubrey said, as he took a farewell glance at the peaceful face in death, "No man or woman can fully know what it is to live as a Christian should live until they have experienced that marvellous crisis that gives them loving touch with Christ, and, after that, laying hold on eternal life, they save and bless wherever they go."

Great Master, touch us with Thy skilful hand,
Let not the music that is in us die;
Great Sculptor, hew and polish us, nor let,
Hidden and lost, thy form within us lie.
Spare not the stroke, do with us as Thou wilt;
Complete thy purpose, that we may become
Thy perfect image, O our God and Lord.

NEWNESS OF LIFE.

"Walk in newness of life."—Rom. vi. 4.

Newness of life, oh, newness of life,
It walketh beneath us, above, and around;
And all through the dales, and over the vales,
There's wonderful newness of life to be found.

And now it is waking, it surely is breaking,
For even to-day, as I came through the glen,
Soft notes, near a harrow, of tiny hedge-sparrow
Went up in sweet union with titmouse and wren.

Where winter sat hoary, a halo of glory
All over the common spreads out to the view:
The furze in its splendour would bid us remember
The fields ever golden, where all things are new.

Newness of life, oh, newness of life,
Awake in our hearts with a jubilant bound;
Shall nature, surprising, to freshness be rising,
And only our hearts dull and lifeless be found?

O Spirit Eternal, O freshness supernal,
O wind, fragrant wind, from the heavenly height,
In mercy subduing, reviving, renewing,
Restore to us newness of life by thy might.

Like freshness of morning, all tenderly dawning,
Shed over these wearisome spirits of ours
Thy gracious caressing, thy heavenly blessing,
And steep all our souls in thy life-giving showers.

Blest Friend of the lowly, most gentle, most holy,
Descend in thy mercy, and make us thine own;
Oh, comfort, protect us, deliver, direct us,
Infallible Guide, through life's journey unknown.

Thy fulness outpouring, convincing, restoring,
O Spirit of wisdom, of counsel, and might;
By Thee thus befriended, and ever attended,
We then shall walk daily in newness and light.

LITERATURE FOR INDIA.

We have received the following plea from Rev. J. W. Robinson, of the American Methodist Mission, Lucknow:—

One of the greatest needs of India at the present time is Christian literature. There is comparatively very little within the people's reach that is favourable either to Christianity or to righteousness. The vernacular presses of the country are busy turning out great numbers of cheap books, the influence of which is usually prejudicial to Christianity; added to the indigenous supply a large number of English and French sceptical books have been poured into the country, and some of the worst translated and published.

The various mission presses are trying to remedy this condition of things, and to some extent are succeeding. The Methodist Publishing House at Lucknow is situated in the very centre of the great movement that is now being made toward Christianity, and has taxed its financial resources to the uttermost in providing Christian literature for the new converts. This is well so far it goes, but the non-Christians are also learning to read, and their attitude will depend much on what is put into their hands. Very often they oppose the Christian workers, simply because they do not know them. The rumours they hear transform Christianity into something terrible. Literature is needed adapted to the poorer and more ignorant classes, that will remove this obstacle. Tracts, wisely written and widely distributed, will do this effectually.

Last year the publishing house mentioned began the issue of a series of this kind bi-monthly. They were found so useful that the demand ran up to 200,000 pages of each issue. But the press managers have no money for this, and are dependent upon outside help. The tracts should not only continue to be issued, but they should be issued semi-monthly, or, if possible, weekly. The tracts are printed in Hindi and Urdu, and each issue of 200,000 pages reaches at the least 100,000 persons—as grand an opportunity as anyone could want for preaching the glorious Gospel to the heathen. It costs about £7 to get out one of these issues, and the workers are in hopes of finding enough people who will contribute that much, so that the tracts can be issued and distributed weekly. Anyone wishing to write a tract should condense a simple Gospel sermon into about 1200 words, and send it to the agents, Methodist Publishing House, Lucknow, India, along with £7, and they will print and distribute it. Of course all controversial matter must be omitted; the plain story of salvation, enforced by a pointed illustration, is the very best.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL.

Mr. Charles Cook, of Hyde Park Hall, has completed a five weeks' mission in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, E. Despite the extremely cold weather, and the great distress prevailing in the neighbourhood of the mission, the services have been well attended. Although the evangelist was suffering from cold and sore throat, he managed to fulfil the whole of his engagement, and was rewarded by seeing many brought to the Lord both on the Lord's days and the week nights. Some very interesting cases of conversion took place during his stay. The sweet singing of Madame Marie Wood was most effective.

During the severe weather much relief has been given to the poor in their own homes, and opportunity was taken of personally bringing the Gospel before them. There is much still being done, and the whole staff of the mission with its hundreds of voluntary workers are heavily taxed. Prayer is asked that they may all be sustained during this time of much trial and sickness among the poor whom they visit. Influenza is doing its deadly work in the East-End, and coming upon the severe winter adds to the misery already experienced by those living in East London.

The Great Assembly Hall is being repainted, and will be closed till the end of April. The first meeting to be held on its reopening will be "The Thanksgiving Meeting." The Paragon near by has been taken for Sunday services during repairs.

AT FOREST HILL, S.E., an eight days' mission was held last week at the Forest Hill Baths by Mr. W. Bingham and Mr. E. Tennyson Smith.

THE YOUNG HELPERS' LEAGUE.

The Duchess of Teck, accompanied by the Duchess of Sutherland, the Marquis of Stafford, and Lord Alistair Leveson-Gower, recently drove from Trentham to Stoke for the purpose of attending a meeting and sale of work held at the North Stafford Hotel in connection with the Sutherland Habitation of the Young Helpers' League, an organisation of the young, promoted with the object of helping Dr. Barnardo's homes for orphan and waif children. The Duchess of Sutherland, who presided, said the Habitation was established on March 27, 1893, and consisted then of twenty-five companions. In the following year five new lodges were opened. The sum total of companions now reaches 125, showing an increase in two years of 100 members, with a secretary for each lodge, and a president, treasurer, and central secretary for the whole habitation. I can only hope that the members may be quadrupled, and that the great work which Dr. Barnardo is carrying on may become more widely known amongst every denomination in the Potteries.

Her Royal Highness presented nine badges to Young Helpers as a recognition of work done in connection with the League.

Miss Haslam proceeded to refer to the progress the League had made during the past three years. At the end of the first year, 1892, there were 10,000 children on the books, and they sent in £2,186 as the result of their work. At the end of 1893 the number of Habitations had risen to 150, the number on the books to 15,000, and the amount sent in to £4,186. In addition forty cots had been taken in Her Majesty's Hospital. The accounts for 1894 were not yet quite complete, but there were over 20,000 on the books, there were 206 habitations open, and there were 77 cots taken in Her Majesty's Hospital.

PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY.

A servant, brought to a knowledge of the truth through the preaching of a Wesleyan minister in the North of London, lives with a Christian master and mistress, where she has shone brightly for the Master, and has led another servant of the house to Jesus. When laid aside with illness, her mistress was very kind in nursing her, and after her recovery offered her an increase of wages. The girl replied that she ought not to accept it on account of her mistress's kindness to her when sick.

When the inclement weather set in, these two servants thought of a plan to help the Good Samaritan Guild of their chapel. They asked the mistress if they could be allowed to deny themselves for a time, and live on the plainest of food. This led to the master and mistress joining in. A good sum of money was saved. Flannelette was bought, and garments made for the poor. Their latest endeavour was to give a dinner to fifty poor children, and when their master and mistress joined in helping, they were at a loss to get a large enough room, so they asked their class leader if she thought the trustees would lend them the schoolroom, and when the proper authority was appealed to he at once consented. Methinks the smile of Jesus is upon these workers. G. H. R.

TRAINING COLLEGE, DUNOON, N.B.

Owing to the increase of the number of students it has been found advisable to secure another building of the same size as the present one. New mission stations have been opened up: Largs, Gourock, Johnstone, Govan, Partick, Cardross, and others will shortly be opened. In addition to the students at present in residence, there are applications from the Highlands of Scotland and from Ireland which the Principal is wishful to entertain favourably.

The college is being now put in trust for the education of consecrated young men of the Evangelical faith who have real ability; it opens up a means of education for a large class of earnest young men who are not in a position to secure a University training. It is expected that many of the students will go abroad. In the meantime an alliance has been made with one of the English Home Missions whereby ample opportunity for work is opened up to the students.

THE RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

Speaking at a drawing-room meeting held in connection with the Ragged School Union at his residence on Thursday afternoon, Lord Brassey drew attention to the value of the work done by the Union since its establishment fifty years ago. It exercised to-day, he said, an influence for good upon no less than 100,000 of London's poorest poor, having upwards of 5000 voluntary teachers and helpers in its 210 local schools, in which general and industrial classes were held. Its Poor Children's Aid branch did excellent work in providing clothing for children who would otherwise go practically unclothed, while in various other ways—Holiday Homes, Cripples' Homes, "Welcomes," Bible classes, industrial classes, and a host of helpful agencies—good was being done. He was sure that the work of the Union, which had the merit of having half a century's experience to work upon, would receive adequate recognition and assistance, if only the public could be shown the need of its personal as well as financial interest.

Mr. Alderman Beachcroft, L.C.C., remarked that if the words "and Mission" were added to the "Ragged School Union" it would more clearly indicate the nature of the work done. It was a work which he believed to be absolutely essential in the interests of modern London. In these Collectivist days, when nearly every charitable organisation was being subjected to criticism as to its method or management, it was satisfactory that no suggestion had been made that the Union should be interfered with in any way. It was the individual work which was so markedly represented in the Ragged School Union. It was that which was the pivot upon which the Union worked, and which made it what it was. If friends would go down to the East End for even a few hours each week much good would be done, for not only would they be struck with the hearty and thorough way in which the work was done, but their presence and interest would brighten the lives of the workers.

Messrs. W. J. Orsman, J.P., and John Kirk, Rev. A. Sanderson, and Miss Coles also spoke of the work of the R.S.U.

MR. MEYER'S FORWARD MOVEMENT.

Fresh developments of the deeply interesting work carried on by Rev. F. B. Meyer at Christ Church are still being inaugurated. Efforts are set on foot to reach all classes of the great community in that district. Lantern services have been begun on Sunday evenings after the usual service is concluded. From nine to ten the church is kept open, and special invitations given to non-churchgoers. A series of striking Scripture texts are thrown on the screen, and are made the basis of half-an-hour's homely earnest talk by the pastor. On a recent occasion fifteen men signed the pledge, and one man professed to give his heart to God.

Mr. Meyer has also started a meeting on Sunday afternoons at the Lambeth Baths for rough street lads from seventeen years and upwards. He gives his invited guests coffee and buns, and endeavours to interest them, so as to secure their attention for a short Gospel message. This movement, it seems to us, is at once courageous and full of the most hopeful possibilities.

Still another class that is sought to be reached are the unhappy sisters who are found in numbers on the main streets in that region. On a late occasion there was a gathering of these in association with the Midnight Meeting Movement. A very sad and miserable spectacle they presented. After tea they were spoken to in a loving, friendly way, and as a result five consented to go to Homes. The familiar way in which many of them sang Mr. Sankey's hymns without books was very suggestive of better and happier days.

PORT SAID.—Allow me to thank the Christian friends who have so regularly sent me copies of The Christian for distribution on the ships. These papers are eagerly looked forward to and received by a number of Christian officers and seamen, both of the Royal Navy and merchant ships passing through the canal to all parts of the world. I have many testimonies to the comfort and help received through the reading of The Christian by those who have so little of Christian help and fellowship at sea. God has blessed our work here in the past year, in the spreading of His Word in nearly forty languages, and dealing with many thousands of souls individually.

PASTORAL VISITATION.

From a very interesting article on this subject i the Free Church of Scotland Monthly, we extrac the following:—

"Certainly nothing will help a man to preac profitably and acceptably to his people like regula and faithful pastoral visitation. I cannot preach t my people unless I know them, and I cannot kno them unless I know something of their home life I have a congregation of over seven hundred member and I try, as far as I possibly can, to visit ever member once a year.

"My experience has led me to see that severa things are necessary for a successful visitor. Firs and foremost, a pastor must be a man who ha known something of earth's troubles and their cure Souls are very weak, souls are perplexed on a sides by all manner of doubts and difficulties, an I cannot help them unless I know something o the things in which I try to help them. Unless w have wrestled with their difficulties and know ho to overcome them, I don't think we will help ther much. On the other hand, if we have worked ou for ourselves some of the hard problems which per plex them, if we have learned in our own experienc the things they are longing to know about them then will there be no lack of opportunities.

"There are some of our people who set themselve deliberately for a gossip with the minister. Thi is one of my greatest trials in visiting. I know tha it has soured many ministers at pastoral visitatio altogether. It is a most profitless and, if we giv way to it, a most harmful kind of thing. But m experience is that if one sets himself steadfastl against it, it will gradually be given up, and advan tage taken of pastoral visits for frank, free, friendl interchange of thought on the things of the King dom, which we must never forget are our mai business. We are the 'ambassadors of Christ' t our people, and as much so in their homes as in th pulpit. This does not prevent us conversing on th ordinary events of their life. Far from it. Chris takes to do with everything in his people's lives. I is not easy to lay down hard and fast rules abou conducting worship in every house. But I try to se a rule to myself—never to quit a house withou leaving something with them to think over, some thing that will make my visit different from that o a mere worldly man. If I am not conscious o having done that I feel very miserable."

THE BROUGH NURSES, PAISLEY.

These ladies, five in number, with their admirable superintendent, Miss Watson, are doing good work in Paisley. They are housed in the old Cameronian manse, which has been leased for five years by the Brough Trustees, and are daily engaged ministering to the wants of the sick poor of the town. The spiritual interests of this class are looked after by the missionaries and Biblewomen, each of whom receives £15 a year for this work from the trustees. They are all "Queen's nurses," hailing from the Victoria Institute for Nurses in Edinburgh, and as they have all received a good general education in early life, they are gentle and refined in manner, and able to carry on profitable conversation with those they visit. That such attendance requires great skill and experience is evident, and that these are at the command of the Brough nurses appears from this, that among the sick poor nothing but good is said of them. This is a goodly tree, and it has sprung from the seed planted eleven years ago, in the soil of Paisley, by a retired draper, Mr Peter Brough.

BIBLE CONFERENCES IN THE STATES.

Since January 1 it has been my privilege to hold a series of Bible conferences in a number of cities and towns for the presentation of prophetic truth and the deepening of spiritual life. Many of the Niagara and Northfield teachers have been my co-workers. In some places the churches have been crowded to overflowing.

Subjects pertaining to Israel and the approaching end of the age are exercising a powerful influence over the hearts of many preachers and people. I will go on with this work till my leaving for England in June, to participate in the prophetic conference at Keswick.

THE MADAGASCAR TROUBLES.

Sir,—The accompanying letter has been addressed to three of the senior missionaries of the London Missionary Society at present in this country from Madagascar. It is signed by two of the most trustworthy and influential of the native pastors of the churches in that island connected with our mission. The names of the writers and of the recipients of the letter are omitted for prudential reasons, but the social position of the men who write, and their great influence among the people, give great importance to their words. The Hova Government may be deterred by motives of policy, or may feel it to be useless to appeal formally to Great Britain for intervention in its hour of need, but the simple-hearted confidence of the people in their friends the English, "who have never deceived them," is most pathetic. The best, most progressive, and most hopeful life in Madagascar owes its origin to British missionaries.

Whether or not we think them wise in their present resistance to a great Power like France, whether or not we think them capable of ruling and developing their country satisfactorily, Englishmen cannot but have a deep sympathy with them in their struggle for freedom; and we must deeply deplore the prospect of the widespread suffering and of the general disorganisation which must inevitably result from the war which has now commenced. Though we may not be able to do anything for them in their fight for freedom, I trust we may depend on H.M. Government to use their legitimate influence with France to secure that in the event of annexation no influence, whether political or ecclesiastical, shall be permitted to abridge their religious liberty.

Yours very truly,
R. Wardlaw Thompson,
Foreign Secretary L.M.S.

Antananarivo, December 7, 1894.

Gentlemen,—On account of our friendship in the Lord we are writing you this letter to set forth briefly and simply the terrible trouble the French are preparing for us, and also to entreat you earnestly to do all you can to help us in our time of sore need. What is that terrible trouble? It is the great war which M. de Vilers is inciting the French Government to undertake against us. And, alas! should he be successful, it will be a far more terrible thing than what we witnessed ten years ago, for there will be much bloodshed in the land; death will be dealt out to many in the ports around the island; the number of orphans and helpless widows will be increased; fathers and mothers will lose their loved ones, and nearly every place will be a place of weeping; yea, more, the work in schools and churches, in which we and you have been so earnestly engaged for so long a period will cease to progress, for it will be hindered and destroyed in many ways.

And because you know so well that many unfair advantages which the French have tried to take of us Malagasy, and because you are fully acquainted with our exceeding forbearance towards them, we beg and pray you, O friends, to do all in your power to save us, so that the destroyer may not gloat over us as beasts for the slaughter, and that you may also rescue the Church of God, which He has bought with his blood.

And O, sirs, let it be far from you to say: "That is no business of ours, for we have nothing to do with politics." Surely it is the business of all who serve God to do what lies in their power, even at the sacrifice of their lives, to come to the help of those who are oppressed and persecuted. And you can do something. We do not ask you to force your way into Parliament and complain there, nor to your Cabinet, for we know that you have no authority there. But you can converse with your relatives and friends, and with Members of Parliament and others in your homes, in the streets, and in other places, and enlighten them as to the rights and wrongs of these difficulties between the Malagasy and the French. We venture to urge that you could well do as much as that, without being censured by your Queen, and without incurring blame from any one, and without being wrong in the sight of God. Yea, we think it would redound to your honour should God be with you and bless your conversation, and enable you to frustrate the wicked designs of those who are seeking the destruction of your friends, and lead to our deliverance from the oppressor.

We have not the slightest hesitation in requesting you to inform all with whom you come in contact that neither our Queen nor our government is to blame in the slightest degree for the destruction the French are bringing upon us; it is the French, and the French only, who are guilty in the sight of God, the righteous Judge. Therefore we beseech you, sirs, to spare no effort to acquaint all good men and all English Members of Parliament with the wickedness of this French aggression, yea, go even to your Queen, if such a thing be possible, and let her know it. Then, when all true men are acquainted with the truth, we shall have done all that we could, whether deliverance come or not.

To send such complaints to strangers would be dishonourable, but when one is writing to intimate friends one may write all that is in one's heart; and the supreme importance of what we have laid before you is proof that we hold you in the highest esteem. From our childhood we have heard of the treaty between the English and Radama I., agreeing that they would act in a friendly manner towards each other to the end of time. We believe that; and our Queen and the majority of all sensible persons in Madagascar thoroughly believe it as well. And now, when this unrighteous dealing on the part of the French has become patent, the common talk of the people here is as follows: "The English are our true friends; they have never deceived us; they have done us much good, and that not only to our government, but in education and in religious matters." The foregoing can be denied by none, for the English and the Malagasy have been on terms of the closest friendship for a very long period of time. It is becoming therefore that they should cry out the one to the other in time of trouble. In further consideration of this, let the following facts be noticed:—

It was Englishmen who first taught our soldiers and instructed us in the use of arms in defence of our country. Some of those pioneers died here, and were buried at the north of the present stone church at Ambohipotsy. Their graves, which are still there, and their bodies, which lie there, bring to our remembrance that Madagascar was, and is, a land dear to the English, and that the Malagasy are beloved by them. They died here as if dying among their relatives, and they accepted burial here as if they were being buried in their own native land.

It was Englishmen who first introduced the Christian religion and education. It is said there were some other foreigners who came here for that purpose before them, but it was Englishmen who succeeded in inducing Radama I. to enter on a career of progress and civilisation. And up to the present time, while there are other teachers in Madagascar, the people who attach themselves to such are mostly ignorant or are influenced by curiosity and other unworthy motives. The great mass of the people and nearly all of any standing or importance still attach themselves to the English, for it is the English whom the people, as a whole, look upon as their trusty friends. All the above goes to show both you and us that we are close friends and ought to come to the help of one another in the time of trouble. So please talk about it, lest the lives of your friends should be destroyed as the putting out of dying embers. Do not thrust us from you as unworthy of your consideration, for we are as the captured calf that has broken its cord and run back to its fellows. Do not say we have no right to entreat you; do not repulse us when we appeal to you as friends; do not say you are down and there we leave you! We do hope you will listen to us.

We send our sincere respects to you and bid you good-bye in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY.—Saturday being the ninety-first anniversary of the foundation of the British and Foreign Bible Society, which has established a pleasant custom of giving a birthday party to its juvenile supporters within the metropolitan area, the gathering was held in the Guildhall. A hearty welcome to the youthful guests, by whom the hall was quite filled, was given by Sir Joseph Savory, who spoke highly of the value of the society, which, after so many years' work, had much before it yet to do. The ceremony of the afternoon was the cutting of the birthday cake, a splendidly ornamented and iced dainty of 91lb. weight; and this task Master Ernest Charles Jones—a great-great-grandson of Rev. W. Charles, of Bala, the founder of the Society—was called upon to perform. Interesting and hearty words were spoken by various friends.

GENERAL BOOTH'S RETURN.

To celebrate the arrival home of General Booth from his visit to Canada and the United States, a vast gathering of his followers took place on Monday night at the Albert Hall, representative of the whole of Great Britain. The General received quite an ovation from his assembled friends. The large hall presented a most interesting and animated spectacle, and there was room for that effective display for which this marvellous organisation is now famous. It is estimated that there were 12,000 to 13,000 people present, the majority being in Salvation Army uniform.

The entrance of the General was signalled by a mighty shouting and waving of handkerchiefs, and he made quite a royal progress across the hall to the platform. The next portion of the programme consisted of a huge procession, representing the work of the Army. The contingents entered by the front door, and marched round the arena to the platform, where they presented an address of welcome. The Darkest England scheme was fully portrayed by "dossers" in distress and comparative affluence, and the farm colony was also in evidence. The rear of the procession was brought up by members in Japanese costume, under Colonel Wilson, who is bound for the East to open up Japan, to which object the collection, taken later, was devoted.

General Booth thanked the vast audience for the reception accorded to him. He was deeply sensible of this lavish expenditure of love that had been bestowed upon him, and he acknowledged with gratitude the toil and sacrifices of the army while he had been absent in America. During that time great progress had been made, and he believed there was still a great future for the movement. Doubtless some of those present would like to ask many questions about his long journey of 24,000 miles during the last six months, and he regretted he could not shake them all by the hand and personally recognise their right royal welcome. His health was good, notwithstanding the great strain of so much travelling. He had spoken on an average twice a day, including his journeys on land and sea, but he had returned in sound health and vigour of body, and was as ready for the campaign as when he went away. Ministers of State, judges, ministers of all denominations, and leaders of the philanthropic and religious world had all given him a hearty welcome. He was regarded as the apostle of the poor, the friend of the hopeless, and the leader of the army. Canada was a great nation, with a territory nearly equal to Europe and inexhaustible resources. It was fertile, and its possibilities were beyond imagination. Instead of feeding 5,000,000 of people it could maintain 100,000,000, and the surplus population of Europe might find a home there. Canada only required people, and he told them he was the man to help them out of that difficulty. What he had said about Canada applied equally to the United States, which had in addition one of the most energetic, ingenious, determined, and enterprising people under the sun.

His American experience had ripened his Darkest England plans, and he saw his way more clearly to the over-sea colony. When he expounded his scheme over there it was cordially approved, and he was convinced the Dominion of Canada was the place for the submerged tenth he had raised to self-respect. The principles of his scheme were endorsed on every hand by the public and the Press, Church and State, and all wanted to know when he was going to begin. The prairies would be a paradise for the people he had rescued, and the encouragement he had received from politicians and others proved that there would be no difficulty in getting the land if the funds were forthcoming. He had come back to ask for their assistance in carrying out his plans, and he should not be satisfied until they were complete. While there were vice and temptation, drinking saloons and other forms of degradation, they could not stop, but must vigorously continue the fight against the giants of poverty and devilry which destroyed souls. Their motto was "Forward!" and he prayed for an increase of faith and power.

A dedication of officers going on foreign service and a triumphant chorus brought this memorable gathering to a close.

There is never a day so sunny
But a little cloud appears;
There was never a life so happy
But has had its time of tears.

COLPORTAGE IN AMERICA.

Within the past few months another form of aggressive Christian work has been entered upon under Mr. Moody's leadership. Perceiving the lack of good literature in the homes of the people, the impossibility of buying religious books in country towns, and the prohibitive price that is usually placed on them, Mr. Moody was led to believe that there is room in this country for greater activity in supplying clean, helpful literature at a low price.

The object is not to give books away, but to sell them; and with this end in view, standard books are supplied to colporteurs at such rates that they can sell them at half or two-thirds ordinary retail price. Colporteurs are not hired, but on being recognised as such, can buy at cheap rates and sell cheap, and make a living at that. Provision is made for the free distribution of tracts when donations are received for this purpose. Colporteurs are expected to be ready with a Gospel message in season and out of season, in the homes and on the highways, and in churches as opportunity offers.

The success of the enterprise seems assured after three months' trial. Colporteurs are attached to four leading evangelists, selling religious books, testaments, etc., in the height of revival interest. The time is looked for when every evangelist will have such an attaché working with him. The headquarters of the Colportage Association are at 250 La Salle-avenue, Chicago.

LONDON WESLEYAN MISSION.

On Monday evening the annual meeting of the London Wesleyan Mission was held in Exeter Hall. The chair was taken by Mr. John Bayley. The mission now has twenty-six branches in North, South, and Central London. It has eight old chapels, twelve halls, and over 5000 in church fellowship, fourteen ministers, twenty lay agents, seventy sisters, and some hundreds of volunteer helpers. All kinds of philanthropic work is carried on by the Mission Band Union, which numbers 2000 members.

The chairman, in the course of his address, referred to the London Wesleyan Mission and its work among the people, for whom, he said, it had done great things, not only in London, but also in the provinces, where the missionaries went and stirred up the Churches. It was also to be noticed that it was from the people in the provinces, who were doing most for their own churches, that the most liberal contributions were received. He commended the work of the Mission as deserving of their help and interest.

Rev. D. Walters, secretary, said that over £2000 was wanted to carry them over the current year. He had confidence in the Mission, because he knew it was doing God's work.

Rev. W. Green said he was one with the chairman in seeking by every legitimate means the improvement of the people, and he believed the time would come when all would agree as to the way by which it could be accomplished. That mission, though carried on under the auspices of the Wesleyan body, was not in any sense sectarian. It was broad and generous in all its sympathy, and gave the right hand of fellowship to all who were willing to work with them. He spoke of the visits to Manchester and other towns, and bore witness to the interest taken by the provinces in the London Mission.

Dr. Monro Gibson considered the London Wesleyan Mission was one of the greatest movements which had arisen since the great revival some years ago.

Revs. J. E. Wakerley, J. H. Hopkins, H. P. Hughes, and others addressed the meeting.

EAST LONDON TABERNACLE.

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly allow me, as in past years, to let former worshippers at the East London Tabernacle know that our annual "Thank-offering Day" takes place next Monday? The date has been necessarily postponed through my absence from home for a few weeks, in consequence of the death of my dear wife.

As usual I shall be in the vestry all day to receive offerings from those who have reason to thank God the Tabernacle was ever built; only such are appealed to. I trust that the former members will have fellowship with us in our annual day of thanksgiving.

FAMINE IN CENTRAL AFRICA.

Mr. F. G. Toller, Financial Secretary of the Zambesi Industrial Mission, 1, Gresham-street, London, E.C., writes:—

We have received a letter from Mr. R. Caldwell, Secretary of the Mission, who is now in Central Africa visiting the stations of the Mission. Writing from Mtsidi Mission House, Nyassaland, on January 11, he says: "A great famine is upon us! The locusts are here in millions, and have eaten up every green thing except coffee. The native maize has all been eaten. A second sowing of the same has gone in like manner. Rice or maize is not to be had in the country for calico, and very little for rupees. There is actually nothing before the people of this land but death from starvation, unless the white man can bring food into the country. For the people around us we should require a famine fund of £1500. Will you put this appeal before the Christian public? I do not send you harrowing details. The matter is urgent. The pitiful appeals of our workmen even now, that they cannot work because they are hungry, and they cannot buy food anywhere in this country, would move the hardest hearts if they could listen to them day by day as we have to do. All through Central Africa a great famine is approaching, and we call on all the people at home to do what they can to ward off its awful consequences. Hundreds are walking about living skeletons now, and many have died."

We have made inquiries in Mincing-lane (adds Mr. Toller), and are able, under special arrangements, to ship rice suitable for this purpose, which we can deliver at the mouth of the Zambesi for about £11 a ton. Our own steel barges on the river can deliver the rice to our Mission stations. One ton of rice, costing £11, would keep 300 natives for one week from starving. A steamer sails in about ten days, by which we could ship the rice.

BLACKGANG MISSION, ISLE OF WIGHT.

The report for last year states that several of the converts have now been for some years mission helpers, assisting in the preaching of the Gospel on Sunday evenings, while others teach in the Sunday-schoool. Other useful work is also done by the mission members in connection with the Band of Hope and various meetings. The number in actual church fellowship is about fifty.

I have not found the mission claims to be beyond the power of one to cope with, while God has been pleased to preserve my health and strength; but help is much needed in house-to-house visitation. The preparation due to all public service, and the necessary correspondence and other incidental claims of the work, render it impossible for one person to do more than care for the sick and attend to special cases requiring attention. Edith M. S. Smith.

FROM A CANADIAN PASTOR.

Kindly permit me to say how much I appreciate the long-continued kindness of the good friend who has supplied me with the weekly visits of The Christian for so many years, and to ask that it may be sent to my present address.

After some years of inability for regular pastoral work, I am thankful to say I am encouraged to hope that strength will be given me to continue the work in which I have been engaged for the last three months as pastor of the Baptist church here. The city has a population of about 10,000, half of whom are French Roman Catholics. Only yesterday a series of union evangelistic meetings was commenced. Preparatory meetings have been held for several weeks, and we are looking to the Lord for a rich blessing. Brethren, pray for us.

THE SMALL AND THE GREAT.

If God has thought it worth his while, in the mysterious exercise of his love, to number the hairs of our heads, He has rebuked the frivolity which separates things into important and non-important, into religious and secular—as if a man might pray regarding some things and omit to pray regarding others. The whole earth is a sanctuary. All life is a priesthood or a sacrifice. We lose valuable elements out of our character when we treat things trivially, and do our work with a loose hand.—Dr. Parker.

MR. AITKEN IN WEST KENSINGTON.

During the past fortnight a general special mission has been held in many of the churches in Hammersmith, West Kensington, and Shepherd's Bush. In St. Luke's, Uxbridge-road, considerable interest has been awakened by the preaching of Canon Lester, and, it is believed, good work has been done—the vicar himself, Rev. W. St. H. Bourne, who is well known as a mission preacher, throwing much energy into the special services.

Mr. Aitken's mission in St. Matthew's, Sinclair-road, West Kensington, has, however, awakened the most general interest in the district. Indeed, on several occasions, we have observed that it formed the topic of morning conversation in the railway carriage amongst gentlemen travelling to business in the City.

Almost from the outset good audiences have been secured at the week-evening services, while the afternoon addresses on spiritual life have been well sustained. On Sundays the church has been crowded, and in fact, last Sunday evening it was packed to the doors. The afternoon address to men was largely attended, and Mr. Aitken's plain and outspoken warnings against some of the sins of the day were with great power.

The evening proved a time of happy ingathering. The missioner spoke with great solemnity and force from the words of Moses:—"I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing; therefore choose life" (Deut. xxx. 19). Many seemed deeply moved as Mr. Aitken eloquently pressed on his hearers the danger of delay, and urged them to immediate decision. The second service, when the missioner addressed himself pointedly to those in whom anxiety had been awakened, was followed by a third service, or inquirers' meeting, when many remained to be personally spoken to, and not a few professed to find peace.

This mission, it is believed, has been fruitful in blessing; and many who in past days have heard Mr. Aitken's eloquent pleas must have rejoiced to find him still full of power and spiritual vigour.

CHAMBERI MISSION, MADRID.

Mr. A. R. Fenn, correcting a recent error, says:—"The large majority of the children of our schools are the children of nominal Roman Catholics, or Freethinkers, whom we endeavour to reach by means of the schools, and our efforts are not in vain, thank God."

We recently intimated that part of the mission premises had been offered for sale to the mission. Mr. Fenn writes:—"Since then, the buildings we have rented for years for the girls' schools and other purposes, have also been offered to us. These two places, though under different landlords, were formerly one property, and are only separated by a wooden fence. They are particularly well adapted for our purposes. The purchase of the one in no way depends upon the other, and as soon as the sum needed (£900) for buying and some alteration has been raised, the purchase can be made."

Mr. Fenn's address is, Quintana 26, Madrid. The treasurer of the Mission is Mr. Arthur Boake, Southwood Lawn, Highgate, N.

THE DUCHESS OF TECK will attend a drawing-room meeting arranged by Sir Whittaker and Lady Ellis, at Buccleuch House, Richmond, at 3.30 p.m. on Saturday, March 30, to promote the interests of the Ragged School Union in its varied work amongst the necessitous children of London.

"THE MAKING OF MIND" was the subject of Prebendary J. W. Reynolds's weekly scientific address on Wednesday, March 6, at 1.15. p.m. in the church of St. Anne and St. Agnes, Gresham-street, E.C. He maintained that the human mind is not intellect only; it partakes of emotion, with consciousness of right and wrong. More than the physical goes to the making of mind. It is force of another sort than the mechanical. It is higher life-power than that by which lower animals live. It is no more a fact that we were evolved from the beast than that the rainbow is evolved from a soap-bubble. Every advance in organisms is in company with a more complex structure of brain. The inner and outer processes are in relation to enlarging external circumstances, and co-ordinated by a Purpose embracing more than the small hypothesis of sexual and natural selection. What Professor Fleshery calls "intellectual centres," not possessed by any animal lower than man, certainly not to the same extent, may be considered as indications of future advance, not by animal means, but by a throwing around of light that heralds a splendid day.

Letters to the Editor.

THANKSGIVING AND PRAYER.

Dear Sir,—A recent correspondent has suggested the great importance of prayer for conversions while the preaching of the Gospel is going on every Sunday evening. May I, through the medium of your valuable paper, ask that thousands of Christians spend at least half-an-hour on their knees before God on Good Friday morning, asking for a genuine revival of religion, resulting in millions of true conversions, from John o' Groats to Land's End, and from Cromer to Cardiff, not omitting Ireland, where such blessed work was done in 1858-9.

Good Friday is a leisure day, and many thousands will be able to continue in prayer for this one definite object, even for a much longer time.

Fredk. Geller.

Dear Sir,—As a constant reader of The Christian, and a country clergyman, I rejoice beyond measure to learn that another special day for prayer has been arranged, and that the conveners' letter has been published. The recent correspondence in your columns reveals the painful truth that the country parishes particularly are being leavened with Ritualism and error. This is quite plain to those who "have eyes to see."

I would humbly suggest to those who have the control of the meetings on May 1, that very special and direct prayer be offered for country parishes, that on them the Holy Ghost may be richly poured out. Those who work in the country know the extreme difficulty in getting and keeping together thorough and regular meetings for prayer. Would that Revivals similar to those in Scotland during the last and present centuries might be the result of these special days of prayer! The promise is for us, "Greater works than these shall He do, because I go unto my Father."—Yours faithfully,

F. R. A. Hoare.

The Vicarage, Castle Gresley, Burton-on-Trent.

Dear Sir,—I was much struck with the two articles in your issue of February 21—"Things that are shaken," and "A National Fast." Both are so timely, and touch briefly but effectually the various causes which tend to undermine the strength and even vitality of our beloved country.

Besides all these causes, so ably treated in those articles, there are hidden sores, which some would disregard, treading lightly, even jauntily over evils which are corrupting the social atmosphere, ruining home life, and eating into the hearts and lives of the sufferers. The airy and jocose treatment of solemn verities by some of our best novelists, men who would not degrade their manhood by writing anything impure or low—yet seem to allow themselves this sport—is very injurious.

Such things make us very sad, and we long for some outward expression of our grief, such as a day of humiliation and prayer would give. If the movement cannot as yet be national (although, as Mr. Crosbie remarked, God's "disciplinary judgments are abroad in the earth"), yet surely the Christian world, or even we in England, might unite in seeking our God on a named day by fasting and prayer. Such an attitude must influence the world, both by God's gracious answers, and by attracting notice to the subjects themselves. Gratefully acknowledging the benefits we derive from your publication, I am, yours truly, E. C. R.

PRAYER FOR MISSIONARY CANDIDATES.

Dear Sir,—"If one member suffers, all the members suffer with it." In the Chronicle of L.M.S. is an article headed "What to do with Accepted Candidates: Serious Embarrassment of the Directors." The L.M.S. is a catholic Society, and has in various ways co-operated with many Christians of different denominations. Is there not a call, especially during this centenary year, for hearty, prayerful sympathy to be shown to this venerable and widely-blessed Society by all who love Christ and desire to spread his kingdom?

Might not prayer include the following: That all, especially the candidates, may come into direct and solemn contact with God, asking, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"; that there may be readiness to endure any severe test of faith; that it may be increasingly perceived how only those whose spiritual life is deep and strong can be looked to for sympathy in the foreign service; that there may be no doubt as to God's ability, and that the joy of all may be to encourage faith in Him; that right views on the missionary question may be used as an antidote for the alleged ignorance of the foreign mission field, and the inclination to magnify the claims of home. Inquirer.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES AT FAULT.

Dear Sir,—May I be allowed to draw attention through your columns to the great lack of business-like habits among some of the religious societies and missions of to-day? I speak from experience, as I have many times suffered great inconvenience from unanswered letters, magazines posted days after the commencement of the month or week, unreceipted bills—sometimes for large sums of money—and similar instances. I have oftentimes heard friends engaged in Christian work make the same complaints, and sadder still, I have heard non-Christians scoff.

Surely our religion, if it is worth anything, ought to be practical enough to be applied to our daily life, in matters of business, etc. Surely Christian societies ought to be more careful, punctual, etc., than societies which are not engaged in religious work. Should we not do well to take for our motto, "Not slothful in business, etc."—Yours truly, Amicus.

A TESTIMONY.

Dear Sir,—With the intention of affording some small encouragement, though it only comes from an outsider, I write, giving the following testimony to the paper of which you are the editor. I feel sure that it is the means of deepening spiritual life, it shows a sound attitude towards all burning questions of the day, and sets its face steadfastly against all forms of evil—these three things I mention, though I could mention more. After reading The Christian I pass it on to the few Christian men I know of in the ship, and they tell me that they find it helpful.

I daresay I may be taking an unusual step, writing as I have done; that I do not mind, providing my object is attained—that of cheering one who I am sure must be beset with many difficulties if not discouragements; so trusting that you will take my intention for what it is worth, and will understand, though I am an outsider with regards to active Christian work, yet none the less I claim to be a follower of the Lord Jesus, I remain, Sir, yours truly A. P. Davidson, Lieut. R.N.

H.M.S. Acorn, Monte Video, Jan. 27.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Dear Sir,—"A Constant Reader" in The Christian, of February 28, speaking of setting apart the hour of service when unable to leave home on a Sunday evening for intercessory prayer, suggests that Christians may be led to take a greater interest in the salvation of the children. May a mother desire earnest pleading for young people of both sexes, whom it is so difficult to reach, if they have not found their Saviour early? There is much done to reach children, and rightly so; but it seems so impossible sometimes to reach young men and young women who have started in life. The spirit of the age is to assert themselves when very young, and to resent all interference, considering that they are quite capable of looking after themselves, and that they know as much as their elders.

It is so difficult to reach young men in banks and offices of various kinds, and young women who are engaged in teaching, etc. The higher the social standing, the more difficult of access are they. I have specially in my mind now young men in City offices. Their hours are long, their duties heavy, and they plead that the little time at their disposal for recreation makes it imperative that their Sundays should be free for amusement. Often the pleasures are in themselves perfectly innocent. The young men are thoroughly steady and upright; but the habit of spending the Lord's Day to self soon tells on their characters. What little spiritual life they had dies away, and though they may go to church on Sunday mornings, it is usually as a duty to please their families, not as an act of worship, or from a desire to learn more of God.

May I plead for earnest prayer on those consecrated Sabbath evenings for a great outpouring of God's Spirit on our young men and women, that they may realise their own sinfulness, and need of a Saviour, and find Christ in their youth? Surely a great blessing must result from such hours consecrated to intercessory prayer for all who know not God, from the children to the old people so soon to be called home. May God in his mercy pour out a mighty blessing on our young people, resulting in lives consecrated to his service. A Mother.

EXPLAINING THE WAY OF SALVATION.

Dear Sir,—Is there not a great need in these solemn times of a clear Scriptural enforcing of the absolute necessity of a new creation which God alone can bestow? For many years I have come to the conclusion that a great harm is being done by Christian workers in simply stating, "If you will only believe you are saved." It is true when the heart believes unto righteousness; that is the work of the Holy Spirit. But too many are led to think that a mere assent is faith, and they show by their subsequent lives that they are destitute of the inward power.

Speaking from my own experience, I do not remember the day when I did not believe that Christ was my Saviour; but there came a time when God graciously led me to see my own utter unworthiness, and myself a poor and lost sinner. My deceitful heart was laid bare, and I found I needed a supernatural faith to truly believe. When the heart is right the life will become right. How necessary, then, to clearly teach the new birth, upon which our Lord laid great stress (John iii.). I have heard some say, it is the simplest thing in the world to believe. I appeal to experienced Christians if they find this true.—Yours truly, A. C. S.

LEPERS IN MADAGASCAR.

Rev. J. Peill, L.M.S. missionary, Madagascar, writing of Rev. P. G. Peake's efforts on behalf of lepers at Isoavina, says:—"There are now twenty-five lepers in the settlement, which has been erected on land given by the Queen. The buildings were put up by Mr. Peake, and all is kept going by private friends in England, without any expense to the L.M.S. Mr. Peake aims at inducing the native churches to support the establishment. The young man who acts as pastor and teacher was originally a student in the L.M.S. College, and afterwards an evangelist for some years. At length the foll disease showed itself, and he became an outcast from society.

"On December 29, with Mr. Peake, I visited the settlement, which is about three miles from Isoavina. There are twenty-five cottages and a neat little chapel, also dispensary, in which the doctor sees patients weekly. Awaiting our arrival the entire colony gathered in the chapel, and several hymns were sang. The teacher remembered me, but I quite failed to recognise him, so much has he become disfigured. He is an intelligent and well-educated man. The sight of the poor creatures—some with sadly swollen and disfigured faces, others with fingerless hands and toeless feet—clings to me now. They were very pleased to see us. The enclosure contains 250 acres, and has been beautifully laid out by Mr. Peake."

REVIVAL IN ATHLONE.

Encouraged by the blessing which attended the mission in Galway, conducted by the workers of the Open-Air Mission, a cordial invitation was given them to come to Athlone. The Northgate-street Schoolhouse was secured for their use. In January the mission was commenced, the speakers being Captain Wade Thompson, Messrs. Richard Hinde, George Williams, T. Coghlan, and G. Knapman. The attendance nightly was large, deep interest being manifested by the people, some of whom were led to decision for Christ. Not a night passed without cases of conversion being known.

The meetings were continued for four weeks, ere the conclusion of which some of the most difficult cases to reach had been won by the power of God. Many of influence and position, as well as adherents of every church in the town, accepted God's offer of salvation, and are boldly witnessing in his name. The result has been the raising up of a band of workers in this town, which, it is trusted, will do much for the spread of light and truth in our land.

THE Y.M.C.A.

THE BAYSWATER ASSOCIATION.

Over 800 were present at the annual meeting of this Association, held in Paddington Baths Hall. Lord Kinnaird, who presided, spoke of the interdenominational work carried on by the Association, and pointed to the fruits of its aggressive character.

The secretary read the report, recording an increased attendance of young men at the meetings, and growing interest in the work of the Association. Eighty-three members and associates had joined during the year, bringing the membership up to 200. Many young men had been helped to obtain situations, while others had entered the mission field and were now abroad. God had used this work in Queen's road, Westbourne-grove, to the conversion of many young men.

Addresses followed by Rev. H. G. Thwaites, G. H. C. Macgregor, H. Dening, Dr. Schofield, and others.

BRIEF NOTES.

Mr. Lucas, formerly of the Melbourne Y.M.C.A., has been appointed general secretary at Pietermaritzburg.

Very successful "At Homes" were given last week at Hartlepool Y.M.C.A. by Mrs. R. H. Coverdale; at Oakenshaw Y.M.C.A. by Mrs. R. L. Weeks, Willington House; and at Sunderland by Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Walker.

Mr. W. M. Hudson, of South Shields, assisted by Mr. Strang, Newcastle, and Messrs. R. B. Wilson, and Geo. Spooner, Sunderland, have conducted a very successful eight days' mission under the auspices of the Hebburn-on-Tyne Y.M.C.A.

The annual Convention of the Y.M.C.A. of New York State was held in Syracuse, Feb. 21-24. Seventeen years ago there was a similar gathering in that city. At that time there were twenty-two Associations in the State. Now the number of Associations is 157.

The annual meeting of the Kingston-on-Thames Association was held on the 5th inst., when the president, Captain Cundy, occupied the chair. Revs. J. A. Richards and T. Humphris were the principal speakers, and other local clergymen and ministers took part in the proceedings.

The forty-fifth annual business meeting of the Bridport Y.M.C.A. has just been held. The chief feature of the report was the decidedly improved state of every department of the Association. Four hundred and twenty young men had come under the direct influence of the Association during the past year.

The Chicago Association has had a prosperous year. They report 518 religious meetings held, total attendance, 76,313; 502 Bible classes, total attendance, 4695; daily attendance at the eight departments, 1989; eighty receptions and 36 entertainments given; sixty-five weekly educational classes, with attendance 45,842; average attendance at the reading room 843.

The annual meeting of the Birkenhead Association was held on February 14. Lord Kinnaird presided over a large and enthusiastic gathering. He congratulated the Association on attaining its majority, and dealt with the question of the attitude of the Y.M.C.A. towards amusements, gambling, etc. Short addresses were delivered by members representing various branches of the work.

The Anglo-American Y.M.C.A., 160, Rue Montmartre, Paris, trusts that pastors and others visiting the city will not fail to note that "valuable information may be obtained, a good guide to all places of interest recommended, that the tea room is entrée libre, and a list of lodgings is kept." Already excellent testimony as to the benefits above mentioned has been rendered by a party of Irish and American pastors and friends en route to the Holy Land.

The Manchester Y.M.C.A. Thursday evening Bible readings, held in the drawing room for many years, are very well attended, and at the close each week new members are introduced to older ones. The annual gymnasium competitions for the Champion eight and the Holdsworth championship have commenced. A great mass meeting of men has been arranged for the large hall, when addresses will be given on "Betting and Gambling," by Major Ballantyne, "Impurity," by Mr. Newett, and "Intemperance," by Professor Renshaw.

The eleventh annual meeting of the Hammersmith Y.M.C.A. took place in the Vestry Hall on the 5th inst., and was well attended. Professor Gladstone occupied the chair, and excellent addresses were delivered by Revs. Evan Hopkins, J. L. Brooks, G. W. Pope, and A. R. Shrewsbury, also Mr. J. H. Lydall (treasurer), and others. The annual report told of much good work, but with a view to the extension of this a fund is in process of formation for the engagement of a general secretary, whose whole time shall be given to the Association.

The Honolulu Association was organised twenty-five years ago. The city has 25,000 inhabitants, 5000 being Americans and Europeans, the remainder Chinese, Japanese, and Hawaiians. The present home of the Association is situated in a central part of the city, and is largely used by the young men of the city. The following statistics, read at the last annual meeting, outline the work of the previous year: 55,845 visits by young men to the reading room; 274 paying members; employment found for twenty-nine young men; 620 attended lectures; 1750 attended temperance concerts: 5805 attended the various religious meetings in the rooms; 5126 attended services at the prison, 905 attended services at the barracks; 1505 attended the Bethel Hall meetings; 17,780 papers, periodicals, and tracts distributed.

THE Y.W.C.A.

Rev. E. A. Stuart, Messrs. W. R. Lane and W. T. Paton will be the speakers at the annual meeting of the London Y.W.C.A. early in April. Lord Kinnaird will preside.

The annual report of the Stoke Newington and Upper Clapton branch, 22, Cazenove-road, states that since the removal into the present rooms God has rewarded faith by increasing the membership and sending from time to time the needed funds. Much remains to be done; especially is there an opening for work amongst young girls, and the committee hope before long to have a flourishing junior branch. The income for the year was £39 17s., and the expenditure £34 10s. 11d. Miss Harbord is secretary pro tem.

The annual meeting of members and friends of the Park Mission branch was held at 13, Duke-street, on the 8th inst. About 100 attended. Miss Morley presided, and gave an encouraging address. Those present who were not members of the Y.W.C.A. were urged to join, not only for the advantage that it would be to themselves, but for the help they might be to others. During the evening several ladies played and sang, and Rev. W. P. Legg gave an address on the first Psalm, or "The way to be happy." Refreshments were served at the close, and each girl on leaving received a bunch of flowers. The Bible classes on Sunday afternoons and Thursday evenings are held at 16A, Old Cavendish-street. During the year upwards of 350 cases of more or less friendless girls were helped by the Park Mission.

The annual meeting of the St. John's Wood Institute at 46, Wellington-road, was held at the Lecture Hall of the Presbyterian Church. Rev. J. Monro Gibson, D.D., presided, expressing his warm interest in the work of the institute, and addresses were given by Mrs. F. A. Bevan and Mr. Robert White. The annual report was encouraging. The membership is 461, and of this number 276 are teachers, or engaged in business, and seventy-eight in domestic service. The average attendance at the Bible classes is over ninety. Evening educational classes in several subjects are self-supporting. The members support a native teacher in India, also an evening club for laundry and other working girls of the neighbourhood. Twenty boarders are received, and in addition there is a "Travellers' Bed." During the year thirty-one respectable but shelterless girls were brought in by the police.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

During 1894 the C.E. Societies contributed to the American Board 10,673 dols., and to the Woman's board 6984 dols., a large gain over previous years.

The Santee Agency in Nebraska now has three junior societies, and the Young People's Society is carried on by the Indian students without help from the teachers.

The sixth anniversary of Stratford-grove Baptist Society has been held. The secretary reported that the Sunshine Committee during the severe weather had given food, coals, clothing, etc., to several poor destitute families.

The Sunday Breakfast Association, supported by the C.E. societies of Wilmington, Del., reports for its first year an attendance of 6928, 311 signatures to the total abstinence pledge, 531 requests for prayers, and 233 professed conversions.

The Endeavourers at Bridge-street, Barton-hill, Bristol, have held their anniversary. Satisfactory reports were given by the secretary and treasurer. Addresses were delivered by Revs. T. Davis, F. Page, and Messrs. Crane and Webb.

Rev. J. M. G. Owen, of Hagley-road, Birmingham, in the course of an interview the other day, said: "The Christian Endeavour Society distinctly supplies what has been a lack in the Baptist churches, and as long as it is kept free from sensationalism, has wonderful scope for good work."

The Young People's Society at Clarendon-street, Boston, is making an effort to raise a Gordon Memorial Fund, to be applied to the debt resting on the Baptist Missionary Union. The movement is inspired by a desire on the part of the young people to honour the memory of their late pastor. It is well known that the work of world-wide missions lay very near to Dr. Gordon's heart, and that the debt of £40,000 upon the Missionary Union gave him great anxiety during the last months of his life.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[From our own Correspondents.]

OXFORD.

On Saturday and Sunday next a conference will be held in connection with the Inter University Christian Union and Students' Volunteer Movement.

The second Bampton Lecture was delivered on Sunday, the subject being the characteristics of Christian ethics. Mr. Strong showed that the distinctive feature of the Gospel is the new life in Christ received by faith, in order to its manifestation in outward character. The Gospel is not a new external theory of life, but a new internal power for character and conduct by means of the Holy Spirit influencing the will and inner nature.

The Rev. C. G. Baskerville, of Tonbridge, preached at St. Peter-le-Bailey, on Sunday evening, in place of Rev. F. J. Chavasse, who was unwell, und unable to preach as announced.

The annual meetings in connection with the London City Mission were held last week, when one of the missionaries, Mr. Malcomson, gave a most interesting account of his work among soldiers. The supporters of the mission in Oxford are regrettably few, but those few are tried and true, and it is hoped their number will soon increase.

The Rev. P. T. Forsyth, of Cambridge, was the preacher at Mansfield on Sunday morning. It would be almost impossible to conceive of two such different preachers and messages as those of the last two Sundays, though each was valuable in its way and place.

The resignation by Sir Henry Acland of his connection with the University is being made the occasion of a recognition of his long services to Oxford by the enlargement of the Nurses' Home associated with the name of his late wife. The poor of Oxford have the valuable services of the nurses free of all charge, from this institution, which is thus of inestimable value to the city, as also to the University. A large meeting was held on Friday to promote this new effort, which has every prospect and guarantee of success.

CAMBRIDGE.

The Bishop of St. Andrews preached the University sermon in Great St. Mary's on Sunday last. A large number of men were present, and the Bishop gave a very helpful exposition of 2 Tim. ii. 1, "My son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus."

In the evening Principal Moule concluded his course of sermons on "The New Covenant," in Holy Trinity Church, taking as his text Heb. xiii. 20. Next Sunday a series of sermons will be commenced, entitled "Interviews with Jesus."

Dr. Fairbairn, of Mansfield House, Oxford, preached the sermons both morning and evening at Emmanuel Congregational Church.

On Thursday, March 7, a very large public meeting was convened in the Guildhall to hear the Archbishop of Canterbury plead the cause of the Assyrian Christians, whom he spoke of as probably a body of the most primitive Christians existing. The Master of Trinity, Bishop of Ely, Bishop Selwyn, and the Mayor also spoke on the subject.

IRISH NOTES.

The annual collection on behalf of home missions was made in all the Presbyterian churches of Ireland on Sunday last.

The contributions to the Church Missionary Society from Ireland have increased from £10,000 in 1892 to £15,000 in 1894.

Mr. Eugene Stock, of the Church Missionary Society, has been addressing a series of meetings in Dublin, Belfast, Armagh, and other centres. In Dublin Mr. Stock preached in several of the churches, a very unusual thing for a "layman" to do in this country.

The late Rev. C. E. Cairnes, of Drogheda, who was drowned on December 29 at Moritz, Switzerland, has bequeathed the sum of £20,000 in charitable legacies, including £1000 to Dr. Barnardo's Homes, £1000 to the Boys' Home, 95, Southwark-street, London, £1000 to the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, £1000 to the China Inland Mission, and £500 to the American Presbyterian Mission in Egypt.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Burnley.—As the outcome of a seventeen days' mission at Colne-road, by Rev. S. B. Beattie, a large number have been induced to declare for Christ.

Clewer, Weston-super-Mare.—Mr. W. J. Gadsby has been evangelising in this district for the past six months, with many tokens of God's blessing following his labours.

Mr. Henry Smith has completed a three weeks' mission in Skinningrove. Many professed to accept Christ. This evangelist is now labouring at the Wesleyan Chapel, Barrington.

Gainsborough.—A most successful ten days' mission has been conducted by Rev. Thomas Law, preceded by special prayer-meetings. The services have been well attended, the congregations increasing up to the end. Some most interesting and encouraging conversions have taken place.

Ireland.—A fortnight's Gospel mission has been held in the Presbyterian Church, Bray, by Mr. S. G. Montgomery, of Bangor. A similar mission has been held at the Methodist Church, Darbysbridge, Armagh, by Miss Wakefield, of Portadown; and at Mahon, co. Armagh, by Revs. Wm. Maguire and T. E. Gibson.

Mr. Henry Collins, of the London Evangelisation Society, has conducted a two weeks' mission at Cox Green Mills, near Bolton, belonging to Messrs. J. and T. Garnett. His labours have been productive of much good. Many have professed to come over to the Lord's side. Mr. Collins's audiences were large and attentive throughout.

Mr. J. B. Atkinson has concluded a very successful mission at Alford (Orby). The weather was unfavourable, but there were large congregations, especially on the two Sabbaths and last night of the mission. On the very first night four souls were led to Christ. Several others were converted during the mission, and many more were deeply impressed.

North-West Essex.—A ten days' mission, recently conducted at Braughing by Rev. J. H. Marshall, has proved so successful that the limit of ten days was extended to over two weeks. The chapel has been crowded despite bitterly cold weather, and people travelled several miles, in some cases night after night. Difficulty has been experienced in closing meetings owing to the interest manifested.

Durham.—Mr. Newton Jones has held a mission at Durham. The meetings were well attended, and continued to improve in point of numbers every evening. The children's meetings were most successful; considerably over a hundred scholars signed papers stating their desire to serve Christ. Many of the elder scholars have also been brought to the Lord; also some young men not attached to any place of worship.

Mr. Gerald Coultas has concluded a month's mission at Brynmawr. Among the seekers at the last meeting was a man who had heard the open-air singing, and had come straight from the public-house bar. His wife followed him, whilst his aged Christian father was standing by shedding tears of joy over the prodigal's return. We thank God for bringing the churches into closer union with each other, as one of the outcomes of the united mission.

A. M. Winslow.

The Weaver Brothers commenced a three weeks' mission in connection with Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, on Sunday last. They had a crowded congregation in the evening at the Paragon Music Hall, which has been taken for the Sunday evening services during the painting and renovating of the Assembly Hall. On Sunday evening the refreshment bars were made use of as inquiry-rooms, and a number of anxious persons were dealt with.

Leeds.—A ten days' mission has just been held at St. Peter's Mission by Rev. John Gawthrop, Sister Louie, Rev. J. Pickup, and Mr. J. W. Cannon. Special posters were printed announcing services for the unemployed; many working men responded to the invitation and received good. Sister Louie's singing of the Gospel deserves very special mention. Her consecrated voice was used by God in reaching many hearts. The congregations were good, and conversions took place nearly every night.

Chatteris, Cambs.—Mission services have recently been held in this chapel with very marked and blessed results. The first week was devoted to prayer-meetings, which were well attended, and much of the power of God's Spirit was felt. During the second week, in addition to the public services in the evening, Bible readings were given in the afternoon by Revs. G. Gibson and G. Davies. As the result of these services the church has been greatly quickened, and many persons, mostly young men and women, have been brought to Christ.

Manchester.—Mr. Charles Lazenby (of the Evangelisation Society) has paid a second visit, and conducted a fortnight's special services, at Holland-street Ragged School. The mission has been a season of great blessing and help, not only to those who knew not Christ, and have come to Him for pardon, but to believers and workers. Since the mission held last year we have been gathering fruit from the seed then sown, and a large number of our young men and women have become earnest teachers and workers who were then out of Christ.

Thomas Morris, Supt.

Mrs. Baeyertz.—The Saltcoats Y.M.C.A. finished a ten days' mission on Wednesday, March 6. The meetings were conducted and addressed by Mrs. Baeyertz. Afternoon Bible-readings were given in the Christian Institute; the eager listening audiences quite filled the hall, and many Christians received new strength and stimulus. The evangelistic meetings in the evening were held in the Town Hall, and on most of the nights it was filled to overflowing, numbers waited to the inquiry meeting each night; many more of whom no definite record was kept acknowledged being helped to a more decided stand for Christ.

OBITUARY.

PROFESSOR D. HENRI MEYER, MONTAUBAN.

Yet another blow has fallen upon our brethren in France, Henri Meyer having been called away at the age of fifty-three. Born at Rochelle, he early became a disciple of Christ, and studied for the ministry at Montauban. For twenty-five years he was pastor at La Roche-sur-Yon, and for a long time president of the consistory at Pouzauges. At length he was appointed to a professorship at Montauban, and there he exercised a powerful influence over the students. His contributions to theological literature were valuable, his principal work being "The Christianity of Christ."

REV. HORATIO WILKINS, CHELTENHAM.

Many will regret the death of this devoted servant of Christ, who while strength lasted did valuable service. Seven years ago, after presiding over the large work at Salem, Cheltenham, with increasing acceptance and multiplying evidences of usefulness, for no less than seventeen years, he was laid aside, and found it necessary to retire entirely from active service. Since then he has continued a prostrate sufferer, largely from bronchial affection, but he bore his trial with exemplary fortitude, a fortitude which seemed the fitting development and witness of his ministry. He was stricken down as a comparatively young man, while apparently full of promise of many years of further work. To the last he bore a calm bright testimony to the sustaining grace of God.

DEAN FREMANTLE.

The Dean of Ripon, Dr. W. R. Fremantle, died on Friday last at Wimbledon, aged eighty-seven. He caught a chill while attending a meeting of the Mission to Navvies, held in Dean's-yard, Westminster, on Thursday, February 28, and was obliged to take to his bed. Bronchial pneumonia then set in after influenza. The Dean was a son of Sir Thomas Fremantle, who distinguished himself in the navy at Copenhagen and Trafalgar, and became Admiral Fremantle. He was educated at Eton and Oxford. He was vicar of Steeple Claydon and Rector of Middle Claydon from 1841 to 1876. Bishop Wilberforce gave him a honorary canonry at Christ Church, Oxford, notwithstanding that there had been many passages of arms between them on Papal Aggression, Cuddesdon College, and ritual questions. In 1876 he became Dean of Ripon, in succession to Dr. McNeile. The Dean was a strong Evangelical, and, in the Convocation of York, took a leading part in the debates. Dr. Fremantle was a frequent speaker in London on behalf of Evangelical societies, and was practically the founder of the Navvy Mission. He was also a constant attendant and speaker at Church Congresses.

REV. FREDERIC GREEVES, D.D.

Many will hear with deep regret of the calling home of this honoured and devoted minister, an ex-president of the Wesleyan Conference and Principal of the Southlands Training College, Battersea. Some months since he had a serious illness, from which he had only partially recovered when a week since he had another relapse, and on Monday he died. Dr. Greeves was a native of Bedford, and from the commencement of his ministry (in 1855) gave promise of a useful and honourable career. He rendered important service as minister in Paris. For eighteen years he was a prominent minister in London, and his cultured and thoughtful preaching drew large congregations in the Hinde-street, Lambeth, Chelsea, Southwark, Highbury, and Mildmay Park circuits. He took a prominent part in the business of the Wesleyan Conference. One position of trust after another was assigned to him, until he was in 1884 elected President of the Conference. After spending two years at Chislehurst, he was appointed Principal of the Southlands Training College for Schoolmistresses. It will be remembered that last summer he lost his eldest brother, who was financial secretary of the Home Missionary branch of Methodism, and more recently another brother, also a prominent Wesleyan minister, has died. Far beyond the limits of Methodism, Dr. Greeves's death will be mourned as that of one who has rendered good service to the Church of Christ.

SIR HENRY RAWLINSON.

The death of Sir Henry Rawlinson last week brought to a close the long and eventful career of a brilliant Orientalist, and an eminent statesman. He came of a distinguished family, and was born in 1810. Entering the East India Company's service, he proceeded to Bombay in 1827. He acquired the native languages with such facility, that within a year he was appointed interpreter to the 1st Bombay Grenadiers. Advancement was steady. In 1833 he was sent to Persia, and afterwards he served his country in Afghanistan. In 1843 he became British Resident at Bagdad, and threw himself with great vigor into archæological research. By mastering the old Persian character on the tables at Behistun he found the key which eventually deciphered the memorials of Assyrian history; and in 1846 he published his first work on the cuneiform inscriptions. In 1847 he obtained by incredible personal exertion and not without risk (as the most important inscriptions were on a precipitous rock 300 feet above the plain) complete copies of all the inscriptions. In 1849 he paid a visit to England after an absence of twenty-two years, bringing with him the copies mentioned. A very short time afterwards he read his celebrated paper on the cuneiform inscriptions of Assyria and Babylonia, in which he gave the first translation of the "Black Obelisk Inscription." Subsequently Sir Henry sat in Parliament, and published valuable works on Oriental antiquities and politics.

MRS. J. T. M. WARE.

This devoted Christian worker fell asleep in Christ on the 8th inst., after a short attack of influenza, in the 76th year of her age. She was the daughter of the late Mr. George Payne, of Newgate-street, E.C. Her career was a truly remarkable one. Engaged in a business at Brighton more than 50 years ago, she so laboured after working hours in visiting the sick and poor, and in rescue work, that her health gave way, and she had to return to her home in London, her life being despaired of. Recovering strength, however, she commenced visiting the poor in the East-end, and taught in the Sunday-school of St. Andrew's, Holborn. In 1847 she joined the Field-lane Ragged School staff, and continued her work of teaching and visiting in the neighbourhood, and distributing tracts. She became one of its pioneers, helped in starting the mothers' meetings, and conducted the Bible-class. She also visited the prisons of Newgate and Giltspur-street Compter, taking at the latter on Sunday-afternoons a Bible-class of women similar to that conducted by the late Mrs. Fry. She was afterwards one of a committee of lady visitors at Holloway Prison.

Mrs. Ware also assisted the late Lieutenant Blackmore in the midnight meeting and rescue movement associated with the late Mr. Edward Thomas, of 200, Euston-road, &c. She was baptized by the Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel in 1850, having attended his ministry before his secession. In 1853, having been married to the late Mr. J. T. Ware, hon. sec. of the Field-lane Ragged School, they settled at Hopton (near Harling), in Suffolk. It was in the villages of Norfolk and Suffolk chiefly that her labours of love were carried on from 1853 to 1882, for she and her husband were instrumental in bringing a large number of the farm labourers and their families to Christ as their Saviour, so that when a Gospel meeting-room had been built at Hopton, mainly at Mrs. Ware's expense, people were known to flock to it from about a dozen villages. A worship meeting and Gospel meeting were and are now weekly held in the room on Lord's days, and other Christian gatherings during the week. Mrs. Ware was spiritually blessed to young and old, and especially to the poor and sick. After leaving Suffolk, and taking up her residence with her eldest daughter, Mrs. H. M. Barnett, at Stoke Newington, she became a well-known Christian worker at Mildmay, assisting in prayer at the weekly meeting of the China Inland Mission and other gatherings. She was a very effective and constant tract distributor and visitor at public-houses, and was enabled to prove extraordinarily bold and faithful in dealing with people personally about Christ.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For an infidel, that God may bless the means used to the conversion of his soul.—For guidance in a matter of vital importance to the heathen.—For mission at Motherwell, Scotland, beginning Sunday, Mar. 11, by Mr. Gerald Coultas.—For special services by Mr. J. de Burgh, Rochford, in Cage-lane Mission Hall, March 17 to 31.—For blessing on Mr. J. J. Scroggie's mission at Colchester, commencing on 17th inst. PRAISE.—For manifest blessing granted to the month's united mission at Brynmawr.—For restoration to health of a dear and only daughter, prayed for in The Christian some months ago, and then seriously ill.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Liverpool returns to his work from Norwich this week.

The Dean of Westminster is recovering slowly from an attack of influenza.

The Bishop of Columbia has arrived in London for a few weeks' rest after the illness through which he has passed.

Rev. Henry Danvers Macnamara, rector of St James's, Carlickhithe, has been appointed chaplain to the Queen.

Canon Eyre, of Tiverton, has accepted the vicarage of Sheffield—an appointment which will give general satisfaction.

Dr. Troutbeck has been appointed to the Precentorship of Westminster Abbey, vacant by the death of Rev. Samuel Flood Jones.

A Palestine Exhibition will be held in Holloway Hall from the 11th to the 23rd inst., in connection with the London Jews Society.

Prebendary Rogers, who has been lying ill at his residence, Devonshire-square, for the past few days, is said to be improving.

The Archbishop of York proposes going abroad for a somewhat longer period than usual, and will be absent from Bishopthorpe for five weeks, from March 18.

Rev. Chauncy Maples, Archdeacon of Nyassaland, who joined the Universities Mission in 1876, has accepted the Bishopric of Nyassaland, vacant through the resignation of Dr. W. B. Hornby.

Canon Venables, of Lincoln, died on Tuesday from influenza, and Mrs. Venables succumbed to a similar attack on Wednesday. Much sympathy is felt with the family in this double bereavement.

A new Mission chapel and parish room has been opened in the parish of Kirby Cane, Norfolk. It is a gift of a former parishioner of the rector's (Rev. W. Hay Chapman) at All Souls', Langham-place.

The Archbishop of Dublin was presented last week by Rev. A. C. Thiselton with an address signed by over five hundred of the clergy of the Church of England, in acknowledgment of services rendered by the Archbishop to the Reformed Church of Spain by the consecration of Bishop Cabrera.

The London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian states that steps are being taken to protest against the way in which Evangelical clergymen are constantly passed over in public appointments. It is, in fact, urged that if the bishoprics continue to be distributed on the principle pursued in recent years by both Governments, Evangelicals will soon be left without a representative amongst the episcopate.

The Church Pastoral Aid Society's Ladies' Training Home, Blackheath, was opened on Saturday week. Mr. Henry Morris, who presided, expressed his sympathy with this new venture. Rev. John Barton made a statement regarding the acquisition of the Home and the work it is hoped it will do. Prebendary Webb-Peploe gave a devotional address on Phil. iv. 1-3. Rev. W. H. Barlow added the expression of his sympathy with this new movement.

Rev. Frederick Relton delivered, on Friday, in St. Bartholomew, Moorfields, the first of a series of lectures on English Church Reformers, taking for his subject John Wyclif. After briefly sketching Wyclif's life, he summed up Wyclif's services to the Church and the nation—(1) His insistence on the nature of the State and the Church; (2) his translation of the whole of the Bible into English; (3) his protest against Papal interference in both Church and State; and (4) his protest against the Roman dogma of transubstantiation.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. R. Rew has completed nine years' useful pastorate at Buxton.

Farnham village churches report growing prosperity during the past year.

Rev. R. Roberts has been recognised as pastor of Brownroyd Church, Bradford.

Mr. David Barnett has been ordained to the pastorate of Grove-street Church, Boston.

Heath Chapel, Halifax, and Glinton Chapel, Peterborough, have been reopened after renovation.

Rev. Wm. Allan, late of Melrose, has been recognised as pastor of Hanover Church, Stockport.

Dr. Dale's state of health is causing his friends grave anxiety. Many will pray for his restoration.

The vicar of Stivichall, Rev. H. Armstrong, attended the anniversary meetings of West Orchard Sunday-school, Coventry.

New Sunday-school class rooms and halls have been opened for the young men and young women of Hanley Tabernacle.

Mr. James Allen, of Kendal, has given 500 guineas towards the cost of erecting a new chapel at Kendal in celebration of the centenary of Zion Chapel.

At Ebenezer, Steelhouse-lane, Birmingham, encouraging progress is reported. The membership numbers 250. The Sunday-school is one of the largest in the Midlands.

Salem Church, Bradford, reports a membership of 334, of whom twenty-three were received in the past year. In the Sunday-schools are 663 scholars and sixty-six teachers.

Luton Church reports 407 members, an increase of fifteen over last year. In the Sunday-school are 450 scholars and fifty-one teachers. The Society of Christian Endeavour has eighty-two members, and the P.S.A. 664.

At the annual meeting of Edmonton and Tottenham Congregational Church reports showed a membership of 495, sixty having been added during the year. 1100 children are in the Sunday-schools. A new mission hall has been built at Angel-road, and an energetic work is being carried on.

Camberwell Green Church shows a total membership of 613, of whom eighty-four have been added during the year. There are 918 scholars and eighty teachers in the Sunday-schools, in addition to the 198 young men and women who are being trained in the Young People's Institute. The Christian Endeavour Society has an active membership of sixty-six, and there are 126 on the roll of the Young Men's Society. The Church maintains an active mission at Waterloo-street.

Calls.—Rev. Dr. Leach, of Queen's Park, to Stepney Meeting House; Rev. A. Pringle, of Maidstone, to Caterham; Mr. W. J. Coulter, of Reading, to St. Columb; Rev. W. A. Bevan, of Beaminster, to Landport; Mr. R. Shorten, to Desborough; Rev. E. Austin, of Marsh Gibbon, to Widnes; Rev. H. J. Just, of Hyde, to Accrington.

Resignations.—Rev. W. A. Blake, of Upper Clapton; Rev. G. G. Horton, of the Cowper Memorial Church, Olney; Rev. Henry Sturt, of Dewsbury.

BAPTIST.

Blaenywana Church, South Wales, is about to celebrate its centenary.

Rev. Thomas Moran, Caerphilly, has decided to resign his pastorate, after seventeen years' work.

Rev. J. R. Russell, formerly of High Wycombe, has commenced his ministry at Astwood Bank, near Birmingham.

Mr. Samuel Hutchinson and Mr. E. A. Booth have set sail by the P. and O. s.s. Oriental, to take part in the Strict Baptist Mission work in India.

Rev. J. T. Briscoe, after eighteen years' fruitful work at Rye-lane, Peckham, bade farewell last week to his attached people on the eve of his departure for Bristol.

New Sunday-schools to accommodate 1000 scholars are to be erected in connection with Carr-road Chapel, Nelson, which is also to be enlarged so as to receive 350 additional worshippers.

The manual of Rev. James Baillie's church at Bloomsbury reports 807 members. In the Sunday-school are 79 teachers and 875 scholars, 75 of whom are church members. The numerous organisations connected with the church are in vigorous working order, and show both success and useful activity.

At the quarterly meeting of the Home Counties Association, held in Raleigh Park Chapel, Brixton Hill, a conference took place on "The Limitations of Prayer." Rev. R. J. Williamson, in an introductory paper, said the three principal limitations were: (1) Man's limiting God by his unbelief; (2) That the requests asked were not in harmony with God's will; (3) The materialism in all hearts.

The anniversary of the work at the Tabernacle, Grays, has just been held. The secretary, Mr. G. J. Moore, stated that the past year had been most prosperous. Sixty-three new members joined, forty-eight being baptized by the pastor. The membership stood at 130, a net increase of fifty-four during the year. All branches of service had prospered. The Sunday-school was found to be too small, and some friends undertook the extension of the iron building by 30ft., with the cost of materials only. There were over 300 children, with a staff of nearly thirty teachers. The pastor's Bible-class numbered about seventy members. The Society of Christian Endeavour, numbering 120 members, had been very helpful. The work at Tilbury Dock was progressing, while work had also been commenced at Purfleet.

Calls.—Rev. John Stanley, of Semley, to Coate, Oxon; Rev. T. Morgan, of Dowlais, to Cardiff; Rev. F. J. White, of Faversham, to Stogumber.

Resignations.—Rev. F. T. White, of Faversham; Rev. A. C. Gray, of Lewisham-road Chapel, S.E.; Rev. C. G. Croome, of Shipley (for December 31), Rev. A. T. Prout, of Gosford-street, Coventry.

METHODIST.

A successful mission has been held at Pye Bank Chapel, Sheffield, by Sisters Ethel and Blanche.

Rev. Chas. Garrett, having recovered from his attack of influenza, hopes soon to be able to resume his duties.

A special appeal is being made by Mr. Hugh Price Hughes for £3500 in order to purchase outright Craven Chapel and lecture-hall.

Rev. W. E. Crombie is laid aside by illness; and the wife of Rev. J. Johnson, of Stoke Newington, lies in a critical condition at Bournemouth.

The anniversary of Bowron House will be celebrated in Exeter Hall, May 13. Mrs. Duckworth, wife of the United Methodist President, will preside in the afternoon.

At last week's meeting of the Huddersfield council it was reported that at the twelve days' mission held in eight chapels in the neighbourhood, 250 persons had passed through the inquiry-rooms.

In connection with Rocky-lane Chapel, Birmingham, there is a Sunday afternoon Bible-class, which started thirteen years since with a membership of eight. It now numbers 609, and has an average attendance of 480.

The Ladies' Auxiliary of the Foreign Missionary Society bade farewell last week in City-road Chapel to Misses Lester and Powell, who go to China; Misses Vincent, Lawrence, and Cook, for Ceylon; and Mrs. Prothero to China.

A conference on home mission work has been held at Bristol-road Church, Brighton. Sir John Field, K.C.B., presided, and addresses were delivered by Revs. J. Dymond, J. J. Brooker, S. B. Lane, W. Jackson, A. D. Spong, and Mrs. Gates.

The new Wesleyan Central Hall which it is intended to build in Daniel-street, Ancoats, will provide accommodation for 1000 children on the ground floor, and in a hall above this will be accommodation for 1000 adults. The cost will be £7000, towards which over £4000 has been promised.

The Clapton Mission reports that the membership has increased to 412, being a net increase for the year. The income for all purposes was upwards of £1600. The Medical Mission has dealt during the year with upwards of 4000 cases, 300 persons have been accommodated at the Seaside Home of Rest, 33,000 free breakfasts have been given to poor children, 10,000 free dinners to men out of work, 11,000 soup dinners have been supplied to destitute families, 1500 persons aided, and 6000 garments have been distributed.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. C. Moinet, of St. John's Church, Kensington, has had the degree of D.D. conferred on him by the University of Edinburgh.

Rev. James Donne has conducted a series of evangelistic services at Hirhael, Bangor, as a result of which a large number of persons have joined the various churches.

Rev. Hugh Roberts, who at present has pastoral care of Mostyn and Llanerchymor churches, intends to resign his charge in order to return to mission work. For many years formerly he laboured as missionary on Khassia Hills, India.

The annual report of Grange-road, Birkenhead, states that the total contributions for the past year amounted to £1270, the membership of the church at present numbers 565, and all the various organisations have been well sustained.

Among the leading Presbyterians who have been, or are, ill with influenza, may be mentioned Principal Dykes, Dr. MacEwan, Rev. John More, of Woolwich; Mr. Henry Robson, Revs. A. N. Mackray, of Croydon; W. A. Macallan, of Norwich; Carnegie Simpson, and David Eades, of Silver Hill.

Calls.—Rev. H. M'Callum, of Nairn, to Tummel Bridge; Rev. R. M. Mackay, of Troon, to Maxwelltown; Rev. J. M. Davies, to Pentre, Rhondda Valley; Rev. J. H. Beynon, of Llanelly, to Risca; Rev. D. Thomas, to Brynmawr.

Resignation.—Rev. E. M. Rees, of Ystrad-terrace, East Glam.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Friends of the east of England will feel the loss and be the poorer for the death on the 7th inst. of Wm. Dilwyn Sims, of Ipswich. London, too, has lost several venerable and very useful Friends. It will be hard to realize that the familiar and loving faces are gone, to be seen no more among men.

The warden of Mansfield House, Percy Alden, has been addressing Friends at Chalfont House, with Walter Hazell, M.P., in the chair. A deeply interested gathering heard his earnest pleadings for social reform and better conditions and surroundings for the working population. Lively discussion followed by a number of Friends, and much sympathy was expressed.

An earnest loving memorial from the Society of Friends was presented to the Emperor and Empress of Russia, on the 27th ult., by two English Friends, who were permitted to press its prayer for "religious liberty" in Russia, and that the "hand of persecution might be stayed." The interview was felt to be "satisfactory," and we may hope will be followed by blessed results.

The great subject of slavery in Africa is obtaining increasing hold on Friends, and the thrilling and awful tales of human suffering are touching their hearts. Petitions were sent to Parliament in support of the motion of J. A. Pease, M.P., respecting Zanzibar and Pemba. The promise of the Government was felt to be satisfactory. But the bulk of the Great Continent is being slave-raided, and England must awake once more and stop it. Every sort of help is needed for the mighty work.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Crumlin, Mon., on 3rd inst., Rev. James Hughes, aged eighty, for fifty-two years rector of Llanhilleth.—At Neatham, Alton, on 4th inst., Mr. John Bowly, for twenty-two years president of the National Temperance League.—At Danbury, Essex, on 2nd inst., Rev. Sir T. Pym Bridges, rector of the parish since 1855.—At Sudbury, Mr H. M. Ives, a devoted Sunday-school superintendent and Christian labourer.—At Six Ways, Aston, Mr. Alfred Groves, whose life has been given to Sunday-school service with blessed results.—At Plymouth, Mrs. Howard, aged fifty-eight, wife of the vicar of St. Jude's.—At Stockton, on 4th inst., Mr. C. Bone, an active Wesleyan.—At Rochdale, Mr. J. H. Holden, aged eigty-two, a veteran worker.—At Llanelly, Rev. David Miles, aged eighty-one, who has done in his day valuable service.—At Chorlton-cum-Hardy, Rev. R. Tonge, rector of St. Anne and St. Mary, Manchester.—At Margate, Mr. W. P. Beal, greatly beloved for his testimony and service.—At Sheffield, Mr. Adam Wood, aged seventy-two, who, as a Christian citizen and a servant of Christ, rendered valuable service.—At Notting Hill, on 2nd inst., Mr. William Coats, aged eighty-two, one of the oldest members of the committee of the Congregational Union, and a generous helper of the Lord's work.—At Foot's Cray, aged seventy, Rev. James Bedell, who for many years did good service as a minister at Manchester and at Lymm.—At Guildford, on 2nd inst., Rev. John Hart, aged seventy-seven, for eighteen years pastor in the town.—At Clougheney, near Newry, Mr. J. H. Porter, for many years an elder in the Presbyterian Church.—At Belfast, Mr. Alexander Martin, aged ninety-two years.—At New Pallas, Rev. Jas. Fitzgibbon McMahon, rector of Grean, co. Limerick, aged sixty-seven years.—At Sligo, Mr. Ed. Chism, an earnest Christian.—At Skerries, Juliet, widow of Rev. Robert Blundell, rector of Headford, aged eighty-seven years.

Tracts for Mauritius.—Mr. James Bappor, Catechist, St. Andrew's Church, Mauritius, would be thankful for supplies of Gospel tracts in Telegu and French. The people of the island freely receive these missives.

To Queensland.—A gentleman will be glad to hear of Christian people leaving London for Queensland, March 22.—Address "L.," care of the Editor of The Christian.

Village Work.—Pastor Thompson, Aldwinckle, Thrapston, of the Baptist Church in this little village in the county of Hereford, devotes considerable time to village visitation, and to aid him in this he greatly desires a bicycle. Could any friend present him with a second-hand machine?

MR. EUGENE STOCK has been visiting various places in the North of Ireland. He closed his tour by a public meeting in Armagh, succeeding an interesting drawing-room gathering of missionary friends, held at the Palace, on the invitation of the Lord Primate and Miss Gregg. The Belfast meetings will be long remembered in that city for the spiritual and earnest tone which pervaded them from beginning to end. A meeting held on Tuesday morning, after a breakfast given to the clergy of the city by the members of the C.M.S. Junior Clerical Association, was the crowning point of a successful series of meetings. The Bishop presided, and in a few well-chosen words declared his belief that, deeply as he would regret the loss of any of the clergy present, he would welcome the news that some of the brethren had offered themselves for foreign service, so strongly did he believe that increased and abiding blessing would rest upon the church that sent forth her best to the service of God. Mr. Eugene Stock spoke at some length on the two words, "not—but." "Not I, but the Lord"; "not the society, but the cause"; "not money, but men."—The Record.

SILENT SUFFERING!

Only yesterday we found home after home where starvation was being patiently borne—accentuated in many cases by acute sickness, specially among the children, who often are the greatest sufferers. The true condition of things can scarcely be realised, and we cannot too urgently repeat that despite the milder weather, the most heart-breaking destitution remains. Free meals and other help is afforded both to adults (dock-labourers) and suffering children. Contributions would be gratefully received by Mrs. F. A. Bevan, 59, Prince's Gate, S.W.; or the Director, N.E. London Gospel Missions, William Chorley, 6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, London, N.; or may be sent to the Office of The Christian. Parcels to Mrs. Davis, 205, Devon's-road, Bow Common, E.

FRIENDLESS & FALLEN.

Estd. 1857.

Homes for 240 Young Women & Girls.

The accounts close on the 31st inst., and all contributions received up to that date will be included in the forthcoming Annual Report.

The demand made upon our resources through the recent bitter weather has been very heavy, and there is an urgent need of further special help to meet pressing liabilities.

The readers of "The Christian" who have not already contributed are earnestly asked to assist this Mission of Mercy to the Friendless and Fallen.

Messrs. Morgan and Scott will receive and acknowledge contributions.

WILLIAM J. TAYLOR,
Secretary.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION

Is the only Institution whose great aim is to lead to Christ all those employed on the Theatre and Music Hall Stage.

It is under the immediate patronage of H.R.H. Princess Christian, H.R.H. The Duchess of York, and H.R.H. The Duchess of Teck.

THE MISSION IS IN GREAT AND URGENT NEED OF HELP.

Unless this be shortly forthcoming, its most interesting and useful work will have to be seriously curtailed.

ONE THOUSAND POUNDS IS WANTED IMMEDIATELY

To clear off outstanding accounts.

Will every Christian reader interested in the welfare, and desirous of the salvation, of his or her sisters who are placed in so much peril, send immediate help (large or small) to the Treasurer, Joseph Peters, Esq., or the Director,

ALFRED B. HARDING.

Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, W.C.

THE LONDON CITY MISSION

Employs 480 MISSIONARIES who visit systematically all the year round in the Family, Factory and Workshop, Public House, Hospital, Workhouse, Open Air, among the Homeless Poor, Foreigners of all Nationalities, &c., &c. More than 500,000 MEN regularly visited by the Missionaries.

FUNDS to carry on this most necessary work are urgently needed, and will be gratefully received by the Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq.; or by the Secretaries, Rev. T. S. HUTCHINSON, M.A., and Rev. ROBERT DAWSON, B.A.

The object of this Society is to promote Mission-work in the Church of England by supplying a staff of experienced Mission Preachers, who possess true Evangelistic gifts and real spiritual power. Evidential Missions have been made a special department of the work. Their aim is to counteract the spread of Agnosticism. Missions have been held in over 3000 parishes.

£400 are urgently NEEDED for pressing needs. SUBSCRIPTIONS and DONATIONS will be gratefully acknowledged.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

Patron:—

Admiral of the Fleet H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, K.G.

AN additional £2000 a year is much needed to cope with the terrible evils afflicting sailors of various nations frequenting the Port of London, and to meet the increased liabilities arising from various urgent extensions recently made of religious operations amongst Sailors of numerous nationalities, afloat and ashore, in sixty-four seaports, including the Port of London, the Manchester Ship Canal, San Francisco Harbour and Australian waters. 61 Mission Vessels and Boats and 79 Seamen's Churches and Institutes are in constant use, winter and summer.

INCOME, £33,586.

Contributions, Offertories, Drawing-room Meeting Collections, &c., are solicited. They should be sent to Commander W. Dawson, R.N., The Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham-st., Strand, London, W.C.

MEMORIAL TO MISS DANIELL.

It is proposed to raise a memorial to this devoted worker, whom God honoured so greatly amongst our redcoats. An appeal, influentially signed, states that:—

"The scheme decided upon, after prayerful consideration, by several of Miss Daniell's friends is the purchase of the freehold of the London Soldiers' Home for the sum of £3500. This was a special wish of Miss Daniell's, and in fact she raised £200 towards this object before her death. The purchase of the freehold will save the annual expenditure of £110 for ground rent. All friends of the late Miss Daniell and those interested in work among soldiers are earnestly invited to contribute towards this scheme. The honorary secretary is Captain Granville Smith, Coldstream Guards, 131, Queen's Gate, S.W."

Field-Marshal Lord Wolseley writes:—"The purchase of this freehold would be of great advantage to the London Soldiers' Home and consequently to the Army generally. Miss Daniell's name will always be remembered with respect and affection by all ranks in the Army, and I can earnestly recommend this proposed memorial to her as deserving the support of everyone who takes an interest in the British soldier."

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.

On Monday last a special reunion of ladies and girls connected with the theatre and music hall stage took place at Macready House, Covent Garden, on the kind invitation of Joseph Wright, Esq., of Glasgow, whose well-known efforts to reach and benefit both theatricals and show people engaged in fairs have been productive of so much good. A liberal tea was provided, followed by a short and simple service, at which Mr. Wright gave an earnest, sympathetic address, concluding with an invitation to all members of the Theatrical Mission to pay him a visit when passing through Glasgow. The director, Mr. Alfred B. Harding, added a few words of kind advice and encouragement, and pressed the members to confide in himself and the other workers of the Mission whenever they required guidance and direction. The Friday afternoon reunions continue to be highly appreciated. That held on Friday week was ably addressed by Dr. Newman Hall.

ZANZIBAR STRANGERS' REST.

The new report shows much interesting work among sailors of various nations passing through Zanzibar, as well as among natives. It has now been definitely decided that Miss Beatrice Hurditch and Miss Coote will start for Zanzibar (D.V.) on April 12. There is great need of the following articles to send out with these sisters:—A piano or harmonium, a magic lantern and slides (Bible subjects), flags; also books suitable for sailors, prints and calicoes for the native girls' working class, Swiss milk, tinned meats, and jams, etc. Any of such things would be most gratefully received by 163, St. George's-street, E. J. Theo. Isaac.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—On Friday evening the monthly muster of the Christian Harbour Lights, an auxiliary of this society, was held at the Institute, St. George's-street, London Docks. Col. W. G. MacGregor, who presided, gave a helpful address. A number of testimonies were given by sailors, in which they recognised the hand of God in preserving them from storm and pestilence, to which so many of their fellow-seamen had succumbed, and the meeting was altogether most encouraging in tone. A fund is being raised for purchasing a lime-light apparatus, the secretary (Rev. G. J. Hill) intending to give lectures to seamen on Scriptural subjects as another counter-attraction to the public-houses and other sources of temptation with which the locality abounds. For this object contributions will be welcomed.

PETTICOAT LANE.—A band of workers from St. Mary-at-Hill Church are carrying on a very interesting piece of work in Petticoat-lane every Sunday morning. According to rules of Petticoat-lane they are compelled to have a costermonger's barrow and conduct a business. Their business is to distribute tracts and advocate the Gospel of Christ. It is estimated that 15,000 men use "The Lane" every week. The workers experience a good deal of opposition; sometimes their barrow is pitched by main force beyond the recognised boundary. Assistance would be welcomed from any who could spend the hour from 11.30 to 12.30 in that part of the Lane near to Aldgate High-street, and would make themselves known to any of the workers. Others can help considerably by sending tracts, etc., to Capt. Frank Lokes, St. Mary-at-Hill Rectory, Eastcheap, E.C. Anti-Infidel Literature would be specially valuable.

Forthcoming Meetings.

[Communications respecting forthcoming meetings cannot be inserted unless received by Tuesday morning at the latest.]

The Evangelisation Society will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, or Wales, on due notice. Apply Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, London, W.C.; or, The Sec., Evangelisation Society, Scottish Branch, The Grove-street Institute, Glasgow.

BILBAO, SPAIN.—The fourteenth report of work in connection with the Luchana Reading Rooms, for British Seamen, states that during last year the attendance of sailors reached the total of 36,516, a considerable increase upon preceding years. Rev. Arthur Burnell, chaplain, writes in the report:—"We are much encouraged by the Sunday evening congregations. Again and again it has been noticed that the number at service has been larger than that on any other evening of the week, and we know that many of our men make it a point coming on Sunday, if they stop on board every other night. This fact goes far to refute the charge that sailors cannot be got to attend a place of worship. In temperance work, though the long-continued 'hammering' of Christian reformers has begun to tell, much remains to be done. Experience proves that temperance work is a necessity, and helps to render men capable of better facing the great concerns of the soul."

RESCUE HOME

(Late Asylum), Harrow-road, W.

Founded by Rev. Thomas Scott, the Commentator, in 1787.

Thousands of fallen and friendless women have been sheltered and placed out in service. FUNDS ARE URGENTLY REQUIRED, ESPECIALLY ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Treasurers—Lord Kinnaird, 1, Pall-mall East, and J. F. W. Deacon, Esq., 20, Birchin-lane, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, or the Secretary will be thankful to receive contributions. c4702

STARVING AND DESTITUTE, verging on crime and suicide, still young and helpable, could obtain fresh start in life through the Labour Homes of the Church Army, if funds permitted. Nearly one million meals served yearly, irrespective of creed, with labour test and Christian sympathy. Donors of 5s. and upwards supplied free with tickets for giving to beggars. £4000 pressingly required for food, clothing, blankets, and maintenance. Staff nearly all unpaid.—Remit, Rev. W. CARLILE, Hon. Chief Secretary, Headquarters, 130, Edgware-road, London, W. c4037

INFLUENZA AND THE POOR.—Terrible suffering and destitution in East London. Will readers come to the rescue? Every gift of money or clothing promptly acknowledged, as usual, by Rev. J. W. Atkinson, Claremont, Cayley-road, London, E., twenty-six years minister of Latimer Congregational Church, East London. Balance-sheet by chartered accountants. c4821

AND

RAGGED SCHOOLS,

SPITALFIELDS.

Who will help the Sick, the Aged, and Struggling Widows with young families?

Among the 3,000 poor children and people identified with this Mission are many suffering very much from want. As the visitors pay upwards of 40,000 visits to the homes of the poor every year, they have special knowledge of the deserving. The whole of the Officers and 120 Teachers and Workers give their services gratuitously.

Contributions will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Hon. Superintendent, CHARLES MONTAGUE, 4, Bedford Square, E., or may be sent to the Office of "The Christian." Bankers, BARCLAY & Co., 54, Lombard Street.

SOUTH AMERICAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.
THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND MISSION TO SOUTH AMERICA.

All who desire to see the Gospel preached to the millions of Indians in South America, and are interested in the spiritual well-being of our fellow-countrymen scattered throughout that vast continent, and who also desire to see its Spanish and Portuguese speaking people brought to a knowledge of the truth, are invited to GIVE THEIR SUPPORT TO THIS SOCIETY, which sends out its Bishop and Clergy and Lay Missionaries to effect these blessed and important objects. Its work at the great ports AMONGST THE SAILORS is deeply valued. THE MISSION TO THE INDIANS OF ARANCANIA, commenced as a fitting memorial of the Jubilee Year, is intended to gather into the Church of Christ this, the finest of the aboriginal races in South America. The Arancanians were long inaccessible to the missionaries of the Gospel, but are now EVERYWHERE OPEN to welcome them. For this new mission the help of new friends and the increased support of old ones are earnestly sought. The project was dear to the hearts of Captain ALLEN GARDINER, and his son and grandson, and has been warmly advocated by the Bishop of the FALKLAND ISLANDS. Cheques and Money Orders should be crossed "Messrs. BARCLAY AND Co.," and made payable to Captain E. POULDEN, R.N., Lay Sec., at the Society's Offices, 1, Clifford Inn, Fleet-street, London, E.C. c4826

THE BENEVOLENT OR

Strangers' Friend Society.

Treasurer, Alderman Sir JOSEPH C. DIMSDALE.
Chairman, J. H. ANDERSON, Esq.

Founded a hundred and nine years ago. GREATLY STRAITENED FROM WANT OF FUNDS. There are 188 Christian men and women unpaid visitors engaged in the Society's work of BEFRIENDING THE SICK POOR of London. Kindly remember it in testamentary arrangements.

Office, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

President—THE LORD KINNAIRD.
Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq.

Each day has a record of blessing. Our ten evangelists are encouraged by open doors, and a fair share of attention from a people who know not the Gospel. Spiritual darkness is dispersed, while infidelity and superstition are overcome by "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." Several of our liberal friends have been called home, and our poverty is such that unless others cast into this part of our Lord's Treasury the work of an effective missionary must cease.

Information will be given and contributions gladly received by J. M. WEYLLAND, Hon. Sec. 14, Nicoll-road, Harlesden, N.W. c4675

GRAND SAILORS' BAZAAR on behalf of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society will be held in the Great Hall, Cannon-street Hotel, London, E.C., on March 26 and 27, 1895, to be opened on Tuesday, 3 p.m., by H.R.H. Princess Louise, the Duchess of Fife, supported by the Duke of Fife, K.T., and on Wednesday, 3 p.m., by the Countess Spencer, supported by Her Majesty's First Lord of the Admiralty. —Gifts in money or goods to be sent to EDWARD W. MATTHEWS, Secretary, Sailors' Institute, Shadwell London, E.

THE EARLSWOOD ASYLUM AND HOME FOR IDIOTS & IMBECILES, REDHILL, SURREY.

Contributions are urgently required to meet the maintenance expenses.

The FORTY-EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY DINNER of the Charity will be held under the presidency of Alderman Sir JOSEPH DIMSDALE, on Tuesday, April 9th, at the Grocers' Hall, Princes-street, E.C. (kindly granted by the Master and Court of Assistants of the Company).—H. GERARD HOARE, Esq., J.P., Treasurer. JAMES DOWNING, Secretary. Offices, 36, King William-street, London Bridge, E.C. c4777

CAREY HOUSE Baptist Deaconess Training Institute, Chester.—We now receive applications from Godly young women desirous of devoting themselves to Christian Work.—Address, Mrs. JONES, 2a, Chichester-street, Chester.

THE "LIBERATOR" RELIEF FUND.

Substitutes for lost dividends are being paid half-yearly to some hundreds of destitute victims, 70 years of age and upwards, and will be continued to be sent to them as long as they live.

There are, however, MANY SAD CASES of destitute and invalid victims, between 60 and 70 years of age, for whom we cannot provide, unless we receive further funds IMMEDIATELY.

Cheques and P.O.'s should be made payable to the "Liberator" Relief Fund, and crossed City Bank.

Rev. J. STOCKWELL WATTS (Hon. Sec.), 16, Farringdon-street, E.C. c4195

Notes and Comments.

We would again remind our readers that it is proposed to hold meetings for Thanksgiving and Prayer in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, E., on Wednesday, May 1. We are thankful to note, from letters received, that a spirit of expectancy prevails among many Christian workers.

The friends who entrust us with donations will greatly help us by stating fully and explicitly the particular mission or effort for which their kind gifts are intended. Some titles of missions, etc., are so similar, that it is necessary to add the name of the secretary, or director of the work; failing that, the address or locality of the institution should be noted. A reference to the head of our donation list this week will show that we have a letter, containing an amount, but no information as to what the gift is for; on the other hand, we receive a letter specifying an amount and name of mission, without any remittance enclosed. We are glad to say, however, that, generally speaking, our correspondents are very careful in attending to these points.

We again beg the attention of London friends of the anti-opium cause and of the temperance and social purity movements, to the meeting to be held at Queen's Hall, Langham-place, W., to-morrow (Friday) evening. Lady Henry Somerset will preside and speak. Mrs. Elizabeth Andrew and Dr. Kate C. Bushnell will give addresses on their Oriental investigations, and Madame Antoinette Sterling has kindly promised to sing.

A Nonconformist pastor writes to us that "there is a strong tendency nowadays for persons who desire church-membership to demand it, or at any rate to expect it [without examination]. And they rather resent any delay. This is a serious symptom. There is far more danger of getting unworthy and useless members than ever before in my time. This may be more particularly true of London; but Dr. Mackennal, of Manchester, made very pointed reference to it lately." Things have greatly and sadly changed since "of the rest durst no man join himself unto them . . . and believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women" (Acts v. 13, 14).

We have seen with heavy hearts the news of another great industrial struggle. The war between masters and men in the boot trade must produce immense suffering, loss, and bitterness of feeling. The social effects will remain for many a day, if an understanding is not quickly arrived at. The worst of it is, that arbitration and conciliation, which have done so much to keep the boot trade in a state of peace, have, at this point, failed. We are sure, however, that the friends of both sides will seize on any hopeful chance of reconciling them. May the right chance come soon.

A workman's odd hours often contain the seeds of danger; he may drink or idle them away, and the habits contracted in the misuse of them will ruin all the rest of his life. Dinner-hour is a dangerous time; so Rev. Vyrnwy Morgan, of Lambeth, thought, when he opened his schoolroom to the working men, and provided an entertainment for them, which they have greatly appreciated. The number attending has risen from 80 to 650. Workmen can take their dinners to the room, or buy sandwiches and cakes, coffee and tea. Good singing is provided, and Gospel addresses are given. They sometimes provide some of the entertainment themselves. All this is hateful to the publicans, who are trying to retaliate by getting the place rated. The question is yet undecided. If it goes for Mr. Morgan and his friends, their example can hardly fail to stimulate many to imitate them.

A correspondent writes to The Echo calling attention to a Ritualistic mission to School Board children. He reminds the public of the exposure of the Society of St. Osmund at the last School Board election—a Society which has prayers for the Pope as the head of the Church, invocation of saints, relic worship, holy coats, and the adoration of the cross. The vicar of St. Andrew's, Plaistow, who is associated with this Society, has "announced that a mission will be held in the parish by two advanced Romanisers" from March 16 to 28, and "on no fewer than seven evenings there will be held what is termed a 'Mission to Board School children,' in addition to services for the children attending the parish school, which will be held at other hours." There is a notice in this church which states that confessions are heard by the clergy there on two nights per week. What will the School Board have to say to this? The old trouble about the "Circular" has been up again, but here we have new material for trouble. Neither the Board nor the public ought to allow this Roman propaganda in rate-supported schools.

Dr. A. Russel Wallace, who has for a long time made the subject of poverty a study, is of opinion that our statistics of poverty are altogether misleading. In London there are 122,840 "official" paupers, but that number takes no account of a still larger number of poor and destitute persons who are provided for by the charities of London, fifty of which have been established since 1883. Dr. Wallace says that in 1893 alone half a million of money was left in charity for the relief of the poor, to say nothing of the sums bequeathed for educational and religious purposes. To the poor who are thus aided from the poor-rate and from charities left to them, are to be added those who die and those who lead a miserable existence, refusing to depend on either aid. How many more might be added who depend on the occasional gifts of the well-to-do of a neighbourhood, and eke them out with the wages of odd jobs? No doubt it is a terrible question, which cannot have its solution postponed for ever. "Why have we growth of wealth and of poverty at the same time?"

The anecdotes about Professor Blackie assume a more tender and more religious tone the more we get to know of him. In the North his spotless life and devout spirit were known to a large circle of friends, but in the South he was chiefly known as a rare scholar, an ardent Scotsman, and an eccentric but lovable man. Underneath all this was a piety as humble as it was deep. In season and out of season he preached the great injunction "to speak the truth in love," these words, in Greek, being written in the left-hand corner of the envelope of almost every letter he wrote, or varied sometimes with the words, "Love is the fulfilling of the law." He loved singing, and practically sang all the day long. His intimate friend, Dr. MacGregor, says that he never knew a man who so constantly rejoiced in the Lord. He used to write down in his day-book every night a selected verse from the Greek New Testament, and try to live up to it the next day.

Rev. Frederick Hastings, who has lately returned from Australia, gives it as his experience that the pulpit there is often more political and even Socialistic in its tinge than in England.

One minister tried a course of twelve sermons on Socialism. He filled his church for twelve Sundays with all the restless thinkers of a city, but a month afterwards had a smaller congregation than before. He confessed to me that he had not had a single accession to his congregation through his effort. Working men rushed to hear their grievances ventilated and sustained, while some liberal supporters who felt out of sympathy with the views expounded were spiritually starved and alienated.

The contrast to this is the experience of ministers who keep to the Scriptures, their testimony being that nothing so holds and interests and helps men in their daily life. The late Dr. David Thomas used to say that a man of ordinary mind would be unfailingly fresh as a preacher if he kept to the Bible; and only last week Rev. J. M. Gibbon said to an interviewer that he finds nothing so enduringly interesting to a congregation as the exposition of Scripture.

"H. P." contributes to The Echo a long notice of a book entitled "The Pretended Benefits of War, by J. Novicow, the Russian economist." It is a good sign that thinking men on the Continent are exposing the evils of the system which aids in keeping Europe poor and restless, ignorant and godless. This book, we see, is written in French, and published in Paris, a token, we suppose, of the author's fear of the Russian censors. It is said to be a mine of facts and arguments, and judging it from the copious extracts given by "H. P." it deserves high praise, and will, we hope, find its way into English-speaking countries through a good translation. The point in favour of war, that it improves the human species by eliminating degenerate specimens, is admirably dealt with.

"It does just the contrary, and selects the strong and healthy for destruction, leaving the weak at home. The flower of the race is taken to be butchered—as in the case of Napoleon, who caused the death of 3,700,000 of the finest men in Europe." If this theory were true, "the most warlike communities would be strongest and handsomest. In this respect, however, the English hold the first place, and they are the only people who have no compulsory service. They obtain their vigour from athletic sports, which never flourish where there is militarism."

There can be no doubt that one main cause of the overthrow of Napoleon was the destruction of the manhood of France.

"Remember my bonds" is the touching appeal with which Paul closes his letter to the Colossians. Brethren of ours, scattered up and down on the face of the earth, and suffering in various ways, make a similar appeal to us. "Remember our exile, our poverty and loneliness," cry our brethren from Siberia, banished thither for the love of Christ. "Remember our threatening dangers," call our Malagasy brethren in such pathetic words as were published in this journal only last week. "Remember our work, and that we represent you, and speak for you," entreat our missionary brothers and sisters in every land. "Remember our trials and sorrows for the Gospel's sake," beg the converts who have been won from heathenism. The voices come from every quarter. We need sympathy as sensitive and love as deep as Christ's to give the response needed. His Spirit within will answer to the spirit of want calling from without.

DRAMAS OF LONDON POOR.

It seemed to me one day quite lately, as I stood in a filthy room in one of our London slums, that here indeed was cause to make God move the heavens and come down. The room was almost empty; a table, two chairs, and a heap of rags in the corner (called by courtesy a bed), comprised the furniture. Crouching over the fire sat the husband, trying to get warm, an old coat thrown round his stooping shoulders. He had a severe attack of bronchitis. The wife was nursing the baby. I had come to see the husband, and had offered the only advice I could offer—that he should go into the infirmary. I was just going away, when I remembered Nellie. Now Nellie has been a friend of mine for months, a quaint little mite, with straw-coloured hair and big dark eyes, and a passion for hymns and "fardens."

"Where's Nellie?" I asked. "'Ere I is," came a faint whisper from a corner. I looked, and then stood speechless. Was that Nellie? That little ghost. Slowly the child tottered across the room towards me.

"She seems weak, Sister," said the mother; "you see they've not 'ad much food lately."

I stooped down and looked into the child's face, gaunt and white, with big weary eyes, and fair hair hanging damply over her forehead. As I held the thin little body between my two hands I murmured in the bitterness of my soul, "Does God see; does He hear?" "She's that weak she can hardly stand; she fell down the other day an' cut 'er head," continued the mother. Yes, there, through the yellow hair, the ugly red mark, not quite healed, showed plainly.

Mother out of work, father ill; so the child had starved.

"She can't even 'old up 'er 'ead proper," went on the mother. The child smiled so tenderly at me, and stroked my face with her dirty hands. "Dod bess yer, Dod bess yer." Yes, Nellie, God has blessed us all, and you too.

Not far from Euston Station, quite within sound of the noise and rattling of hansoms and four-wheelers, is a street of small dingy houses, the rooms of which are let out singly or in floors. The first-floor front of No. 43 is the scene of one of the every-day dramas of suffering, patience, and heroism of which the great world knows so little, and we, who live amongst the people, know so much.

Both father and mother are comparatively young. He is honest and independent. This winter he has been without work except for odd jobs, and his courage and his honesty have been assailed by the bitterest trial over and over again. Unlike some men who plead for work and wait for it to be brought to them, he has no stone unturned, and has been up and out early and late. He was one of the crowd who pushed for work on the day when the gates gave way before them, and he narrowly escaped being one of the injured.

From comparative comfort they have come down to dire want. As the winter deepened trouble darkened. Mother's burden was heavier than the children knew, but she faced the future with that staunch courage and cheeriness which are a constant miracle to us who know her. Johnny, the eldest boy, had to go into hospital to undergo his twenty-first operation. His mother's own boy, with just her genius for making the best of things, he bears his pain unmurmuringly. We went last week from the bedside in the clean, bare little room in the street to the hospital bed in the long, bright ward. The same steadfast light shone in both faces; each spoke of the other's trouble, and forgot their own. He was full of what he would do for mother if this operation proved successful; and she was thanking God that her trouble has come upon her when Johnny couldn't worry about it.

For Maggie, the eldest girl, we keep, as it were, a shrine in our hearts. She is thirteen years old; the pinching and screwing, the anxiety and care, may have driven the childhood out of her face and movements, but it has brought out something else seldom found in a child. Maggie is everything in the home now mother is ill. There are five younger children, counting the new baby. Polly! with her big eyes and arch ways, restless, wilful, and mischievous, the indispensable Polly of our story hour on Saturday morning. When Polly and Maggie had only one pair of shoes between them, it was generally Polly who arrived with beaming face each evening, carrying Lily, with Beckie and Edie in the rear. "Maggie's sorry, but give her a X, please, she's helping mother." One day, the brilliant idea occurred to them of each wearing one shoe, and hopping together.

Beckie! with her squint and quaint loving little ways; and Edie, five-years-old Edie, starved to the size of two and a-half, without whom no children's gathering seems complete. And her belief in the Sisters and in Cleveland Hall is proverbial. If the father breaks down, or if mother is very quiet, she creeps up to them and whispers, "Go to Cyeveyand 'all, and tell them," and she is often discovered on the doorstep, teaching Lily the names of the Sisters, and making her repeat them in broken baby language.

Once I took breakfast tickets to the children. "It's very good of you, Sister, it really is, but ther's other children needs 'em more." I was vexed at the woman's pride. Then the children came in from school, blue with cold. I pulled a biscuit out of my pocket for Edie, who trotted over to Lily with it, and she snapped her little teeth upon it with a hungry sob. That was too much for me, and too much for the mother also; it broke down her reserve, and since then, for our friendship's sake, I have known the worst. Since that day until now, I have read the record of physical agony and weakness, of privations and trouble, the daily record of a woman's anguish, a man's despair, and the suffering of little children.

These are the everyday facts that make it easy for us to ask for help for our people, that we may have the means to help wisely such patient, silent, heroic sufferers. We cannot put all the real facts upon paper; we cannot before your eyes change a baby's sobs into a crowing laugh; you must take our word for that. The only limit upon our work is placed by those who have this world's riches, the limit of impossibility which ought never to be put upon such work. Our social department which helps such cases as these is at the end of the winter terribly in need of funds; we want to raise £100 at once. Will the readers of The Christian help?

Sister Mary.

TRUTHFULNESS.

We find whole systems of casuistry developed whose aim seems to be to go as near the edge of untruthfulness as possible, if not beyond it, in religion. But the New Testament sweeps the entire idea of the pious fraud away with this short thunder-peal, "Their doom is just." It will hear of no holiness that leaves out truthfulness; no word, no deed, no habit that, even with the purest purpose, belies the God of reality and veracity.—H. C. G. Moule.

REV. J. McNEILL IN INDIA.

People begin to ask (says the Indian Witness) "What has Mr. McNeill done in Calcutta?" He has not made a census of conversions at his meetings; he has done nothing whatever by way of parading the results of his mission, but this by no means proves that there are no results. This, however, he has done. During five working days of the week, for two weeks, he has drawn from eleven to thirteen hundred persons to the tent on the maidan, and has preached ten sermons that cannot but exert a permanent influence for good upon the majority of those who heard. His sermons have been "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for instruction in righteousness." The Christianity of Calcutta has been much strengthened, encouraged, and made bolder by his ministry here. The pastors of the various churches will find that Mr. McNeill's short visit has increased the attendance at public worship. The current of spiritual life flows more vigorously in the churches than before; the standard of Christian morality, too, and Christian faithfulness on the street, and in the home, will stand at a higher level than before. The name of Christ has not only been exalted in the preaching, but that name has more honour in Calcutta than before this visit.

He has given the Christians of Calcutta an opportunity of showing that the men and women who ordinarily worship in different churches, and bear names of different denominations, are in truth so near each other that they can worship together in perfect harmony of feeling and spirit. This mission has welded the churches together in a very appreciable degree, and the results will appear in the greater prosperity of all. The churches invited Mr. McNeill to Calcutta, they have loyally supported him and he has not disappointed them. Each pastor on the committee feels and is ready to acknowledge that Mr. McNeill's work has helped him almost as though he had come as a special evangelist to an individual church.

The number of conversions is not known, and in such a work as this there is little need of knowing it, still less of publishing it. The crowded tent five days in the week, and the congregation of over three thousand in the rink on Sunday night prove that Christianity has not lost its power. It is true that authentic reports of genuine conversions strengthen the hearts of praying men, and seriously impress the careless and ungodly. But these public services have been such a demonstration of the strength of Christian sentiment and interest that there is less need of tabulating the results, were the materials available.

The McNeill mission probably closes with a service at the rink at 6.30 p.m. to-morrow (Feb. 24). Mr. McNeill then goes to Darjeeling for a few days, thence by rail to Bombay, where he will hold a series of services before sailing for home.

MADAGASCAR.—Much sympathy will be felt for our friends William and Hannah H. Wilson in the death of their little boy, on December 23. William Wilson has been paying a visit to his old station at Mandridrano, and received a very hearty and loving welcome from his friends there. There has been very heavy rain at Antananarivo, causing a breach in the river embankment, and some thousands of acres of rice will be destroyed or seriously damaged by the floods. More active preparations are going forward to resist the French expedition.

A POCKET TREASURE.—A fountain pen with a gold nib is now an indispensable item in the equipment of all busy people who write. Messrs. Mabie, Todd, and Bard, of 93, Cheapside, and 95A, Regent-street, who have done so much to popularise these invaluable pocket companions, have just introduced an improvement that will be hailed by all; but especially by lady writers who may have suffered in the past from soiled fingers or stained dresses in the process of renewing the ink supply. The firm have produced a "self-filling" pen, on a principle which is simplicity itself. Without unscrewing the pen or disturbing any of its parts, a glass filler with an expanded opening is placed over the gold nib and the ink automatically sinks into the interior of the instrument; or an ordinary filler may be used by putting the point of it on the end of the under feed-bar and pressing the rubber top in the usual way. Messrs. Mabie, Todd, and Bard claim that this improvement constitutes their already famous "Swan" pen a perfect pocket writing instrument, and the claim appears to be amply justified. With such a pen always at hand the decaying art of letter writing ought speedily to revive.

THE UNVEILING.—XI.

THE 144,000 SERVANTS SEALED.

The Seven Churches, with their principles and practice right and wrong, and all their possibilities for good and evil, co-existed in John's own day; they have all been present throughout the whole Church period; and yet they mark a process, from the loss in Ephesus of the first love to Jesus, to the full development of self-love in Laodicea. The same principles and possibilities exist in the individual soul, and blessed with a sevenfold blessing is he that overcometh in the sevenfold testing.

Likewise the experiences under the Seals, whether in the world or in the individual, mark a process, from the beginning of the Gospel with all the blessings which it brings and all the persecutions which it provokes, to the terror of the panic-stricken dwellers on the earth, who cry to the rocks to fall upon them, and the hills to cover them from the wrath of Him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb, for the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?

Dies iræ, dies illa,
Solvet sæclum in favilla.

The Seer takes note of four angels of God standing on the four corners of the earth, east, west, north, and south, holding fast the four winds of the earth; and another angel ascending from the sunrising who forbids the winds to blow until the angels have sealed the servants of their God upon their foreheads. For are not the angels ministering spirits, sent forth to minister on behalf of those who are about to inherit salvation?

The four winds at the four corners of the earth remind us of the great wind from the wilderness which smote the four corners of their elder brother's house in which the sons and daughters of Job were feasting. The fourfold wind was occasioned by Satan, the prince of the powers of the air. So the four winds of the heavens which Daniel (vii.) saw in his night vision, striving upon the Great Sea, are Satanic agencies which are overruled by God to effect his purposes. Just as the evil spirit came forth and stood before the Lord, to be a lying spirit in the mouth of Ahab's prophets (1 Kings xxii. 19-23).

Observe that while the winds are under the power of the prince of the powers of the air, the four angels to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea are angels of God. They do not hurt by their own direct action. They hold fast the winds that they may not hurt, until the servants of God have all been sealed, and then their restraint is withdrawn.

What an important side-light this sheds upon the conditions of our life on earth. We never travel without God's angels restraining the evil powers that would do us hurt. These are always ready, like hounds in leash, and there would be fires and catastrophes by land and sea a thousand fold more than there are, if God's angels did not hold fast the powers of hell, only permitting them to work their will in such measure as is needful for correction, or rebuke, or punishment.

But the main object of this vision is to assure the saints, from Him who liveth, and has been dead, and is alive for evermore, the First and the Last, and the Living One, that whatever may happen to them at the hands of him who has the power of death, they bear upon their foreheads the seal of the Living God. This vision is an echo of the Saviour's words, "Fear not them which kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do." And of the Holy Ghost by Peter, "Forasmuch, then, as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind; for He that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin." And by Paul, "Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus may be made manifest in our mortal flesh."

To limit this sealing to any one era or period or event would deplete it of nearly all its significance and comfort. It surely means that at every period, through the long tribulation of the ages, and in the crisis at the close, from war and scarcity and pestilence, from death with sword, and with hunger, and by the beasts of the earth, no servant of his shall suffer, unsealed, unowned, unclaimed, by the living God.

Think how this assurance must have sustained the faith and hope, and love and courage, of his slaughtered witnesses, through all the dark and bloody centuries of Pagan and Papal persecution. Think what it means to-day to our beloved Stundist and Armenian Christian brethren, as they stand with John, their brother and companion in the tribulation and Kingdom and endurance in Jesus, and behold the twelve times twelve thousand sealed of every tribe of the Israel of God.

It is characteristic of God's elect that we must through much tribulation inherit the Kingdom. And it is equally characteristic that every one is sealed. If one were omitted the square number would be incomplete; if one were added there would be a superfluous member.

Whether torn to pieces on the rack, broken on the wheel, rotting in dungeons, torn from their children, victims of nameless outrage, or whether in these easier days where civil and religious liberty exists, suffering from neglect, misunderstanding, isolation, or excommunication, still they bear God's seal of ownership, and "They shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels, and I will spare them as a man spareth his own son that serveth Him." "The Lord knoweth them that are his."

Suggestive and illuminating as was the line of thought marked out by our brother Mr. Graham last week, based upon the meaning of the names enumerated, it was not exhaustive. We may also study the Tribes from other points of view. Judah comes first, the royal tribe, for he prevailed above his brethren, and of him came the Chief Ruler, whose goings forth have been of old from everlasting (1 Chron. v. 2; Mic. v. 1); and little Benjamin their ruler, closes the list—the son of the right hand, a type of Him of whom the Psalmist prayed, "Let thy hand be upon the Man of thy right hand, upon the Son of Man whom Thou madest strong for Thyself" (Psa. lxxx. 17).

All God's Israel, all the elect of Him whose gifts and calling are without repentance, are enclosed within these two mighty and sovereign names. The servants, the bond-slaves, of God, are the born kings of men; "the time came when the saints possessed the kingdom" (Dan vii. 18, 22, 27). They "are cradled into royalty by wrong" on earth, "and learn in suffering what they teach in song," when they stand with the Lamb on the Mount Zion—the new song which none but they can learn (ch. xiv.).

Great contrasts there may be, as between Reuben, unstable as water, and Joseph, a fruitful bough by a well, whose bow abode in strength. But Jehovah doth not keep his anger for ever, and the sarcastic bitterness of the outraged father's prophecy of Reuben is softened in the blessing wherewith Moses the man of God blessed the children of Israel before his death: "Let Reuben live and not die, but let his men be few."

Levi has the Urim and the Thummim, and Issachar has men who have understanding of the times to know what Israel ought to do. While some tribes have lost privileges which others have attained.

All these are interesting lines of inquiry and thought, and others will occur to other minds. But no distinction is in this vision made between one tribe and another; and all the servants are each equally sealed. Just as in the Letters to the Churches the promise is to the individual overcomer, so here each servant is sealed and safe. In the one case, however, there is various reward for active overcoming, under varying circumstances; on the other there is equal preservation through passive suffering.

These are the servants to whom the Unveiling is given; servants who serve Him, and they see his face (ch. i. 1; xxii. 6). They are Israelites indeed in whom is no guile; for in their mouth was found no guile; they are without fault before the throne of God (John i. 47; ch. xiv. 5). They are those to whom the voice comes out of the throne, "Praise our God, all ye his servants." They are the called and chosen and faithful followers of Him whom God the Father sealed as the Apostle and High Priest of our confession; and they are the sealed ambassadors of Christ, beseeching in Christ's stead, "Be ye reconciled to God"; his witnesses, his servants.

THE INNUMERABLE MULTITUDE.

The succeeding vision is the fitting and necessary complement of the former. The Israel of God is not only an elect body, each member foreknown, predestinated, called, and justified; but there is more to follow: whom He justified them He also glorified. We are not only sons of believing Abraham, Jews inwardly, whose praise (Judah—praise, Gen. xxix. 35, xlix. 8; Ro. ii. 29) is not of men but of God. We are also a peculiar people gathered out of all nations and kindreds, and tribes and tongues. And although God's Israelites-indeed are a chosen and well-known number, for He calleth them all like the stars, by their names; yet, like the stars, they are innumerable—a great multitude whom no man can number.

And it is not enough to assure them that before the terrible and universal winds of tribulation blow they all are sealed with the seal of the living God. He will not only foreshow to them that they are sealed unto the day of redemption; He will give them a vision of redemption in its fully accomplished results; and will show them that when the devil's winds of persecution and tribulation have blown their hardest, their cruellest, their worst; when they that kill the body have had no more that they could do; when they have waited not in vain for the adoption, to wit the redemption of their body: then the Lamb in the midst of the Throne, to whom they went forth without the camp bearing his reproach, is a covert over them, and gives them rest, leads them to living fountains of waters, and God wipes away all tears from their eyes. Having learned of Him who is meek and lowly in heart, they enjoy, in heavenly and everlasting habitations, the rest unto their souls which in the direst stress of the tribulation, and in the persecution they endured, they had already found in Him.

Thus we see that this first pair of episodical visions is an epitome of all the Book of the Unveiling, pointing backward to the tribulation and Kingdom and endurance in Jesus

(ch. i. 9), and onward to the wiping of all tears from off all faces, in the Holy City, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband, when the tabernacle of God shall be with men, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes (ch. xxi. 2—4). M.

REVIVALS IN SCOTLAND.

BY GORDON FORLONG.

(Concluded.)

The work was very deep and true in 1857; even scorners said nothing; they were silenced in the waves of anxiety that rolled everywhere. The largest halls and the largest churches were filled in 1857, 1858, and 1859, even on week days. Orthodoxy had taken fire, and when a people acquainted with their Bibles take fire you have wondrous power. They stand upon an eminence even before conversion, but fogs and clouds make them useless and powerless. The new birth, as God's sunshine, bursts fully upon them, and they actually help each other at once.

In 1859, 1860, and 1861 many able evangelists were working in Scotland. Duncan Matheson came from the Crimea, and did good work in Huntly and elsewhere. Mr. E. P. Hammond, of America, a blessed evangelist with the young, began a good work among children in Annan in or about 1860, and that small effort extended, through other helpers, to the whole four congregations in Annan. The invitations to evangelists were frequently signed by five different pastors. Sometimes seven pastors signed one request; I remember it was so in the case of Dumfries.

DENOMINATIONAL PREACHING VANISHED

when a full revival tide began to flow. The pastors selected the largest church, and it was, for the time being, in the hands of the evangelist alone, except on Sunday morning. Eight hundred believers are said to have been the fruit at Annan, and the nightly services were kept up for many months. About 1400 people were present every night of the week. Two years after that work I asked the ministers, "How do the converts stand; have you many backsliders?" "Very few, hardly any," was the answer.

In Glasgow and Aberdeen Reginald Radcliffe and Richard Weaver both appeared in or about 1861. Robert Cunnyngham, a Glasgow butcher, also did good service, and one or two Free Churches had great work done in them—for instance, Andrew Bonar's church and a church near the Glasgow Green. On that green we had congregations of about 20,000 persons. The people stood three hours at a time sometimes, without moving, weakly ones sat on the grass, and in a neighbouring hall we received the inquirers.

SOME MINISTERS WERE CONVERTED

in their own churches. This was the case with an Annan minister. The minister, of New Deer, Aberdeenshire, whom I knew, told me that he was sitting in his own pew when he was converted. He made no secret of it. An Established parish church minister of Strathhaven and his wife were both converted. Having private means, they threw up the Church and went abroad to evangelise; they were in South America when I last heard from them. Mr. Gebbie, of Ayrshire, a parish minister, did a good work, and if my memory were better I could record the names of many blessed reapers. One minister said: "I read over some of my old sermons written before conversion. I found no wrong sentences, but no sermon had 'the thing' in it. It could not really meet the need of souls."

Then, too, the work owed a great deal to the Press.

"THE REVIVAL," NOW CALLED "THE CHRISTIAN,"

was a wonderful aid; it stimulated all Christians who read it, and greatly helped, not only evangelists, but pastors and teachers. Idle Christians were provoked to work when they read what was done elsewhere. A Dumfries paper did much good in the South of Scotland; a very dear worker now gone "home," Rev. Mr. Gailey, of Annan, wrote vigorous articles that moved the whole district. The Stirling Messenger did very effectual work also in Scotland. Newspapers can marvellously assist, but they generally ignore God's works. The London Rock sometimes gave a full summary of the Scotch preaching in 1857 and 1858.

In Glasgow alone, about 10,000 persons probably were moved. Sensational and emotional preaching without true Bible texts may make much froth, but the true fisherman sends his line deep down, as the true farmer ploughs deep. The results are God's converts, won only by God's own Word, not by any man.

GOD'S GUIDING HAND.

By T. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S. Ed.

[In the current number of Night and Day, Dr. Barnardo gives many instances of the way in which prayer has been answered and providential deliverance out of grave difficulties have been vouchsafed to him in the course of his work.]

I well remember a case which occurred a few years ago, when the work in my hands was very much smaller indeed. Some heavy payments, one of them for the clearance of a mortgage which had been entered into in error and which was threatened with foreclosure, were to be made upon a certain date, I think June 24. The total amount required for this urgent purpose was £500—in those days an enormous sum. I had a month before me in which to get it, and of course during that month the current daily payments had also to be met.

We used to have a little meeting every day at 12 o'clock for prayer, when all the wants and difficulties of the work were brought before our Father, and when I and my colleagues entreated God's blessing and guidance. Among other matters, this urgent need was borne in mind daily, and we pleaded with God that He would remove the difficulty. But when the 15th of June arrived, and there was still absolutely no money in hand, and when, as is usual at that time of the year, the donations began to slacken, I confess that I was greatly alarmed.

I had then two special friends of large means to whom I occasionally communicated my anxieties; generous friends, each of whom had written to me and said, "Whenever you are in great difficulty apply to me." So I wrote to them under these stringent conditions, setting forth our position. To my dismay I learned that one of them was out of town, and that it was not known when he would return; and that the other was seriously ill and unable to attend to any matters.

By the 20th of the month I not only had no money to meet the claim, but a positive additional debt of £50 had been created in discharging the cost of daily necessaries. I continued to earnestly beseech the Lord for help, and in some poor manner—I cannot say with any real or strong faith, but in a halting fashion like that of Jacob of old, I laid hold of God's strong arm. The day before the money was due, the donations were lower even than they usually were. But on the morning of the day when this urgent claim must be met I reached the climax. The donations on that day amounted to about 15s., in addition to which there were two halves of single £1 Irish notes from a good friend in Dublin, who said he would send the other two halves when these were acknowledged. That was all! Yet that very day the claim had to be met!

The money which I needed to discharge this mortgage had to be paid in at a West End office. I looked the matter boldly in the face. It was perhaps, I thought, God's will that this heavy additional load should be borne by me, and the debt, for which I was not really responsible, added to my other burdens. I felt that perhaps I could obtain a postponement if I saw the solicitors who had the matter in hand, and I made my way west at about one o'clock in the afternoon bound for their office. Passing down Pall Mall, I noticed standing on the steps of one of the large clubs a military-looking man, who stared intently at me as I came along. I glanced instinctively at him, and then resumed my way.

In a moment or two I felt someone patting me on the shoulder. "I beg your pardon," said my interlocutor, as he raised his hat, "I think your name is Barnardo?" I said, "Yes, that is so; but you have the advantage of me." "Oh!" he said, "you do not know me, but I recognise you. A brother officer of mine in India had your photograph, and was deeply interested in your work, and he and I have often talked of it. I recognised you immediately. The fact of it is," he continued, "I have a commission to discharge. I left India about two months ago, and Colonel —— gave me a packet for you. It contains money, I believe; for he is a great enthusiast for your work, and he made a large collection for you after a bazaar that his wife held. But I have not been long in London, and have not had time to go down and see you. Only this very morning, however, I was thinking that I must make time to call upon you, when, curiously enough, I saw you coming along. Do you mind waiting a moment until I fetch the packet?"

I gladly acceded to his request, and returned with him to the club. He ran up the stairs, and presently brought me down a large envelope addressed to me, carefully tied up with silk, and sealed. I opened it in his presence. Imagine my astonishment and my delight when I found in it a bank draft to the value of £650! This had been sent from India rather more than three months previously, before I myself realised that I would have to make the special payment which was that day due.

I cannot doubt that in the providence of God the bearer of the message was allowed to retain the package until almost the last minute, so that faith might be tested and prayer drawn out unceasingly. And then, just when I was in the greatest extremity, the mighty hand of God was thus held out in assistance to his servant.

Need I say I went at once to the office of the solicitors: not to postpone the payment, but to make it, and then I returned with a grateful heart to discharge the liabilities that had arisen within the past three weeks of short supplies. I found that when all had been done I still had in hand some £90 over and above my requirements. I think any one of my readers to whom such an experience had occurred would no doubt have said, as I did: "This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes." And as he went on his way rejoicing he would then, as I did at the time, feel assuredly that never again would he distrust his Heavenly Father; and that, whatever the trial be, he would meet it with unquestioning and childlike faith.

But we may not thus reckon up our spiritual victories in advance! The manna that was stored up over and above that which was wanted for the day by the Israelites of old "bred worms and stank"; and it is only day by day in such work as ours that we can lay hold upon God. Only so can the work be sustained and the victory given!

On Monday last week, at the noon prayer meeting, Aldersgate-street, Dr. Barnardo presented some 200 boys who are about to start, it is hoped, for Canada. A contingent of big sturdy lads from the Labour Home seemed fit for any amount of hard work, while the boys from Stepney promised well. A company of little lads from Leopold and other homes will probably be adopted. The doctor introduced his large party in a brief and happy talk, telling what some had been saved from, how they had been trained, and what the future before them. He earnestly asked prayer and liberal sympathy.

THE LONDON SPECTACLE MISSION, for the benefit of those who cannot afford the spectacles they need, gives in its report a very satisfactory account of the work for 1894. The applicants have increased from 531 in 1893 to 648 in 1894, and at the end of the year there is a balance in hand. It will be noticed that the number of special cases this year has greatly increased, and the Society has been enabled to help many people to procure more expensive spectacles which have had to be specially made to suit their eyes. Information may be had of the hon. sec., Miss C. Waring, 197, Sutherland-avenue, W.

CHISWICK MISSION.—Reporting on the work of the past year, Mr. R. T. Smith says: "A suitable house has been purchased near the Halls, to which, in June next, it is proposed to remove the inmates of the Kentish Town Home for the Aged, which became affiliated to our mission last year. By some a mission is judged from a financial standpoint; to such it may be pointed out that great care has been exercised not to exceed in expenditure the receipts; therefore the help has been limited by the supplies received. It is a matter for regret that no addition has been made to the Trust fund of £1000, which the trustees desire to raise, so that the interest accruing from the investment of such a sum may meet the cost of keeping the Mission Hall in repair, but it is hoped that an effort to increase the amount will be made this year." The general work of the mission is attended with much encouragment. Mr. Smith's address is 1, Thornton Avenue, Chiswick.

A SALVATIONIST'S LUXURIES.

We Salvationists like luxuries of a certain sort. It has been my lot to enjoy during the past eleven days some of the greatest luxuries which it is possible for a man to taste at the end of this century.

1. Passing Toulon recently, I felt I must stop to salute our friend and brother, Mr. Lombard, of Geneva, who, with his devoted wife, is carrying on a work of soul-saving and rescue in this terribly immoral arsenal city amid great difficulties, of which the least is certainly not the financial one. He gathered his people for a prayer-meeting in his little hall, which was most blessed, and it was truly a privilege to be able, either by word or deed, to encourage these workers. That was the first of my first luxuries—fellowship.

2. Next day I found myself at Nice, where I expected to cross the track of our "Petroleuse" carriage in that gay city, but it had been delayed at another town. It was the eve of one of the great Carnival days. A supply of the special "petroleuse" number of the En Avant had arrived in the station. What a chance! To-morrow the city would be given over to the "good king carnival" and all his gay bacchanalian cortège. Twenty thousand masqueraders in every conceivable caricature costume would run riot through the streets and fight ten thousand battles of confetti. Giant hobgoblin cars, high as a two or three-storied house, would parade the city. How I wished that my comrades had arrived in time, and that we had been three to seize the chance of testifying for God in the midst of this scene of the wildest human folly! But the Lord, who does not give grudgingly, thus gave me the luxury of going alone for Him in uniform amongst those multitudes with my Salvation paper. And it so happened that this number was one we have got up with great care, specially adapted to the French crowd. I had a fairly good sale for three hours, and, better still, I did not meet a person who did not seem to understand the precise meaning of my uniform, and on whose behalf I was there. I came out of the confetti ordeal better than I had expected, though these little cement pills do sting terribly when dashed in your eyes, and of course I could not wear the usual light wire visier, as I might have been taken for a mock Salvationist. One gentleman solemnly reproved me in the name of religion for my degrading it by coming there with my paper. But he seemed to have forgotten completely for the moment his grotesque costume of red and green and yellow, and was dumb when I ventured to point to it and suggest that my dress and errand might at least be as religious as his at that moment.

One gentleman to whom I sold a paper came next day to see the Petroleuse (then arrived), and finding us in a little hawkers' hotel at 2s. 11d. per day (room included) gave us twenty francs and bought twelve francs' worth of our publications.

3. I cycled off next day to visit a lady the story of whose conversion from blank infidelity through a fortnight's stay in an officer's quarters in Paris my dear wife told in The Christian two years ago. She is slowly dying of consumption now, but to hear her pray—"In the face of the universe, O my God, I can cry that Thou hast saved me!" was glorious; as was also to hear this ex-infidel of Catholic origin tell so simply how she had led to Christ a dear dying Protestant girl, who, having sought the southern shores of our infidel France for her body's sake, had found there her soul's embarkation place for heaven—ah, that pastoral cycle visit was a luxury!

4. Next day I took the opportunity to ride in uniform round the circle in front of the Monte Carlo gambling temple and through its grounds. I am hoping shortly to lay before your readers some facts regarding this terrible plague-spot.

5. Monday night last week in the Albert Hall, thronged with 10,000 souls, I had the luxury of seeing the antipodes from, and an antidote to, the Nice carnival. In the latter was made visible and tangible the infinite variety of human selfishness and folly. In the former was manifested the infinite variety of the forms which love and saving wisdom can take in its effort to rescue men from the mad carnival of sin, and from its backwash of hideous misery and filth. With what admirable order, with what a sweet simple spirit of love and devotion all the representatives of the various "elevating" agencies of the Army passed our beloved General to give him a cordial welcome—a sort of family gathering, and family welcome on a large scale, and with many thousands of unconverted on-lookers, who could profit by this object lesson of loving gratitude, and of the joys which surround the return of a prodigal world to its God. It was a marvellous sight, and one well adapted to awaken the attention of the world of worldlings in whose midst it was displayed.

6. The "Two days with God," which followed this occasion, were times of grace indeed. I have been fourteen years in the Salvation Army, but never have I heard the General speak with more spiritual power than during these days. The silence which hung over the grand audience was often intense, and deep was the attention. The current of Divine feeling was strong. The claims of the kingdom of God were urged with a force which swept, visibly, four to five hundred souls over the barrier that had hitherto arrested their progress. The responses, the rush of assent, that rose and burst through the building, were often like a thunderclap.

7. And that midnight march—eight hundred strong—through Piccadilly's gay inferno, led by the General on foot, and the midnight meeting of 1500 in Exeter Hall, where all the varieties of sin and worldliness were assembled—how shall I describe that luxury of love! It was heaven to get right into the heart of this hell where yet there is hope.

NOTES FROM MEXICO.

Mr. Eglon Harris, who makes Orizaba, Mexico, his centre of operations, writes that his little Evangelical paper El Sembrador, is being received with much pleasure by many of the people. A Government official in Ecuador (the American Tibet) having become interested, has undertaken to receive monthly packets for distribution. As the Ecuador Customs have orders to destroy any literature not according to Rome, it is hoped that, addressed to a Government office, the little paper may escape the flames.

"We visited in Vera Cruz three barracks and the prison. Without exception the officers and governor gave us every possible liberty to give tracts, Scriptures, etc., and speak to the men. Also, we crossed over by boat to Ulna, which is a fort, covering the whole of a small island, and is used as a prison. There were 410 prisoners, mostly murderers or political offenders. To these all we gave a small parcel of tracts and a Gospel or Testament. How glad they were to get something to read! One man said, 'How kind you are to think of us. I have been within these walls for ten years.' He seemed to want to add more, but suddenly slipped into my hand a beautifully carved ring that he had made himself out of the hard stone of a fruit, and with that hurried off to his task. What a subject for our prayer is that little island of Ulna! Not the least spiritual light; in darkness and the shadow of death; but God, who caused light to shine out of darkness, will shine into hearts there. Let us plead for it.

"Don Bernardo seems to be much cheered in his work as colporteur in the state of Guerrero. He writes of the progress of the Gospel, in spite of the obstacles which the priests put in the way. One who is now a brother beloved was a short time ago a most bitter enemy. He is now helping all he can in distributing tracts in his neighbourhood. He says: 'We are seeing rapid progress. It seems as though it was only needing that the people should hear the Word of Truth. The impression made in their hearts is the work of the Holy Spirit. On the other hand, we cannot deny that the Word of invitation which you have sent out in El Sembrador has drawn many hearts to Christ. Many are now helping in the work.'"

The British correspondent of the work is Mr. J. Mercer, 143, Dickenson-road, Rusholme, Manchester.

VILLAGE WOMEN.—Misses Nainby and Hooper have had most interesting itinerations in out-of-the-way villages around Hoshangabad, C.P., India. At one place, after speaking for an hour, Miss Nainby said she supposed the women would like to go to their work, but they would not leave. "We may die, and our husbands may die, and this is far more necessary for us than our food; we cannot hear this every day!" In many of the villages they have a hunger in their hearts for the Bread of Life. Crowds gather to listen; most of them had never heard before of the Saviour. "If (says a missionary) workers at home could only look into those faces as I did, I am sure they would come out to India."

MR. MOODY IN TEXAS.

In a report of the closing days' services of a two weeks' mission at Dallas, Texas, The Morning News of that city for Saturday, March 2, has the following:—

It was a real great mission from beginning to end, and the aggregate attendance was not under 100,000. Mr. Moody won his audiences from the first by his earnestness and simplicity. He cleared the way of many difficulties for hundreds, and it is conceded by religious people that a great and lasting good has been done. It cannot be said just how many conversions there were. But it can be said without hazard to truth that there have been some remarkable evidences of the saving power of grace. Many people in Dallas now understand what the old hymn, "Amazing Grace," means.

The last day's service opened yesterday at 2.30 p.m. with the usual praise service. In due time the usual collection was taken; several prayers were offered, then Mr. Moody arose and said: "When I came through New York on my way south, a lady told me that at a meeting the day before the statement had been made that there are in this country 750,000 convicts. It was appalling to me, and when I got to looking into it I thought that many of these people might be reached and won to a better life." Mr. Moody related about the conversion of Jerry McAuley, and spoke of the vast number of people in the slums of New York who had been led to Christ through him. He said there were a good many men and women in the jails and penitentiaries of Texas. Most of these were young men of promise if they could be reclaimed and started off in the right direction.

Mr. Moody then asked Mr. Scofield to tell the audience of the remarkable conversion in jail of Valentine Burke, once the king of cracksmen. Mr. Scofield related the history of the case, summing it up that Burke was in jail on a charge of burglary. He struck a match in his cell one night for the purpose of lighting his pipe, and by the light of the match saw the headlines, "Philippian Jailer," in The Globe Democrat, which was lying on the floor. Mr. Moody was holding a meeting in St. Louis at the time, and what Burke saw was the report of Mr. Moody's sermon on the conversion of the Philippian jailer. Burke lighted the candle, and, being almost illiterate, spelled that sermon out word for word. It resulted in his conversion that very night. Burke was soon out of his trouble, and, after many hardships, got work, and became a power for good in the cause of God.

A PLEA FOR THE PRISONERS.

Mr. Moody then announced that he would explain his object in having Mr. Scofield relate that history. "I know a great many such men who have been reclaimed and brought in the household of faith. I believe there is a field for a great work in this direction, and Texas is a good State to begin this work in, and there is no better place in Texas to begin it than in Dallas." Mr. Moody then outlined his plan, which was to put the Bible in every prison cell in Texas. Every Sunday when these men were in their cells they would have time to read the Bible and other good books which would point them to a better life. Mr. Moody said the lady in New York who had informed him of the prison statistics in the country had written him that if he felt inclined to begin in Texas the work of putting the Gospel in the hands of convicts, she would start the movement with a donation of 50dols. To this amount Mr. Moody himself added 50dols., and he asked all who felt inclined to encourage the work to place in an envelope whatever amount they desired to give, and drop it in the basket at the night collection.

The tabernacle was crowded early for the last service. There was no trouble about volume to the singing. Everybody seemed filled to overflowing with harmony. The coloured people sang "Wait and murmur not," and one of the coloured brethren became so enthused that he rose and clapped his hands.

Mr. Moody's sermon was on the Brazen Serpent. At the close of the meeting Mr. Moody asked all to sing "God be with you till we meet again," and everybody in the congregation to stand and join in. It was grand, and everybody seemed sorry when the last verse was ended and the great meeting was actually at its close. The men's meeting and the inquiry room were packed to their fullest capacity, and many prominent citizens were seen among those seeking instruction.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MARCH 24.—1 COR. VII.

The Marriage Tie (1-17).—Christianity does not loosen the sacred bonds by which men and women are bound, but confirms and strengthens them. The earliest institution of marriage in Paradise is shown to be the type and pledge of eternal love, and our obligations to Christ demand that we should fulfil the primæval obligations entailed on the first man Adam. Christ came, not to destroy, but to fulfil. (8) The introduction of the Gospel with its exuberant joy and hope, its promise of a new society, amid the rotting order of the empire it was destined to replace, gave rise to strange and perplexed questionings as to the relation of converts to the order of society which was passing away. Were they freed from obligation to its institutions, and especially from their unconverted partners? In no wise, was the Apostle's reply; each husband or wife was bound to maintain the obligations of marriage with their unconverted partners so long as these were content to remain with them.

The Compensations of Christ (18-24).—What applied to marriage was equally applicable to all else. There was to be no effort at revolutionary change. Each was to remain in that position in which they were when converted to God, taking Christ's grace into the relationship or business, and finding in his grace the complement and compensation for all deficiency of need. In Him the slave would taste the sweets of freedom, and the master would become a slave. In Him the Jew would be emancipated to a new liberty, and the Gentile come under a new restraint.

The Passing World (25-40).—Great changes were imminent when these words were penned. The successive persecutions of the Empire were about to involve the Church. It seemed wise, therefore, that the converts should not root themselves too deeply in the system of things which was about to pass like the scenery on the stage. Fathers were recommended not to give their virgin daughters in marriage unless the demands of love compelled. On the whole, the single state was preferable under the exigency of that special distress.

MONDAY, MARCH 25.—1 COR. VIII.

The Christian Faith (1-6).—Mere knowledge inflates with pride, but love lays course after course on the foundations of Christian character. He that loves grows strong and blessed. Love is more satisfactory than knowledge, because the more we know the less we feel to know; whereas the loving heart no longer strives after inquisitiveness into the ways and will of God, it is content to lie back in his care and feel that He knows all. (4) It was a matter of indifference to the believer whether the food of which he partook had been offered to idols or not. An idol was nothing to him, a mere name and shadow. (6) Note the order—all things from God through Christ. Seek the Father in prayer, the answer will come through the Mediator, "I will do it." Mind that all your life is yielded unto Him, just as all your nobler impulses come through Him.

Respect for Weaker Consciences (7-13).—Many a convert could not rid himself of the belief that an idol was something after all, and the offering of food in an idol temple seemed a recognition of its authority. In such cases it was imperative not to partake of such food. And for the sake of such it was better for those to whom these rites were entirely immaterial to abstain from crossing the threshold of an idol temple to join in the banquet given there, that there might be no inducement to the weaker brother to do the same, not because of his own principle, but by the force of example. Whenever we know that our behaviour is inflicting, or is likely to inflict, harm on others, we must abstain from the very appearance of evil for their sake. This does not, however, apply to captious and unreasonable objections.

TUESDAY, MARCH 26.—1 COR. IX.

Paul's Maintenance of his Rights (1-15).—He insisted that he had a perfect right to live in the enjoyment of the necessaries of life, to marry, and to receive the support of his converts. In opposition to those who challenged his rights, he unhesitatingly maintained them. Why shouldn't he do as the rest of the apostles, and the very brethren of Christ? He was a soldier in the great war, a planter of the vineyard of the Church, a shepherd of the flock. (9) It is very sweet to know that God cares for oxen, how much more for his children! (15) But for special reasons the Apostle forbore to make use of his rights in these respects. He preferred to support himself with his handicraft, to take away one ground of accusation on the part of his foes. None need follow his example, therefore, in these respects, unless similarly circumstanced and challenged.

Paul's Reward for his Abstinence (16-27).—He was under perpetual restraint, denying himself lawful and innocent things, with the distinct purpose of winning men for Christ, who might have been prejudiced or alienated by any appearance of self-indulgence on his part. His one aim was to gain or win men. In matters of principle he was like a rock, and when men insisted on raising circumstantial rites and ceremonies to the level of great Christian principles, he gave place not for a single hour. But when he could conciliate prejudice and win attention by conforming to his hearers, where principle was not involved, he refused to be restrained by considerations of personal convenience from making the sacrifice. (27) Oh for his eager desire to win the crown allotted to those who have won most for God! There is no question here of being a castaway from God, but of missing the prize on which his heart was set.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 27.—1 COR. X.

Tempted, but Delivered (1-13).—We should read Old Testament story under the light which these words afford. Let us see Christ in the Shekinah cloud, the manna, and the rock. He underlay all these material emblems, and gave meaning to the entire typology of the wilderness march and the Tabernacle rites. (6) May we be kept from falling into the sins which strewed their carcases on the sands of the desert. The seed of the same sins of impurity, murmuring, and rebellion are in our hearts, only kept from germinating by the grace of God. (13) Satan couldn't tempt Job, except as God gave him leave. There was always a restraint, which he could not overstep. So with us. God measures our strength before each assault of our adversary, and in his faithfulness limits the pressure of the gale to the resistance we can make. Do not look down at the tempter, but up to the Lord. Always be on the alert for the indication of the way of escape. The path is hidden among the hills, but the guide of believing souls will indicate it.

Our Oneness in Christ (14-22).—The apostolic warning against idolatry is based on deep teaching about our absolute union with the Son of God. In the Lord's Supper we manifest this as we participate in his body and blood, after a spiritual sort. Simultaneously with the outward rite, there is real unity between the spiritual participant and the unseen Redeemer, the outward act being but the token and type of the inner fellowship. At the same time, by participating with others in the common rite, we identify ourselves with them. In the same way, to partake of the delicacies of an idol temple would be to enter into union with the demon and his votaries. How inconsistent and absurd such a course would be. But how carefully should we guard against attempting fellowship with Christ and the world.

Give no Occasion of Stumbling (23-33).—Our one aim in all things must be the glory of Christ in the salvation of men. And this will involve great care of putting a stumbling-block in the way of others.

THURSDAY, MARCH 28.—1 COR. XI.

Christian Assemblies (1-16).—Paul always brings great principles to settle the smallest questions. Here the headship of man to woman makes it right, in his judgment, that the woman should remain veiled in their common gatherings. Note the Divine order of being, Christ in his human nature subservient to God, the redeemed man to Christ, and in the same way, not otherwise, woman to man.

The Lord's Supper (17-34).—The Apostle ever insisted on having received his instructions at first hand. (20) The early Christians celebrated a love-feast before the Lord's Supper, to which all brought contributions. But at Corinth, instead of sharing these equally, each partook of his own. This led to great heart-burning, and made the reverent enjoyment of the sacred feast impossible. (26) The Church proclaims the mystery of Redemption until the Revelation of the Son of God from heaven. (29) We must discern the unity of the Lord's body, as we sit with our fellow-believers at the sacred feast, and beware of all that would violate it. (30) Physical weakness is sometimes the index of spiritual malady. (32) Better a thousand times to be chastened now by physical suffering or otherwise, than to be finally condemned.

FRIDAY, MARCH 29.—1 COR. XII.

The Unity of the Trinity (1-11).—The three persons of the Godhead are named here, God the Father, the Lord, and the Spirit. But amid all the diversities of their operation or manifestation, there is an essential unity. This is the type, as it is also the cause, of unity in the Church. (3) Ask that the Spirit of God should enable you to make Jesus the supreme Lord of all you are and have. (8) Let us not envy each other. No one has a power which he has not received from God, and for which he is not accountable. Envy not thy brother's gifts, but develop thine own to the utmost possible extent. (11) Note the personality of the Holy Ghost, and reverence his choice for thee and others.

The Unity of the Body (12-31).—Each of us is in the body of Christ for a specific purpose. Let us not be discouraged because we do not occupy some prominent position before the eye of man. We are most careful of organs which are hidden from human gaze; and those of whom the world knows nothing may be incomparably precious to the Lord. Let us also care for each other.

SATURDAY, MARCH 30.—1 COR. XIII.

This is an ode of almost unrivalled beauty, even on the page of Scripture. If the amanuensis had looked on the face of Paul he would have seen it shining like an angel's.

Love Contrasted with the Gifts of the Early Church (1-3).—Everything is lighter than vanity, compared with the love that Christ can put into your sunless hearts. Nothing else can so truly promote the victory of his Church and the redemption of men.

Love on its Negative and Positive Sides (4-7).—Let us examine ourselves by these tests, and see to it that even if we do not feel as we would, yet we always live up to this holy standard. What we practise in faith, knowing it to be right, we shall presently do because we have come to prefer and like it.

Love in its Superiority to Knowledge (8-13).—It is certain, as soon as a child enters the unseen, that he will know perfectly, and at a glance, much more than the wisest saint ever gained by the most laborious study. Thus our knowledge will become as the clothes and toys that children leave in their nurseries, but the love which was wrought into our hearts by the Holy Spirit and by loving deeds shall be our everlasting possession. Our love to our dear ones shall abide as an inalienable possession. Faith will also abide, linking us to Jesus, and securing perfect peace in the presence of mighty mysteries and changes. Hope, also, will grow from more to more.

MISUNDERSTOOD.

Misunderstood!
And we had only tried
To do the right, and naught beside.
The labour we had spent
Was only meant
To do some others good.
But it was not received,
And we were sorely grieved.
Misunderstood!

Misunderstood!
After the toil of years
Those secret struggles, hidden tears,
And then a saddened heart
To be our part;
And silently to brood
Over an aching ill,
As human nature will.
Misunderstood!

Misunderstood
On earth, whose desert sands
Will blind, but Heaven understands,
And our dear Lord will own
All that is done
For Him, however crude.
No more shall you and I
Be, in that by-and-by,
Misunderstood.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

MARCH 31.

REVIEW OF QUARTER'S LESSONS.

GOLDEN TEXT, Matt. xi. 29.

THIS series includes almost the whole of the last year of our Lord's Ministry up to the time when the Passion Week was about to commence.

Lesson I. told the story of a martyrdom. Who was put to death? By whom? On what occasion? Where? It was not the martyr but the poor weak half-drunken murderer that suffered most. The servants of God may be slain; but the work of God goes on.

Lessons II. and III. give a miracle, and the spiritual teaching it was intended to convey. In what district was the miracle performed? Was the discourse delivered at the same place? The miracle was the result of our Lord's compassion for the multitude; but the teaching that followed showed that the compassion was for the deeper spiritual needs of the people as well as for their bodily hunger. Which hunger did the people feel most? Which hunger ought they to feel most keenly? What are the simple conditions on which the soul's hunger receives satisfaction? If you know them, have you fulfilled them?

The next two lessons (IV. and V.) take us away to the extreme north of Palestine. What great city was near? Show how the sight of this city gives emphasis to the two events referred to in our lessons, the prophecy to Peter of the Church against which hell's gates should not prevail, and the vision of a glorious kingdom granted in the transfiguration. Peter figures somewhat strangely in these two lessons. Note how a bold confessor one moment may be unconsciously an instrument of Satan soon after. In the transfiguration, what do you understand by the change that appeared in Jesus, the appearance of the two men with Him, the theme of their conversation, and the message of the Father?

Lesson VI. deals with the children. By the simplicity, trustfulness, and contentment of children, Jesus teaches useful lessons to his disciples. The only great men in the Kingdom of God are the childlike. What does the lesson reveal as to the conversion of children, and our Lord's care for them? And how do you apply the solemn warning against those who are an occasion of stumbling to the young?

Lesson VII. begins with a question put to Jesus to tempt Him, yet leading to one of the most interesting of his parables. There is a double application of the parable—first to our Lord Himself, next to his people who are here to continue his work, and to imitate his example. Any self-righteous man who will try himself by the test of this parable will be compelled to plead guilty, and will need the work of Him who came to save.

Lesson VIII. reveals Jesus as the Light of the world. The blind man becomes a picture of our natural condition, and is worthy of our imitation in his faith, and obedience, and fearless confession of his Deliverer. Christ as the Resurrection and the Life is the theme of Lesson IX. His work in raising the dead is present and future (see John. v. 25-28). The story of Lazarus shows how much grief death causes, and how perfectly the Conqueror of death can wipe all tears away.

Two rich men appear in Lessons X. and XI. Think of the two—one a young ruler, beautiful in moral character; the other, a chief publican, who had enriched himself by means that troubled his conscience. Which seems the nearer to the Kingdom? If the two belonged to us in any way, which would cause us the greatest anxiety? Yet which of the two was saved? Eternal life is brought near to us; do we choose our treasures and let Jesus go? Or do we welcome Jesus at whatever sacrifice? The example of Zaccheus bids us to "choose life."

THE ESSEX INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL and Home for Destitute Boys, Chelmsford, makes a good report of last year's operations. At the commencement of 1894 there were 150 boys in the school; during the year thirty-one have left, and thirty-one boys have been admitted. Many of those who come to the school are in an extremely neglected state. Of the boys who left, seventeen were placed in situations in various parts of England, seven were sent to Canada, five returned to their relatives, one went to sea on a fishing vessel, and one joined the Navy. Although only one boy was apprenticed to the fishing trade, the managers of the school still think that this is a good opening for boys of a restless disposition, or for those who need constant supervision. They had a rather marked instance of this in a boy who was very troublesome while in the school, but rose to be captain of the vessel on which he served his apprenticeship.

For the Young.

DO YOU KNOW GOD?

"Whom to know is Life Eternal."

AMONG the first things, dear boys and girls, that you learnt when quite little children, was the fact that there is a God; and you believe it because your mother tells you so, and because you read it in the Bible. These are very good and satisfactory reasons for your belief, and you cannot do better than hold to them; but I should like to give you one or two more reasons, as we can never be too fully equipped for the battle we may have to fight on behalf of our faith.

In the first place, then, even if we had not a Bible nor a dear mother to teach us, we might know that there must be a Supreme Being. How is that? I will explain to you.

Have you ever looked at your father's watch? Has he opened the case for you to see the tiny wheels and springs that do their work so beautifully inside? Each part is in its proper place, moving smoothly, perfectly, and regularly. If even the most minute of them were broken, the watch must go wrong or stop. As you examine the works, you think of all the care and patience that must have been exercised by the watchmaker in order to bring them to such perfection.

Now, suppose that someone tried to convince you that that watch never had a maker; that it made itself, or that all its different parts happened to come together by chance; what would you think of such a statement? You would say that the person who made the assertion was either a lunatic, or else extremely foolish and ignorant.

Just so, when we consider this wonderful world—the sun to give us light by day, the moon and stars at night, the coal deep down in the earth to furnish fuel, the water springing from the rock for drink, the fruits and grains for food, the rain to cause them to grow, the animals to help us in our labour, and also for food and clothing—can we look at all these things and imagine that they made themselves, or that they came into their places by accident? No; the more we study the marvels of nature the more we must be convinced that there must have been a Creator, and that He who made and sustains them is God.

Another way that we may know that there is a God is by the answers we receive to our prayers. Have you ever spoken to anyone through a telephone? In New York telephones are much more used than they are here, and are often attached to private houses, so that the mistress of the house can communicate with places in the town without the trouble of going out. Now if one of the ladies wished to order some things from the stores, she would go to the tube, signal for someone to listen, and then name the articles she desired to be sent. In course of time the van would drive up, the parcels be handed in, and the lady would receive what she had ordered. Can anyone doubt for a moment that there must have been some person at the other end of the tube to take the order and despatch the goods?

Exactly on the same principle God's children speak to Him; they cannot see Him, but they know He is there, and that He hears them, because He answers their prayers. Does He always do so? No, not always; but would your parents comply if you requested them to give you a quantity of gunpowder or a supply of poison? Neither does our Father in Heaven answer our petitions when we ask Him for what it would not be good for us to have.

Again, after you have spoken through a telephone, if you put your ear to the tube you will hear the voice of the person at the other end. Just as certainly we can hear God speaking to our hearts. Jesus says, "My sheep hear my voice;" and if people tell you that they do not hear it, you may know that it is because they are not his sheep. Those who do not belong to the Good Shepherd cannot recognise his accents.

But how can I know that God is really speaking to me; for what is written in the Bible is meant for everybody? Have you never, when in some trouble or perplexity, had a passage of Scripture or a particular text brought so forcibly to your mind that it seemed as if God were at that moment addressing the words to you? I will tell you an experience of my own which may help to illustrate what I mean.

Some time ago I was about to take a very long journey to a strange place, where I had no friends. You know when you come home from school, or from visiting your relations, how nice it is to find father or mother waiting for you on the platform. But I was going this long distance, and had no one at the other end to meet me; so I felt rather dismal. I was to start in the middle of the week, but before I left God sent me a message to cheer me. On my last Sunday evening the text chosen by the preacher was—what do you think? You will find it in Gen. xxxii. 1. No other verse could have been as suitable. "And Jacob went on his way, and the angels of God met him." Do you suppose this was merely a coincidence? I am sure it was not, and had I space I could tell you of numbers of other instances quite as remarkable.

Now, do not be content to believe that there is a God simply because you have been taught so; that is good, but it is better to know Him, practically, by speaking to Him and hearing Him answer; and if you seek to do this you shall surely succeed, for He has said, "Those that seek Me early shall find Me."

A DEVONSHIRE MENTONE.

By ANNIE MACPHERSON.

AFTER a full and privileged six months' work in our sorrow-stricken East London, and feeling near a breakdown, a kind invitation came from Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Carpenter. Two weeks here have given renewed health, enabling me to return strengthened to assist in preparing the party of children now filling our training home for Canada, hoping to sail with them by the s.s. Parisian, May 2.

If my testimony would be the means of assisting any wearied workers, returned missionaries, or influenza invalids, to seek the change to this South Devon coast, it would make me glad, and the motive will excuse the personal references. The establishment is greatly improved by an additional wing, well-ventilated Turkish baths, the last improvements in massage, and curative electrical treatment.

On bright sunny days the visitors walk to Torquay, others climb the hill to Dartmoor, whilst the younger ones walk to the sea and gather shells. Others drive over the moors, all returning at the close of the day to tell of balmy breezes enjoyed, and showing signs of returning vigour, able to enjoy a simple and wholesome repast. The evenings sped quickly by, fresh friendships formed, opportunities for communion with fellow-workers toiling for the same blessed Master.

Mr. C. F. Carpenter's long years of experience in this health resort have enabled him to select such gifted helpers as Dr. F. Cecil H. Piggott, and Mr. Nathaniel Sears, electrician, so that there is skilled counsel for every need. Mrs. Carpenter is most kind and attentive, making Huntly a homelike, bright, cheerful place for those seeking health. The grounds and walks around are lovely, with the estuary 200 feet below, and the hills rising in the distance, with peeps of the sea from the rising ground.

The first week of my stay, the bright sunshine beaming from an azure sky and the balmy air made it such a contrast to the inky foggy atmosphere we had left, that it seemed another world, and filled us with longing to urge others to try a change also.

All particulars can be had from Mr. C. F. Carpenter, Huntly, Bishopsteignton, South Devon.

THE WEST OF LONDON BAND OF HOPE UNION reports seventy-one associated societies, and a membership of 8000.

Some London Missions.

THE EAST LONDON NURSING SOCIETY.

Said a well-known Christian worker the other day:—"Without our nurse we should feel sadly helpless among the sick poor; her gentle and skilful ministry is simply invaluable — more especially where it is the mother of the family who is ill." Many a kindly heart beats beneath a ragged shawl, and poor women are wonderfully ready to help one another in times of illness—but they know nothing of nursing, and are quite as likely to do the wrong thing as the right thing. Hence were it only as a teacher of the poor in handling and tending the sick, the nurse is of the utmost value. But more directly still her ministry to the sick and suffering themselves soothes sorrow, lightens woe, relieves pain, and brings hope into a blighted home, commending the Gospel by the very

TENDERNESS OF A WOMAN'S TOUCH.

Visiting a week or two since the Victoria Homes, I learned how one of these nurses comes into the Home, and binds up the wounds and sores of the men, who gratefully receive her voluntary ministry. Thus was I led to inquire into the working of a society which is doing loving service among the sick poor.

The East London Nursing Society was founded in 1868, as a result of the experience gained in the "cholera year," 1866, when a flood of light was thrown on the helplessness of many of the poor in times of sickness. Three trained nurses were set to work, and proved their value so thoroughly that other friends of the poor sought similar helpers. Thus the number increased, until now this Society alone has thirty-four hospital-trained nurses at work in the East End; but at least a hundred are really needed to cover the ground.

The working staff may be classified as matrons and nurses. There are four matrons—experienced nurses—who supervise wide districts, residing at a convenient centre, visit all new cases, see that infectious diseases are promptly reported, and generally are responsible for the proper and efficient conduct of the operations.

The nurses have each their own district—usually, for the sake of convenience, the parish in which they reside, giving at least seven hours a day to visiting and attending the sick, and ready to go at once to any poor person claiming their aid, reporting new cases to the matron, who visits and decides on the further attendance required. These matters of organisation are of the utmost importance in securing that in pain and weakness. Careful instructions are given as to dealing with infectious diseases, wounds, and what are properly hospital cases. A Maternity Hospital, the "East-end Mothers' Home," in association with this Society, but quite independent, provides for a very poor class in time of nature's need. The Society is responsible for the support of the matrons, and the wages, uniforms, and appliances of the nurses; leaving those locally concerned to provide lodgings and a fund for invalid diet, loan linen, and necessary comforts for the sick.

To secure the due provision of these latter a system of "assistant ladies" has been devised, two or more such ladies being attached to each nurse, who obtains from them the food, Convalescent Home tickets, and other things found needful.

At present most of the nurses are working in association with clergymen, such as Revs. J. H. Scott, E. A. B. Sanders, M. Hare, F. J. Hobbins, E. Hoskyns; but the Society is wholly unsectarian, and any separate institution or mission may arrange for a nurse by guaranteeing the provision necessary. On all such matters, however, the secretary, Mr. A. W. Lacey, 49, Philpot-street, Commercial-road, E., will afford information.

For my own part, I have been greatly touched by what I have seen and heard of the helpful ministry of these nurses in the homes of the sick poor. Not long ago I found lying in utter misery and neglect. A neighbourly woman commiserated and talked, but could render little real aid. We promised to mention the case to the nurse, and did so. On our next visit all seemed changed. The woman was rejoicing in her cleaned-up room, her bandaged head, her smoothed pillow, her basin of beef tea, and her comforted children. What this nurse did for one poor sufferer, was done, in a greater or less degree, for 4291 sick persons last year alone. Is not this a work worth doing?

I heard last week at the annual meeting held in the Mansion House, the testimony of various East-End clergymen as to valuable service rendered by the nurses in saving life, relieving pain, rekindling hope, and commending the Gospel. The cases mentioned were telling indeed, although occasionally an "audible smile" was evoked by the facts revealed as to the ignorance of the poor in the matter of nursing the sick. What they know not how to do, these helpful ministrants do for them; and in so doing become messengers of help and healing to the stricken sufferers. One is deeply concerned to learn that there is serious danger that some of the present nurses may be withdrawn from sheer lack of support. Yet, as the Rector of Stepney put it, "What we need is fewer soup kitchens and more nurses"; or, as Rev. J. F. Kitto said: "Those who know the East-End know that there is no work among the poor more important and more imperative than the provision of nurses." All workers who have these loving and skilful helpers to fall back upon, when a poor family is found with illness in the house, know the inestimable value of their services.

CHRISTIAN POLICE ASSOCIATION.

The "keepers of the public peace," whose spiritual interests were in past years largely overlooked, are now being earnestly looked after by the workers in connection with the C.P.A., and hundreds of godly men, formerly isolated, have been linked in fellowship and stirred to active service, while many others have been won to the Saviour. The twelfth anniversary of this association was celebrated on Thursday by a whole series of meetings.

Throughout the day a Workers' Conference was held, and accounts of work in far-off lands were given by Miss C. Gurney and Mrs. Walker.

In the afternoon a "Grand Meeting" was held in Exeter Hall, which was well filled by members of the Force and their friends. General Sir John Field being absent through indisposition, Colonel Macgregor presided in his place, and opened with a few earnest words of welcome and exhortation.

The report, taken as read, stated that this association, begun twelve years ago with a membership of six, has now gained a footing in nearly every continent, and God is using it for his own glory. One of the principal events of the year has been the journey of Miss Gurney and Mrs. Walker round the world. During the tour of eighteen months they have visited the United States and Canada, Japan, China, and the Straits Settlements, Ceylon (twice), and in Australia—the colonies of Victoria, Tasmania, New South Wales, Queensland, and South Australia, returning by India. Their experience proves us afresh of the use of a special Christian association among the police forces of the world. Accounts follow of Association work in various parts of America, Canada, Australia, China, India, and South Africa.

The Police Missionary Union now supports four foreign missionaries. The home work in several branches has been very fruitful, not only in the Metropolitan Force, but in the City also. The Central Police Institute continues to be a house of praise. Many testimonies have been given to the presence of the Lord, and stony hearts, melted by his wonderful love, have opened to receive Himself. In the Institute are also held Bible-classes, educational classes, meetings of wives and children, evangelistic services, conducted by the police, singing and band practices, workers' prayer meetings, etc. The Quiet Days for workers are held on the second Wednesday in each quarter—meetings at 3.30 and 6.0 p.m. Temperance work is carried on in all the branches, and many of the Police who have found the Saviour able and willing to keep them from falling, go out to tell others of the same Almighty Friend. Many a wanderer has been saved, and many a lost one restored, through the words spoken in the dead of night by a Christian policeman. The Police Seaside Home has received 457 convalescents during the twelvemonth, many of whom have found renewed health and strength, and not a few, we trust, new life in Christ. The Southern or Provincial police orphanage has at last found a settled home at Redhill, Surrey. The Manchester Police Orphanage is also making progress. During the past year, several missions have been held in different C.P.A. centres, such as Liverpool and Sheffield, with blessed results.

Rev. T. J. Madden delivered a sparkling address, in which, taking the initials of the association as a basis, he said that C suggested that Christians ought to be cheerful, commending the Gospel by their joy in the Lord. If religion is worth anything it must be seen on the beat, among the young recruits (who look to the Christian men for example), and at home. Arise, shine, and let the people see that Christianity has done you good. Next comes P, which means we must be practical. The faith that is not carried into practice is of little avail, and will not help anybody. We are called to serve; we are left here to witness for our Lord, that is practical Christianity. Then A reminds us we must be all-alive Christians. If we are going to do any good among the careless and godless we must be all alive, never off duty, always ready to bear, to do, and to suffer for Him who loved us, and gave Himself for us. A faith is not worth talking about that will not work, and fight, and endure.

Mrs. Small, of the Central Police Institute, addressed herself with great intensity to those who were longing to step over the line and find rest and deliverance in Christ.

Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, speaking to those who needed salvation, or who longed for full salvation, took as his text the words of Isa. xxxviii. 20, "The Lord ready to save." Spoken at first to a dying king, these words come as a message from God to every longing soul. Readiness to do anything implies previous preparation—so God's readiness to save rests on the fact that in the fulness of time God gave his Son to suffer and die for sin. But readiness to save also implies power to do it, and Jesus is able to save to the uttermost. The speaker proceeded to set forth the Gospel with great force and fervour, calling especially for full and instant surrender to Christ as Lord and King.

In the evening a similar meeting was held, addressed by Revs. E. N. Thwaites and A. G. Brown.

WOMEN'S TOTAL ABSTINENCE UNION.

A meeting arranged by this Union was held last Thursday afternoon at the Mansion House. Mrs. Henry J. Wilson (president of the W.T.A.U.) presided, and in the course of an opening address remarked that everyone recognised the evils of intemperance, but everyone did not recognise individual responsibility in regard to this national sin. She stated that 132 societies in various parts of the country are now included in the Union, representing a membership of some 10,000 persons. Dr. Annie McCall (physician to Clapham Hospital), who followed, said that in spite of the decrease in the convictions for drunkenness, the fact remained that intemperance is still increasing among women, and notably among women of the upper and middle classes. She attributed this to three reasons—firstly, to heredity; secondly, to grocers' licences, the abolition of which she advocated; and, thirdly, to doctors' orders. Miss Pugh, of the Central Telegraph Office, spoke of temperance work in the Post Office. Hon. Mrs. Elliot Yorke spoke as a parish councillor of what women could do on local bodies for temperance. Miss Maynard, Principal of Westfield College, urged that people, and especially children, were educated to many things that they did not at first like, and that on the same principle they should seek to educate others to total abstinence. Miss Kenward, of the Birmingham School Board, showed that there were few opportunities in the Board schools of giving direct lessons on temperance, and urged that more might be done by attention to diagrams, copybooks, and readers. Miss Agnes Laws, a district councillor from Woburn, spoke of the difficulties of influencing councillors and guardians. Miss Forsaith, editor of Wings, spoke as a journalist in favour of total abstinence. Miss Orme, lady superintendent of the London Temperance Hospital, said that nurses especially should abstain, both for themselves and for their influence upon others. Miss Elisabeth Boyd Bayly spoke of the advantage of temperance to writers. Amongst others who addressed the meeting were Miss J. A. Fowler, Deaconess Townson, Miss Macpherson, Mrs. Wightman, and Mrs. Finlay.

THE CRIPPLES' NURSERY.—As very few Institutions receive crippled children of the middle classes from three to twenty-two years of age, the committee of the Cripples' Nursery, 15, Park Place, Clarence Gate, Regent's Park, N.W., are prepared to receive such, at a payment of £20 per annum, which includes medical attendance, home comforts, and careful teaching, and a frequent change of air to Margate.

The Late Dr. R. W. Dale.

One more of the voices that never failed to penetrate and thrill us was silenced on Wednesday, March 13, when Dr. R. W. Dale, of Birmingham, died. All the papers of last week that referred to his health spoke of a rally, and were hopeful that he would again, as so often before, master his weakness; but he failed. The Christian Church has lost one of her ablest ministers. The whole Press of the country has joined in giving him tributes of praise, for he was many-sided, and touched our national life at almost every point. Politicians, educationists, reformers, writers, had in him a comrade, just as Christian believers had in him a brother and a servant.

The grand work, the consuming business of his life was preaching. He might give himself to municipal questions as if they were of first importance; he might throw himself into a campaign for religious equality, and speak on the platform of nearly every large town as if this were the supreme good; he might toil at committees on the subject of education, as if education alone availed; he might apparently abandon himself to politics, and plead with vehemence for the side he held to be right, as if politics would renew the nation; but all this, and more, was only the bye-play of his life; the pulpit was his throne and his home. To it he cheerfully gave his best thought, his most toilsome labour, his noblest eloquence; nothing was too good for his pulpit. And he had his reward in the crowds that for forty-one years waited on his ministry at Birmingham, and in the large undefined audiences which pondered his words outside. His deliverances had come to carry great weight with all sections of the Church, and with all classes of his countrymen.

Dr. Dale's start in life was happy. John Angell James, who knew him as a student at Spring Hill College, had the discernment to read his possibilities, and the wisdom to seek his services as an assistant-minister. Mr. James had also the grace to open the path of the young man, and to uphold him before the congregation. "He must increase, but I must decrease," was the saying of the noble-hearted old man. This position, subsequently changed into that of Mr. James's co-pastor, gave Mr. Dale time to continue his studies and to get quietly into his work, whilst bestowing on him something of reflected worth and fame. He inherited the results of years of toil and prayer.

Of course this made the position in one sense all the more difficult, and the very fact that the young man could fill it at all creditably was proof of fine qualities of head and heart. The start, or lead, he got by entering into another man's labours he never lost all the way through life. When he had been only sixteen years in the ministry he was made Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales. He was from the first looked to as a spokesman on all great occasions, and he never fell below the confidence and hope of his friends. He did not exhaust himself in his early efforts, but kept growing in strength and force and influence. Every honour that can fall to a Nonconformist minister fell to him—titles, services, positions of influence. For the titles he cared nothing. The use of Rev. as a prefix to his name, he always discouraged; his honorary degrees he had never sought, and did not care to use. It was, if we remember rightly, a long time before "Dr." became added to his name by popular custom. His predecessor had strongly disapproved of titles for ministers, thinking that they were fairly included in our Lord's admonition, "Be not ye called Rabbi."

Dr. Dale's preaching and ministry had from the first, and retained to the last, the distinguishing mark of an intense belief in the value of the Evangelical faith. Amid all the struggles and changes of the time in which he lived, he never faltered in his loyalty to the truth as it is in Jesus. There was also a bright, clear stream of spiritual feeling running through all his teaching, which made it living and refreshing. The first time we heard him either preach or speak was at the ordination of the late Professor Herbert, that man of subtle and comprehensive mind, who gave to our times one of the ablest books on philosophical questions, "Modern Realism Examined." The sermon to the people was preached by Dr. Dale from Acts iii. 12—16, and was distinguished by all that massiveness and thoroughness of treatment which characterised all his work. The voice had the same sonorous ring, rather metallic, which it retained to the last, and was, perhaps, not so well modulated as in later life. There was the familiar faith in the power of the name of Jesus.

An intimate friend used to say that Dr. Dale was a mystic. Certainly religion was more to him than a series of propositions, though he was, we think, too fond of reasoning things out, and sometimes got misled by his reason when he would have been safe in the keeping of his religious instincts and intuitions. He believed in prayer and in the Holy Ghost. We remember his telling two of his brother ministers, as they sat in friendly conversation with him in a friend's house, a story of a remarkable answer to prayer. The sense of quiet awe and deep satisfaction with which he told it, as if indeed God had been seen moving in human affairs, was not to be forgotten. This intense spirituality is indicated in the titles of some of his books: "Fellowship with Christ" and "The Living Christ and the Four Gospels." So also is his theological bent of mind indicated by his book on the Epistle to the Ephesians, and his standard treatise on "The Atonement." His delight in ethical teaching is seen in "The Laws of Christ for Common Life," "Week-day Sermons," and "The Ten Commandments." Whatever he might be busy with, his one ultimate aim was to bring men into living contact with the Father of their spirits, and to lead them into an experience of the love of God.

The way in which Dr. Dale looked upon common everyday things in relation to the highest things of God, appears very plainly in this sentence: "We might claim for social science what the Greeks would have called architectonic rank; except that the statesman would maintain, and maintain justly, that social science is only one department of politics; and the moralist, in his turn, would assert, and assert justly, that even politics are only a section of morals; and I should add, that the province of morals is included under the still wider sovereignty of religion." Therefore to him there was nothing common or unclean, nothing secular or profane.

His chief glory, we believe, will always be that, in a time when persistent attacks were made upon the objective reality of the Atonement, he strongly maintained that there was such a reality, and enthusiastically preached it. He was never tired of it; like Paul, and John, and Peter, he was ever returning to it; it was to him a place of wells and palm trees; it was as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. When preaching for the London Missionary Society in 1885, he exclaimed, "It is a wonderful gospel—God was in Christ, God is still in Christ, not reckoning the trespasses of men against them. Christ is the propitiation for the sins of the world. God has made peace by the blood of his cross. We may think that we have something better to tell mankind than this, something fresher, something more likely to awaken their moral interest, and to give depth and animation to their moral life; and if we claim to be merely the teachers of a religious theory which we have created for ourselves by deep and prolonged meditation on the mystery of the world, and on the discoveries which man has made of the eternal universe that surrounds him, I suppose that we have a right to teach men what we please. But if we describe ourselves as Christian preachers, we must follow Paul's example, and be able to say, 'I delivered unto you first of all that which also I received, how that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures.' We must declare, with John, that 'Christ is the propitiation for the sins of the world.' We may have many other things to tell men, but if we profess to deliver to men the contents of the Christian revelation, this must be among the very first elements of our message."

He defends this view of the Gospel from those who see nothing in it but "the obsolete dogma of a presumptuous, artificial, and cruel theology," in a passage of marvellous power—irony, logic, experience, history, all being brought into play. He convicts them of gross ignorance and inconsistency, and then winds up with the triumphant assertion, "It was this truth—free, unconditional forgiveness of sin, resting not on penitence, not on good works, but on Christ—that inspired the nations of northern Europe with the breath of a new and more vigorous moral life."

That R. W. Dale should have believed as strongly in the teaching of the Spirit as he did, and yet should have given such large place to pure reasoning in his teaching, has long seemed to us like the blending of the heavenly and the earthly. His reasoning, which seemed to be the strongest, was often the weakest part of his work. He has been known to lay down propositions whose conclusion would, to some minds, have been unbelief. Yet the reasoning gave to his utterances oftentimes an appearance of massive strength.

A Quaker lady used to say that it was a treat to hear him speak the word "righteousness," and his published works alone prove how great a place he gave to Christian morality in the kingdom of truth. Nevertheless, he wavered on some questions of present-day morals, and on others he would be accounted, by a growing number of persons, an unsafe guide. For example, he first of all approved of State regulation of vice, and openly supported it; then he changed his mind, but, for some reason or other, perhaps want of time, he never sought to give public effect to his better thoughts. He was originally an ardent supporter of peace views, but later on he reasoned himself out of them, and in "Impressions of Australia" actually pleaded for the establishment of boys' brigades, even in Australia. So far as we know he never sided with the temperance cause in the sense of becoming a total abstainer, though, of course, he worked in his own way to make the people temperate.

Dr. Dale's life has been very full and very fruitful. In Birmingham he is warmly praised as a laborious pastor, gentle, considerate, approachable, and making everything subordinate to his religious work. His name is cherished by a select number as that of a faithful friend.

Those from whom he was the most sharply divided on social, political, ecclesiastical, and religious questions, honour him for uprightness and sincerity. However many were his opponents, he seems to have made no enemies. The vast and representative congregation which assembled at his funeral service within the walls of his old chapel, and the thousands of persons who lined the streets as his body was carried to its burial, were an impressive evidence of the esteem in which he was held.

J. P. Gledstone.

In all parts of the country there were pulpit references on Sunday to the loss which the Church of Christ has sustained by Dr. Dale's departure. The preachers at Carr's Lane Chapel were Drs. Guinness Rogers and Fairbairn. In St. Paul's Cathedral a graceful and hearty tribute was paid by Archdeacon Sinclair, also at Westminster Abbey by Canon Gore.

On Monday afternoon there was a representative gathering in the City Temple, when Dr. Parker led a service in memoriam. Psalm xc. was read by Principal Vaughan Pryce, and prayer was offered by Rev. Charles Williams, of Accrington. In the course of a brief address Dr. Parker referred to the loss which Congregationalism has sustained by the death of Dr. Hannay, Dr. Allon, Joshua Harrison, and now Dr. Dale. All vacancies and issues must be left in the mighty and loving hands of God. Some day we shall hear of someone—a youth unknown, perhaps—coming forward at Carr's-lane Church with the mantles of Angell James and Dr. Dale upon him. We ask—who is to follow the departed leader? The Lord will not leave his Church without leaders. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes spoke of Dr. Dale's influence as a theologian.

CHRISTIANS IN ASIA MINOR.—A telegram from Constantinople, March 18, says:—"According to letters from the interior, much anxiety prevails among the Christians at Bitlis, Erzeroum, and Van, owing to the aggressive attitude of the Mussulmans. It is reported from Aleppo, Mossul, Ain-Tâb, and Urfa, that the Christians at those places likewise go in fear of Mohammedan outrages."

STREATHAM.—A special effort is about to be made by the pastor and friends at Lewin-road Baptist Church, where a series of services will be held from April 1 to 5. Evangelistic meetings will be held on several evenings. On the afternoon of Thursday, April 4, there will be a united conference on the spiritual life, and the last evening, April 5, will be devoted to a gathering of Christian Endeavourers.

UNITED EVANGELISATION.—The churches of Portland, Me., have recently been demonstrating the benefit of co-operation in aggressive Christian work. Eight churches, including four denominations, have held union evangelistic services. These have greatly stimulated Christian work and fellowship and denominational unity throughout the entire city, and resulted also in scores of conversions. On March 11 Rev. B. Fay Mills began evangelistic work, which is to last till March 28, on a larger scale. The churches for the most part are co-operating heartily in the movement.

STUDENTS' CONFERENCE, OXFORD.

The annual Conference of the Inter-University Christian Union, which is steadily growing in interest and power, was held last Saturday, Sunday, and Monday at Oxford, and was attended by representatives from Cambridge, Edinburgh, Belfast, Durham, and Oxford, numbering altogether about 150. The Conference opened with an address by Principal Chavasse, of Wycliffe Hall, which made a deep impression on the men, and proved quite a keynote to the Conference. After a reference to the great and world-wide influence of University life, Mr. Chavasse proceeded to speak of the objects and dangers of Inter-collegiate Christian Unions. There are three great enthusiasms engaging the thought and life of the Christian Church just now: the Enthusiasm of Humanity, of Unity, and of Spirituality. After indicating some of the ways in which these movements were expressing themselves, Mr. Chavasse said that the Inter-Collegiate and Inter-University Christian Unions were sharing in this threefold work. They were formed to lead men to Christ, and to work for Him; they brought together men of varying opinions and different Churches; and they aimed not only at conversion, but at consecration. Turning to the dangers of the movement, we were warned of three rocks. (1) An attitude of spiritual exclusiveness, as though the membership of the unions represented the spiritual aristocracy of the University. There are holy men outside the membership, and perhaps the reason of their unwillingness to join may be in the members of the Union themselves. (2) A spirit of self-satisfaction—we have not yet reached finality, and as we climb higher we shall still find ridges of spiritual attainment above us. (3) Emotionalism in religion. We must beware of a sentimental, hysterical Christianity. We need a deeper root and a stronger backbone, and these come only through solitary prayer, Bible meditation, and self-discipline, and not merely by attending meetings. Seventeen years of Oxford experience had revealed many a fall and shipwreck of faith after a promising start, simply because of the want of a solid foundation in prayer and God's Word. This address was the subject of much thought, prayer, and mutual converse among those attending the Conference, to whom its faithfulness and clear insight into dangers commended it very sincerely as a "word in season."

The next part of the Conference was a missionary meeting held in the hall of Magdalen College, when the Student Volunteer Missionary Union was specially emphasised. The speakers were Mr. Frank Anderson and Mr. Donald Fraser, of the S.V.M.U., Mr. Arthur Mercer, of the Cape General Mission, and the Rev. C. G. Lang, vicar of the University Church and Dean of Magdalen. Each address was full of power, and received by the large gathering with deep interest, while an after-meeting very fitly closed this time of definite work for God.

On Sunday the Conference proper was held, which consisted of a discussion on "Christ Crucified and Risen: How best to present His claims to University Men." Rev. Talbot Rice presided in the afternoon, in the Hall of Trinity College, when papers were read on "The Outward Witness," by Messrs. Saumarez Smith, of Cambridge, Drury, of Durham, and Gairdner, of Oxford, followed by discussion, and closed by an address from the chairman. The papers and speeches were well to the point, and full of practical experience of Christian work in the Universities. Mr. Rice reminded us of two facts—the natural man does not like this message of Christ crucified and risen, and yet his need will never be supplied by anything else. We are responsible not only for speaking, but for speaking in the power of the Spirit, and with tact, delicacy, and loving faithfulness.

The evening meeting in Oriel College Hall was devoted to the consideration of the witness of the inner life, and papers were read by Messrs. Woods, of Cambridge, Learmonth, of Edinburgh, and Holland, of Oxford. The papers and subsequent discussion were characterised by intense reality, especially as to past failures and their causes, while there was also a spirit of hope and confidence for the future, based on "He is able." Mr. Chavasse closed a most profitable meeting with an address on "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men," as a summing-up of the Conference. Character determines work; to do we must first be. We must be like Christ in his life, death, and resurrection, and this is only possible by our being in living union with Him. This union can only be maintained by definite solitary dealings with God in prayer, Bible study, and faithfulness in the inner life. The result of all this will be that we shall become "fishers of men," watchful, wise, patient, humble winners of souls.

On Monday morning the delegates met round the Table of the Lord, and then the Conference closed with a meeting, when reports of work were read and accounts of the various University Christian Unions given. The Conference will be a memorable one, for its numbers and interest, but above all for the earnestness, spiritual power, and practical reality in every part. It cannot but prove a great impetus to the work of God in and through the University.

CONFERENCE AT WIMBLEDON.

Last week the Drill Hall, Wimbledon, was the scene of some interesting gatherings for the deepening of the spiritual life. Meetings were held forenoon, afternoon, and evening, and they were, generally speaking, well attended, especially those at night. The speakers comprised a number of brethren well known on the Keswick platform.

The first speaker on Thursday (which may be taken as a specimen of the whole Convention) was Rev. Alfred Armitage, of West Ham. His voice is a fresh one on these occasions in our experience, but we judge that his testimony will be warmly welcomed on "Keswick" platforms in coming days. His utterances are very simple, but very searching and practical. At this meeting he spoke of Paul's three "Finallys"—"Finally, be strong in the Lord"; "Finally, rejoice"; and "Finally, pray." A number of co-ordinate passages were quoted and expounded in a helpful manner. The need of regular Bible study, of self-crucifixion, of courage, of a joyful spirit, and of prayer was earnestly pressed home and applied.

The second address of Thursday morning was by Rev. J. B. Figgis, on "Christ our Life." It was a most helpful unfolding of the truth that Christ is to the believer his salvation, his sanctification, and his satisfaction. The appreciation and appropriation of this truth brings into the life security, tranquillity, and sanctity.

In the afternoons there were Bible readings by various brethren, and on Thursday and Friday afternoons there were also missionary meetings, which excited a good deal of interest. This was very evident on Thursday, when a large company assembled for the meeting on Jewish missions. Some earnest introductory words having been spoken by the Hon. Captain Moreton as to the importance of Gospel effort among the Jews, the greater part of the time was taken up by an address from Mr. H. Warszawiak, of New York. He told, in some detail, the story of his translation from Judaism to the light and peace of the Christian faith—a story that is singularly interesting and pathetic as it comes from his own lips, and with which many readers have no doubt been made familiar through Miss Douglas's pamphlet. The Wimbledon friends were deeply moved by the recital of our Jewish brother's soul struggles and the persecutions that followed his reception of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. A short statement was also made as to the remarkable developments of mission work among Jews in New York and other American cities. Mr. Warszawiak is now in this country endeavouring to interest friends in his project of erecting a large "Christ's Synagogue" in New York as a centre of Gospel work among his fellow-countrymen there.

At the evening meeting of Thursday addresses were given by Rev. W. Houghton (of Guildford) and Rev. J. G. Mantle (of Bristol). The former expounded the results of Pentecostal blessing in the believer's heart and life, while the latter urged the need of perfect thoroughness in these soul experiences and upheavals.

MRS. SPURGEON'S BOOK FUND.

In "The Book Fund and Its Work," Mrs. Spurgeon tells the story of another's year's ministry in aid of Christian workers. Compared with its busiest years, the statistics of the Fund show a decrease both of subscriptions and grants. Mrs. Spurgeon lets the Fund tell its own story, by giving extracts from the letters received.

"My service will be all the sweeter, and my preaching all the richer," writes a pastor far away in a country town, "for this generous contribution to my workshop, this addition to my store of wealth. May God bless you more than ever, for it is surely his work you are doing! My words are poor and shallow in comparison to the well-spring of joy your gift has opened in my heart."

It is affecting to note that, in most cases, the grants made, though not unsually large, far exceed the expectation of those who have applied for them. A Baptist minister in the Midlands writes: "Your gift was so exceedingly liberal that I could hardly believe my own eyes. Ever since I received it I have been almost in a state of ecstasy, so that I am utterly incapable of thanking you as my heart tells me I should do."

A Congregational minister in Essex, acknowledging a parcel, says: "I did not presume to think when I wrote to you for a gift that in one short week I should be the happy possessor of so many valuable helps in sermonising. Your promptness in sending, as well as your loving words of sympathy, have made the volumes doubly precious to me. I hesitated many months before writing, and knew not how to ask for what I desired; but I can truly say that you have made what seemed to me so difficult to obtain to be the easiest thing in the world."

"I came in this evening," writes a curate from the Midland Counties, "tired and jaded from a long afternoon's parochial visiting, to find your handsome gift awaiting me, and the mere sight of the volumes acted as a veritable tonic. The aid that these books will be to me in my work is beyond calculation, and I am most truly grateful for them. I welcomed 'The Treasury of David' as an old friend whom I had learned to love in my college days; I have spent many hours in the college library, dipping into its rich pages; but I had despaired of ever seeing the precious volumes on my own shelves."

Mrs. Spurgeon says: "I have to refuse far more applications from clergymen of the Established Church than I can accept. It grieves me to do this, but it has to be done. Our own poor Dissenting pastors are, many scores of them, in such deep poverty that the £120 stipend of most young curates would be absolute riches to them; and so it comes to pass that, in fixing the limit of salary at £100 per annum for an unmarried man, I exclude many an eager applicant for books from the Church of England ranks."

Many communications are given from beneficiaires of the Fund residing in foreign lands, and those who support the work cannot but read these with peculiar pleasure. The distribution of the sermons in various languages is still very large. The Auxiliary Book Fund for local preachers is highly appreciated. A young local preacher, bookless, except for some dry old class-books, and hoping at some future day to enter the Wesleyan ministry, asked and obtained a grant from this agency. His acknowledgment ran thus:—"Words cannot possibly express my feeling of gratitude towards you. I am pouring out my thanks to God, because I know that He is in the very centre of your noble work. I will endeavour to make the best possible use of every volume, and I pray that God's blessings may rest on my studies."

All communications concerning the Book Fund should be addressed to Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon, Westwood, Beulah Hill, Upper Norwood, London.

THE FIFIELD VILLAGE MISSION reports good work in a cluster of villages near Maidenhead. The five mission stations, under the care of Mr. G. R. Shaw, are in full activity; while the colportage work carried on by Mr. C. W. Foster has proved most useful.

A GORDON MEMORIAL.—The Y.P.S.C.E. of the Clarendon-street Baptist Church, Boston, U.S., is making an effort to raise a fund to be known as the A. J. Gordon Memorial Fund, and to be applied to the debt resting on the Baptist Missionary Union. The movement is inspired by a desire on the part of the young people to honour the memory of their late pastor.

Letters to the Editor.

THE LATE DR. DALE.

Dear Sir,—It is not easy to over-estimate the loss which the Christian Church as a whole has sustained this week in the death of Dr. Dale. While that event is yet fresh in the thoughts of all, I desire to draw special attention to one point of danger to which he was keenly alive, and where his warning voice will be greatly missed; one, too, in which the whole Christian Church in the present day is deeply interested, and no portion of it more so than that of which the deceased was so great an ornament. I refer to what last year's chairman of the Congregational Union happily designated as "the secularisation of the pulpit, and the secularisation of the Church." I cannot do so more effectually than by quoting the closing words of a letter from Dr. Dale now before me, written from Wales this very week two years ago. I leave them without note or comment. May it be felt by every reader that he "being dead yet speaketh."

"I have the gravest fears of what will come from the present passion of some excellent persons to capture churches, and to change them into political and municipal caucuses. It will compel a serious reconsideration of the true idea of the Church."

Yours sincerely,

Putney, March 16. D. McL.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES AT FAULT.

Dear Sir,—Seeing a letter in your last week's issue complaining of the want of punctuality and method in acknowledging money, receipting bills, &c., I should like to say that after some years' experience in sending money to a variety of societies, I have never had once to complain of delay in replying or acknowledging money, but have invariably had receipts for the same sent by return.

If "Amicus" has cause to complain of some society, it does seem unjust to class them all together and to include them all in the charge, as though they were all alike to blame. I write this, not by request, but only because I think it fair to the societies to state the other side.—Yours truly,

Bath. G. E. T.

THE BOYS' BRIGADE.

Dear Sir,—Your notes on March 7, will be heartily endorsed by many who doubtless will view with interest any practical suggestions which may be thrown out with reference to Life-saving Brigades. Any organisation that can keep boys from twelve to seventeen years of age in touch with Christian movements deserves respect and consideration. This, I believe, the Boys' Brigade is doing, and my only complaint is that a love for war is bound to be fostered. Meanwhile, can we do better?—Yours faithfully, S.

Sir,—In a recent issue it was stated that the Boys' Brigade makes a boy into a soldier. Look at the object. "The object of the Boys' Brigade shall be the advancement of Christ's kingdom among boys, and the promotion of habits of reverence, discipline, self-respect, obedience, and all that tends towards a true Christian manliness." This sounds anything but soldierly, and everything that one could wish for. Put the Boys' Brigade in one side of the scale and every other organisation for boys in the opposite; which would be the heavier? Why, the Boys' Brigade, because it includes in its operations every other organisation which, though good in their way, only do a certain thing.

Union is strength; the Boys' Brigade, by including everything necessary for the training up of a boy, does the work of some half-a-dozen organisations. Besides the mere drill or outward show, we have a Bible-class, parade address, Scripture Union card, boys' room, library, football, cricket, and swimming club, camp, brass, bugle, and drum and fife bands. And yet people condemn the Boys' Brigade because it is going to make all our boys into soldiers. In a great many cases it has been an extremely hard thing to part with a boy when he is too old to belong to the brigade, and I have known of boys who would have given anything if they had been allowed to stay.

Again, I have had from time to time parents come and tell me what a change for the better has come over their boy since he joined the company, and many are to be seen in church now who previously seldom, if ever, went anywhere. And yet people condemn the Boys' Brigade! I cannot help thinking it is because they know next to nothing about it, but simply go by what they hear.

S. Boughton Kingdon,
Captain 15th Nottingham Company.

AN APPEAL FROM OXFORD.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me to trespass on your valuable space with this letter on behalf of Oxford? With great difficulty, at great expense, after much waiting time, and many prayers, we have at length secured the site for the Bishop Hannington Memorial Hall, which will serve as a general rallying place of missionary and Evangelical interest in this city. Nearly 1000 men a year pass from Oxford into Church and State and various departments of English and Colonial life. Surely a flock such as this demands the very best of shepherds, and a centre of work.

The High Church party are seeing their opportunities and are grasping them. The Evangelicals are to a very great extent letting them go by for ever. The names of Wycliffe, Whitefield, Wesley, French, Fox, Hannington, Tucker, and movements connected with Wycliffe and Wesley, and the Evangelical revival of last century, all bespeak the possibilities of Oxford.

At present there is no hall of any description which we can use for evangelistic services, missionary meetings, prayer meetings, etc., or as a centre of Evangelical work among undergraduates in Oxford. We are, therefore, venturing to appeal to the Christian public to come forward and help us in supplying this long-felt need. The sum of £4500 is wanted at once. All further particulars can be obtained from the hon. sec., Paget Wilkes, Esq., Lincoln College, or from yours faithfully,

(Rev.) W. Talbot Rice,
President of the Oxford Missionary Union.

Oxford, March 11.

[A descriptive book on the enterprise states that what is now known as the New Inn Hall property, belonging to Balliol College, has been secured as the site of the proposed building. It adjoins St. Peter-le-Bailey Church, and is conveniently situated. The hall will be transformed into the required building—about sixty feet long.—Ed.]

MR. TELFORD IN BRISTOL.

A twelve days' mission has been held in the Methodist Free Church, Milk-street, Bristol, by Mr. E. P. Telford, and has been in every way a gratifying success. The beautiful sanctuary was crowded at each service, no less than 14,000 having attended during the twelve days. But best of all, God was present in the power of the Holy Ghost; night by night the multitude was stirred and inspired in a way never to be forgotten, and more than 300 passed into the inquiry-rooms, and professed decision for Christ.

In addition to the services in the church, Mr. Telford conducted meetings in the dinner hour, two of which were held in the spacious Assembly Hall in connection with Fry's chocolate works, hundreds of the employés gathering to hear him, and many of them standing up in the midst of their fellow-servants and accepting the Saviour. It is a notable fact, well worthy of consideration, that in connection with this great firm, no less than 3000 persons assemble daily to worship God and hear the reading of the Scriptures.

On Friday last, Mr. Telford held his farewell meeting, when the church was densely crowded, the converts during the mission filling the body of the church. Brief addresses were given by the pastor, Rev. W. Yates, and Mr. W. Strange, and under deep stress of feeling Mr. Telford addressed the converts, showing them from the Scriptures that their sin was now laid upon Christ, and urging them as good soldiers of Jesus Christ to identify themselves with his Church, and keep rank. It was a memorable service; at the close hundreds lingered to shake hands with the missioner and to warmly thank him for the blessing he had brought them.

The work done amongst the children has been remarkable, nearly half the scholars in the Sunday-school having decided for Christ, and there is scarcely a family connected with the church but is realising the joy of salvation.

AT ABERGAVENNY a most successful mission has been held under the auspices of the Abergavenny Temperance Union. The meetings were well attended, and the interest steadily increased.

PALESTINE AT BRIXTON.

The Palestine Exhibition at Brixton closed on Friday last, after contributing in a substantial degree to the interest and instruction of many Christian visitors. The diorama, full of detail superbly arranged, is an excellent accompaniment of Rev. James Neil's very informative discourses on Oriental customs and scenes. During the concluding days of the exhibition, a goodly number of students and Sunday-school teachers were in the audiences, and what they saw and heard ought to give some of them at least an appetite for such reading as will enable them to interpret the Book and its story by the teaching of the Land and its people.

A valuable feature of Mr. Neil's demonstrations is the manner in which he makes the attractive and entertaining scenes and objects illustrate Holy Writ. By the way, Mr. Neil vindicated the Law of Moses from the disparagements of modern critics, and maintained the inspiration, integrity, and authority of Old and New Testaments alike. "Side entertainments" included models of a rock-hewn tomb, a Palestine town house, a Bedaween tent, and a village house. These items, specially prepared for the occasion, were realistic to the last detail, and those who heard the terse descriptions were in a position to take in the facts with readiness and pleasure. The "life-sized" village house amongst the fellaheen, the same to-day as in the beginning of our era, when the Lord Himself was the occupant of one, was an accurate and striking imitation.

The picture gallery by James Clark, Tristram Ellis, and J. Macpherson-Haye was a choice collection of outstanding subjects of Bible story. The raised map of Palestine, constructed by Mr. Armstrong, of the Survey Party, is a very important adjunct. Mr. Neil was quite enthusiastic in his account of this achievement and its significance. No other land has been so delineated, its hills and valleys, rivers and lakes being made objective with beautiful perfection.

The dioramic views were admired by all who saw them, alike for their artistic features and their truthful delineation of Oriental life. Twice during his stay at Brixton Mr. Neil gave a popular talk on "Courtship and Marriage," in which he commingled the wise and the curious, the grave and the gay, in a manner that was much enjoyed. Here, as in his other lectures, he threw light on Scripture allusions, and cut the ground from irreverent criticism of Bible story. Lord Bennet and Count Bentinck kindly acted as curators part of the time during which the exhibition was open. Sacred and appropriate songs were rendered by Lord Bennet and Mrs. Hicks.

Mr. Neil speaks with authority on his subject, and with earnestness he applies the lessons suggested thereby. His exhibition should be seen by all preachers and teachers. We are glad to know that he is in correspondence with friends who desire to send Palestine near to the homes of many Christian people who cannot make a tour of the land. His exhibition should travel the British Isles; and afterwards become the nucleus of a national Bible Museum. Those who encourage him will, in a measure, assist in realising this desirable consummation.

THE LIVERPOOL CONVENTION for the deepening of spiritual life will be held in the Gordon Hall, April 15 to 19. The speakers include Revs. T. Lancaster, J. J. Luce, W. S. Standen, G. H. C. Macgregor, A. R. Cavalier, and W. Murray. Chairman, Mr. Robert Wilson.

THE PRINCESS LOUISE has consented to open a Floral Fête to be held under the auspices of the Mayor and Town Council, on May 14, in the Pier Pavilion, Southend-on-Sea, on behalf of the New Holiday Home for Cripple Children about to be erected by the Ragged School Union.

AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND.—The severe winter has exhausted the general maintenance fund of our North London Homes for Aged Christian Blind. Recently the shadow of death has fallen on the Homes; three of our inmates have passed beyond the reach and need of our care. Much sickness still prevails, and will free us from great anxiety if your readers will give us their timely aid. Gladly would we fill the vacancies if funds permitted; appeals for help from the aged blind constantly come to hand. We will send a little book describing the work of the Homes to any kind donors.

THE Y.W.C.A.

Special meetings were held at Ridley House, the Swanage Y.W.C.A. Institute and Holiday Home, from March 11 to 16 inclusive, by Hon. L. E. Portman and Miss A. R. Habershon. There have been evident tokens of God's presence, power, and blessing. It is believed that a fresh impetus has been given to the work among young women in this town.

The report of the Leicester Y.W.C.A. and Girls' Social Institute shows that the efforts to remove the debt with which the year began have been successful. Two members are now training for missionary work. Miss Seale is nearing the end of the three years devoted to nursing, and Miss Butcher has been accepted for the Liverpool Training Institute. Another member, Miss Hurst, has a very successful class of poor children in the cottage on Saturday evenings for sewing, knitting, etc., with an attendance of sixteen to twenty. Thirty-one boarders have been received during the year.

The Watford Branch, 52, High-street, reports that never since the branch was started, in December, 1885, have there been such signs of Divine blessing. The members have increased from forty-five to ninety-four, and forty-five of these are total abstainers. Several members form a choir to assist in evangelistic services held at the rooms of the Y.M.C.A. on Sunday evenings. Since the beginning of November a service at 8.15 on Sunday evenings is conducted by the members, who try to bring in girls from the outside. Other work includes the support of foreign missions, laundries visitation, a flower mission, etc. Miss Ella M. Smith is hon. secretary.

At the monthly meeting of the London Council Miss C. Hope reported on the work of the Emigration Department. Since 1890 one hundred and fifteen girls have sailed to the various colonies, and a large number, in addition, have been passed on to other societies. On the 28th inst. five girls will be starting. There is an opportunity for fifty young women to emigrate to Western Australia in the middle of May. They must be domestic servants with good characters. Good places are ready for them in the colony. The Cape offers great advantages to those who are delicate, instances being given of some whose health out there has been fully recovered. All the girls sent out are doing well.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The mission band started in connection with the Y.M.C.A. at Egham is doing good work.

The Christian Recorder, issued by the Tunbridge Association, deserves to succeed, being both bright and newsy.

Arrangements are in preparation for the holding of an inter-colonial Y.M.C.A. Conference at Adelaide in November next.

The Secretary of the Aberdeen Association, Mr. Charles Shirreffs, has tendered his resignation, at the close of twenty years' faithful and fruitful service.

A grant has just been made by the English National Council in aid of the Y.M.C.A. in Damascus, which is contemplating the acquisition of premises of its own.

A social reception was given on Tuesday week by the Mayor of Belfast, to the members of the Y.M.C.A. The Lord Mayor, and other leading men, gave addresses.

The Winnipeg Association reports most hopefully on the past year's progress. The evangelistic, social, and educational work has been well sustained, and fruitful in blessing.

At a recent Association anniversary in New York, Bishop Potter said he desired, with all the power he had, to commend Y.M.C.A. work to the cordial sympathy and regard of the community.

Mr. James Chambers, who has been appointed secretary of the Cork Association, in succession to Mr. T. A. Bailey, is the son of a Presbyterian minister, and is very popular amongst the young men in whose behalf he will henceforth work.

The Omagh Y.M.C.A. has passed a resolution in favour of allowing members of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association the use of its reading-room and other advantages, in keeping with a resolution recently adopted by the national council, and is printing a card to this effect to be placed in each of the commercial hotels of the town.

Through the visit of Mr. Budgett Meakin to Yokohama, a committee of Christian men has been formed there who will make it their concern to receive and help young men in the name of the Y.M.C.A., advising them in matters of lodging, etc. It will be a great boon to many to be thus brought under the guiding influence of those who will in every way seek their highest welfare.

During the Sundays of this month Messrs. George Wise and R. H. Fisher are holding special meetings for men at the North Liverpool Y.M.C.A. On Sunday last there was a crowded attendance at both gatherings. The afternoon meetings are specially designed to strengthen men in their adherence to the Christian faith, and to combat theories of opponents. The evening service is evangelistic, and on Sunday night nearly 150 remained at the close for an after-meeting, a number making request for prayer.

At a recent meeting of the Johannesburg (South Africa), Committee, the following resolution was passed:—"To grant the same privileges to members holding unexpired members' tickets of the various centres of the Y.M.C.A., but not to holders of complimentary tickets." The secretary writes: "Will you kindly make this known to young men coming to this country?" He adds:—"I may take this opportunity of remarking that the labour market in this town is very much glutted—the supply far exceeding the demand—both in the clerical and mechanical line, and would recommend young men not to come out to this place for the present. More especially would I warn men or youths who would venture here 'on spec.'"

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

The Silver-street Society, Lincoln, which was formed a year ago with thirty active members, now reports sixty-three.

Miss Fanny J. Crosby, the blind hymn-writer, addressed an Endeavour meeting in Plainfield, N.J., and all the hymns sung were of her composing.

Miss Cora L. Fuller, of the Chickasaw Orphan Home, Lebanon, Ind., writes of a wave of blessing that has come to the two Endeavour societies of the Home.

A national convention of Christian Endeavour is to be held in Glasgow, April 22 and 23, when a Scottish National Christian Endeavour Union will be set on foot.

A C.E. Society in East Liverpool, O., reports that two of its members have become missionaries, and one an evangelist, while another has entered the Moody Institute.

Rev. C. Silvester Horne discusses in the Independent whether Young People's Guilds and C.E. Societies could not be blended. He thinks some kind of union would be to the advantage of the churches, the societies, and the members themselves.

Some Endeavourers were praying earnestly for months that one of their society might be led to enlist in foreign missionary work. Before long two Endeavourers from that society declared their intention to go to the foreign field when the way opened.

SOCIETY FOR THE RELIEF OF DISTRESS.—The thirty-fourth annual report says:—"The almoners are more numerous than in any previous year—namely, 126—and there has been no falling off in the devotion and energy with which they perform their duties. On the other hand, it is a matter for regret that the society's operations have been retarded, if not actually crippled, by reason of the inadequate financial support afforded by the public." The office of the Society is 78, Jermyn-street, S.W., Mr. C. H. Gosset, secretary.

"WHAT WE KNOW OF GOD BY REASON" was the subject of the scientific address delivered by Rev. Prebendary J. W. Reynolds, on Wednesday last week, at 1.15 p.m., in the church of St. Anne and St. Agnes, Gresham-street, E.C. It was shown that the idea of Divine Existence is more than a thought about which we reason. It is a truth that the heart feels, the mind apprehends, and the experience realises as a moral heart-throb telling of a Higher Power. The idea was earlier than faith; faith rested on it. It preceded religion, for it made religion possible. It is the ground of philosophy, and the crown of science, as representing the Eternal, who makes, explains, and continues the worlds. To deny personality to God, and then to attribute a spurious personality to animals in particular, and to nature in general, is a mark of dulness or of small craftiness. The main intelligible principles of Godhead in nature discerned by our reason are:—Unity in Power and Purpose; this led all peoples to believe in God: Intelligibleness, and order witnessing to the work of mind: Causation, not a mere sequence of antecedent and consequent, but an efficient cause accomplishing a purposed result: Life, coming as do many other marvels, with sensation, thought, morals. All these show a work of universal agreement. They are as lights Divinely kindled. All unbelief as to the Divine is a mark of ignorance. The unbeliever says, "I do not know." Let him strive to know, not by levelling himself to the beast, for the higher realities are not attained by the lower. Let him think truly, think up to his best, and better that day by day. The elevation of his spirit will soon attain, in peace and vision of beauty, to true knowledge of the glorious God.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The death is reported, at the age of seventy-six, of Rev. R. W. Lawson, of the Free High Church, Airdrie, the oldest pastor in the town. The funeral was a public one.

The Widows' Friend Society in Scotland made grants last year to 863 widows. The work is quiet and unpretentious, but it reaches many of the deserving poor who are untouched by other agencies.

A vigorous forward movement is being carried on in connection with the Free High Church, Paisley, of which Rev. J. B. Sturrock is minister. Addresses have been given by Mr. Harry Long, of Glasgow; Mr. William Quarrier, of the Orphan Homes; and Dr. Moxey, of Edinburgh. Mrs. Baeyertz commenced a fortnight's mission on Sabbath afternoon.

The Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Free Church held an interesting meeting in the Waterloo Rooms, Glasgow, last week. Mrs. Gunn, of the New Hebrides, effectively represented the foreign field; while Miss Rainy pressed the claims of the work on young women, and Dr. Ross Taylor enlarged on the necessities of the work.

The centenary celebration at Aberdeen of the London Missionary Society drew a large audience last week to the West Parish Church. All the Protestant bodies in the city were represented, and the pastor of the church, Dr. Mitford Mitchell, gave a cordial welcome to the assembly. The mission-field was well represented by Rev. James Chalmers, of New Guinea, and Dr. Chalmers, of China.

IRISH NOTES.

The Portadown Methodist Colportage Society, now in its fourth year, is doing an excellent work. During the past twelve months, the agent paid 15,000 visits, and sold £100 worth of books.

Owing to ill health, Rev. A. H. Male, who was to have visited Ireland next week as part of the deputation on behalf of Methodist Missions, will not be able to come, but his place will be taken by Rev. Chas. Feneley, of St. Austell, Cornwall, who had been a missionary in Western Africa.

The Presbyterian Church is making vigorous efforts to keep up with the growth of Belfast. Recently Rev. J. W. Gibson was appointed to the Broadway district, and now Revs. John Milliken, of Armoy, and Jas. Knowles, of Ballinahinch, have been appointed as missionaries to other districts of the city.

On Tuesday night last week the Lord Mayor of Belfast gave a reception in the Ulster Hall to the members of the Belfast Y.M.C.A. and their friends. About 2000 persons were present, and addresses were given by several ministers, and by Mr. T. F. Shillington, president of the Association. The meeting was a great success.

LAMBETH WALK MISSION.—The twentieth anniversary of this work for God in the district of Lambeth Walk was held in Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, on Wednesday, March 13. Tea was provided for about 200 in Hawkestone Hall. The president of the mission, Mr. Horace B. Marshall, jun., presided, and addresses were delivered by Rev. W. J. Wintle, Rev. R. Dawson, Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, and others.

AN OPENING IN AFRICA.—Sir,—Can any of your readers help us to find a Christian young man, interested in missions, who has had thorough practical training in all departments of basket-making, and wicker-work generally, and who is willing to go to a mission in a healthy part of Africa? His work would be to teach the natives a useful industry, whereby they can support themselves by honest labour, and he would have ample opportunity for direct spiritual work at the same time. To a suitable man, a moderate salary and passage money would be paid. If any of your readers know of such, and will forward me his name and address, I shall be greatly obliged.—Yours very truly, D. A. Hunter.

PURIM FEAST FOR JEWISH CHILDREN.—While Hebrew adults were last week receiving gifts, and in other ways keeping up this time-honoured feast (Esther ix. 22-28), Mr. Ehrlich, who with his wife has so long witnessed for Christ in Whitechapel, assembled 450 Jewish children, most of them members of his Band of Hope, and made them happy in the Hebrew Conference Hall, Old Montague-street. The building could not accommodate this large number all at once, so the party were divided into two. The little ones sang Christian hymns with much joy, and listened with intelligent interest to Gospel addresses. A few years ago Mr. Ehrlich was mocked at as an apostate; now he is greeted on all hands as "though a Christian," yet a faithful friend of his people.

PERSONALIA.

Sir George Williams, who is greatly benefiting by his stay at Mentone, hopes to be well enough to return home early next month.

Miss Hesba Stretton's book, "The Highway of Sorrow," in which the persecution to which the Stundists are subjected is so vividly described, is being translated into French, for publication shortly by Bridel and Co., Lausanne.

Mr. Martin Hope Sutton, known and loved for faithful testimony, devoted service, and ready helpfulness, attained on March 14 his eightieth birthday. He received the congratulations of many friends, while addresses were also presented by the Church of England Y.M.C.A. and others, as well as the chiefs of departments of the Royal Seed Establishment, from which business he retired in 1888, after being head partner for more than fifty years. The heartfelt congratulations which Mr. Sutton received on the anniversary will be echoed far and wide, together with the wish that his life may long be spared to his family and friends.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Springfield, Bucks.—Pastor H. Trueman has concluded a week's evangelistic mission here.

Cubitt Town.—A mission is being held at the Tent Gospel Hall here by Mr. J. Albinson. God has blessed the testimony of the evangelist.

Newcastle.—Dr. Newman Hall completed an eight days' mission last Sunday at Newcastle-on-Tyne. After every sermon a meeting was held for prayer and consecration.

Mr. Robert Snaith, evangelist, Newcastle, has conducted a three weeks' mission at Creca, Annan. Large numbers attended the meetings, and anxious ones were dealt with, while Christians were greatly refreshed and stimulated.

Bournemouth.—Rev. Morley Wright, of Lewisham, has been the chief speaker at a week's Gospel mission in the East Cliff Congregational Church. The mission has been largely attended, and deep impressions have been made.

Devonshire Villages.—A most encouraging work has been going on for some weeks in North Devon villages, in connection with the labours of Mr. John Elliott, evangelist. A goodly number have been won to Christ, especially among young men.

Mr. Matthew Burnett has conducted Gospel Temperance Missions recently at Erith and Foxham. He is now in Middlesbrough, and afterwards proceeds to Glasgow to conduct a mission under the auspices of Rev. William Ross, of Cowcaddens, Glasgow.

Mr. Henry Varley writes, on Feb. 12: "We are in the midst of a gracious work here. The Hawthorn Town Hall is being crowded with deeply interested audiences, and God's people especially are being revived. Some are passing from death into life."

Mr. Walter Notman, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a fortnight's mission in connection with New-road Baptist Church, Oxford (pastor, Rev. J. Dann). The Word preached was not in vain, for at the close of each service anxious souls were dealt with.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has held a special mission at Doncaster-road Chapel, Rotherham (Rev. J. Parmiter, pastor). The services were continued three days longer than at first intended, and closed with a communion service which will be long remembered by all who were present.

Belfast.—The mission held during the last five weeks by Mr. James Wharton in the Iron Mission Hall, Belfast, has been greatly owned. Believers have been blessed, and many have declared themselves on the Lord's side. The work amongst the young people has been specially interesting.

Ireland.—Evangelistic services have been held in Belturbet Methodist Church by Rev. H. Ball, in Ballinderry Presbyterian Church by Mr. Robt. Clarke, in Stewartstown Methodist Church by Mrs. Amanda Smith, and in Wexford Methodist Church by Rev. John Good. In each case several were led to decision for Christ.

Great Shelford.—An eleven days' mission has been held at Great Shelford, Cambs, by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, of Birmingham. The meetings were well attended throughout; actual decisions were not so many as could be desired, but the believers have been greatly refreshed, and deep and powerful impressions have been made on the hearts of many unsaved. An important feature of the mission was the children's meeting, held each evening.

GLOSSOP.—The report of the Beacon Light Mission, under the care of Richard Howton, shows a large amount of vigorous work, outdoor and indoor. The Gospel has been carried to many who had scarce ever heard it before, and not a few have been saved. Mr. Howton's address is 4, Cross-street, Glossop.

FEMALE EMIGRATION.

Dear Sir,—There is again a demand in Western Australia for useful women servants. The Agent-General for that colony offers free passages to 100 young women between the ages of eighteen and forty, who must pay £1 each for ship kit. The United British Women's Emigration Association has been desired by the Agent-General for Western Australia to select fifty to go out in May, another party to follow later in the year.

Only girls of exceptionally good character, and whose testimonials prove to be thoroughly satisfactory, will be accepted for these free passages. They must have had experience of domestic work, and give names of employers, and other references as to their moral character, good health, and service capacity. Application should be made without delay to the Hon. Sec. U.B.E.A., Imperial Institute, South Kensington, S.W., by persons in the London district; those who live in the country should apply to Miss Bromfield, Friary Cottage, Winchester, from both of whom further particulars can be obtained.—Yours truly, (Miss) G. Lefroy.

MALDEN HALL, KENTISH TOWN.

The twenty-first anniversary of the opening of this branch of the Evangelistic Mission was held on Thursday last, when good numbers attended both the afternoon and evening meetings. The report of the year's work, outlined by Mr. Geo. Hucklesby, showed that the Hall had "come of age" in very prosperous circumstances, so far as the spiritual work was concerned. During the year two special missions were held by Richard Weaver and Wm. Grove respectively, both being attended with much spiritual blessing. The usual agencies, including open-air meetings at five stations, Bible-carriage work, Christian Union for Young Men, Bible-classes on week-days and Sundays for young men and women, an overflowing Sunday-school, mothers' meeting, etc., are all steadily progressing.

During the afternoon stirring addresses on Christian life and service were given by Dr. G. F. Pentecost, Colonel Morton, and Mr. J. J. Sims. In the evening the subject was renewed, the speakers including Messrs. Hucklesby, Bateman, and Sprunt.

C. Russell Hurditch.

THE LATE MR. R. BILKE.

An effort is being made to raise a memorial fund for the late Mr. Robert Bilke, of Union Hall Mission, for the benefit of the widow and family. In a circular letter Mr. T. B. Miller, of Barnet, says: "Mr. Bilke gave his life for the work; for thirty-three years he has loved to carry the Gospel message and to feed the hungry. The future of the Mission is now receiving the careful consideration of the trustees and others interested in the work. During the many years of his labour Mr. Bilke's income has been barely sufficient to maintain his large family, and quite inadequate to lay by for them. His widow has now to face the future unaided by his faith in God, and to seek support for herself and family of eight children, all but two of whom are wholly or in part dependent upon her."

The hon. secretary of the fund is Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe, Hebron, Salusbury-road, Brondesbury, N.W.

HAM YARD HOSPICE AND SOUP KITCHEN.—At the annual meeting, a few days ago, of this old-established charity, it transpired that, during the severe weather in February some 44,000 meals were supplied; whilst in the same period, coal tickets were distributed, amounting, in the aggregate, to over 160 tons in excess of any previous year.

AFRICAN COLONISATION.—On Saturday evening Exeter Hall was thronged by a large audience to hear an address on "Travel and Adventure in South-East Africa," by Mr. F. C. Selous. The rail of the platform was hung with lion skins; and stuffed zebras, antelopes, and other wild beasts, trophies of Mr. Selous's hunting expeditions, were arranged in the background. The chair was taken by Mr. Howard Williams. The Duke and Duchess of Teck were on the platform. Mr. Selous, who was warmly received, gave an interesting account of some of his hunting adventures in Africa. He declared that the great curse of the British Empire in South Africa is drink. He would tell young men that unless they had sufficient moral courage never to drink spirituous liquors but in very moderate quantities, to sign the pledge before they went out. He had spent a great part of his life in Africa, exposed to many hardships and temptations, and he attributed his good health to being always practically a total abstainer. Many would tell them that white men could only work with natives by brutality and force. He entirely denied that proposition. People could get on with them very well if they treated them fairly, kindly, and justly.

OBITUARY.

M. DE MURALT.

The death is announced, at the age of eighty-seven, of M. de Muralt, formerly Professor of Old Testament Exegesis in the Faculty of Lausanne. He was the author of several historical and theological works.

M. B. RIGGENBACH.

The Swiss churches are mourning the death of Dr. Bernard Riggenbach, Professor Extraordinary in the University of Basle. In addition to his teaching and the writing of historical works, he showed an active interest in behalf of discharged prisoners and neglected children. He was but forty-seven years of age, but he had earned distinction as a scholar and preacher.

PROFESSOR CHARLES SCHMIDT.

By the death of Professor Charles Schmidt, of Strasburg, a noble representative of French Protestantism has passed from the scene. Many pastors have sat at the feet of the Professor, who had reached the advanced age of eighty-three years. M. Schmidt's historical works are highly esteemed, and distinctions were conferred upon him for his "History of the Albigenses" and his "Historical Essay on Civil Society in the Roman World, and its Transformation by Christianity." He also wrote on the history of Alsace and the Western Church during the Middle Ages.

MRS. BILBROUGH, CROYDON.

This aged follower of the Lord Jesus, fell asleep in Him on Tuesday, March 12, after a short illness of two days, at her residence, 92, Wellesley-road, Croydon. Many of the good works pleaded for in the columns of The Christian were regularly assisted by her. She was born in Liverpool in 1811. Her father, Rev. James Lister, for forty-eight years was minister of the Baptist Church worshipping at Lime-street and Myrtle-street, and knew many of the noble band of missionaries who went out to India and China in the early years of this century. Her one desire was to do good and help others, "a succourer of many." Three sons and two daughters mourn her loss.

MRS. W. G. SHELLABEAR.

In her sixteenth year Miss Kealy had the joy of bringing her future husband, who was then an officer in the Royal Engineers, to a saving knowledge of Christ. When Mr. Shellabear retired from the army some years later and became a missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, his intended wife was in full sympathy with his desire to devote himself to mission work among the Malays, and rejoiced in the promised fulfilment of her early hopes of being a missionary. After her marriage, in 1890, Mrs. Shellabear accompanied her husband to Singapore, where she entered enthusiastically into all his work, aiding him more especially in his literary labours. In the spring of 1892 the state of her health necessitated her return to England. In a few months she had so far recovered that she was allowed to return, but shortly after her arrival at Singapore she had a relapse, and at the end of four months she was again compelled to return to England. The last five months of her life were cheered by the presence of her husband, who came to England in the hope of saving her life by a removal to a more equable climate, but she was too weak to bear the sea voyage. She died on the 15th inst., aged 24, at Ashley House, Gosport, the home of her father, Dr. J. R. Kealy.

Appeals.

William Foster, a Christian worker, who devotes himself to preaching the Gospel and distributing tracts, &c., in large and small towns, appeals for books and tracts suitable for such service. God has wonderfully owned these labours during the past forty years. His address is 28, Boundary street, Pendleton, Manchester.

Notices.

Mr. and Mrs. Wiggan, Evangelists.—The Editor of The Christian will be glad to know the present address of these friends.

Applicants for Tracts.—Mr. Roxford, Beckington, near Barnstaple; J. Wadham, local preacher, Barnstaple; W. A. Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Canon Eyre has accepted the Vicarage of Sheffield.

Dr. Blunt, the Bishop of Hull, is laid up with the influenza.

The Archbishop of Dublin is expected to speak at the C.M.S. anniversary.

It is said that there is a proposal in Liverpool to start an Evangelical weekly.

Dr. Percival will be consecrated Bishop of Hereford on March 25, in Westminster Abbey.

Christ Church, Gipsy Hill, London, has been offered to Rev. J. C. Joynt, of St. George's, Sheffield.

Rev. R. G. Brearey, chaplain of the reformatory ship Akbar, at Liverpool, has died, at the early age of 47.

Archdeacon Williams was consecrated Bishop of Waiapu, N.Z., in succession to Bishop Stuart, on January 20.

The secretary of King's College, London, Mr. J. W. Cunningham, is about to retire from his office, owing to failing health, after discharging its duties without intermission for fifty years.

The appointment of Rev. C. N. Keeling, rector of St. James's, Collyhurst, to be Hon. Canon of Manchester Cathedral has given great satisfaction to the Evangelicals of the diocese.

The Rectory of St. Botolph's, Aldersgate, vacant by the death of Rev. S. Flood Jones, has been given to Rev. H. R. Gamble. It had been hoped that Rev. T. S. Henrey, whose churchyard services are so well known, would have been appointed.

Rev. W. E. Burroughes, incumbent of the Mariners' Church, Kingstown, has accepted the position of one of the secretaries of the Church Missionary Society. Mr. Burroughes will carry on his ministry in Kingstown until the end of May.

A series of addresses to City men is now being given by Rev. W. R. Mowll, on Wednesdays, at St. Peter upon Cornhill from 12.30 to 1 p.m. He boldly denounces sin, seeks to bring conviction to every heart, and holds up Christ as the Saviour in every address. Business men come in large numbers to hear him.

The Liverpool Ladies' Parochial Bible and Domestic Mission held its annual meeting last week. The Lord Mayor, who presided, said the Mission was founded for the purpose of carrying the Bible into the homes of the poor, and also at the same time conveying sympathy and help. That was a work specially belonging to the Church organization, and it reflected great credit upon the members of that body that they took it as one of their most important duties. The Bishop of Liverpool said that one thing which had been learnt during the last fifty years was that the Church recognized there was a place in its work for women.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A new chapel has been opened at Brinksway, Stockport.

Wimbledon Church reports 246 members, and steady progress.

Rev. W. Glyde Tarbolton has been recognised as pastor at Warsash.

At St. John's Wood-terrace Church, N.W., Rev. Isaac Hartill has been recognised as pastor.

Rev. Charles Leach, D.D., of Kilburn, has accepted the pastorate of Stepney Meeting, London.

Mr. H. Merchant, son of Rev. J. Merchant, has been ordained to the pastorate of Greville-place, Maida Vale.

Rev. J. C. Burnett, principal of Howard College, Bedford, and secretary of the County Union, is laid aside by illness.

Richmond-hill Church, Bournemouth (Rev. J. Ossian Davies), reports 492 members, while a new church has been formed at Winton.

Rev. C. H. Cook, of Westfield, Horbury, has broken down in health, and, under medical orders, has gone to Penzance for two months' rest.

Ebenezer Church, Watney-street, Commercial-road, E., has celebrated the 110th anniversary of the church and the fifteenth of the present pastorate (Rev. B. Sackett).

Edmonton and Tottenham Church reports a membership of 495, sixty having been added during the year. A new mission has been built, and a branch church formed at Angel-road.

The Lancashire Union reports that the county has 318 Congregational places of worship, an increase of 35 since 1883. The 318 chapels and mission rooms have accommodation for 161,272 persons.

Lyndhurst-road Church, N.W., reports a large circle of active effort. In the Manual the pastor pleads strongly the cause of foreign missions. The Sunday-schools, children's services, Bible classes, and other efforts engage the activities and sympathies of this large Hampstead congregation, and are remarkably well sustained.

Calls.—Rev. A. Pringle, of Maidstone, to Caterham (accepted); Mr. H. A. Atwell, to Tamworth; Rev. M. P. Moses, of Llandudno, to Llanelly.

Resignations.—Rev. G. J. Adeney, of Reigate (for September); Rev. J. T. Camm, of Golborne; Rev. W. H. Prichett, of Tong.

BAPTIST.

Mr. J. E. Barnes has been ordained to the pastorate at Hounslow.

Rev. J. Manton Smith has conducted a mission at Queen-square Church, Brighton.

Rev. W. H. McMechan, formerly of Maze Pond Chapel, has commenced his ministry at Barnes.

Rev. John O'Dell has concluded his twenty-four years' ministry at George-street Chapel, Hull.

Rev. J. W. Ewing, of East-hill, Wandsworth, has declined the invitation to the pastorate of Dalston Junction Church.

The annual statement of Trinity Chapel, John-street, Edgware-road, W., shows a membership of 193, a net gain of thirty-five.

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon has been warmly welcomed at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on his return after an attack of the influenza.

St. Andrews'-street Church, Cambridge (Rev. T. Graham Tarn), reports 635 members, of whom sixty-two were admitted during the past year.

Rev. Arthur C. Hodgson, who left Sharon Hall Church, Liverpool, for the United States in August last, has accepted the pastorate at Clayton, Madison County, Illinois.

A new mission-hall, to seat 700, has been erected in St. John's-road, Tunbridge Wells, for the church hitherto meeting in John-street. The hall was opened on Thursday with services, in which Revs. J. Smith, J. Mountain, and Mr. John McAuliffe, the evangelist in charge, took part.

One of the oldest Baptist ministers living, Rev. B. C. Etheridge, of Ramsden-road, Balham, has retired after a ministry of 51 years. Very touching farewell services have been held; Dr. J. A. Spurgeon, Mr. T. H. Olney, Revs. Z. T. Dowen, E. Henderson, J. Ewen, T. Simon, D. Llewellyn, and others taking part.

Rev. F. T. Snell, of Tifton, Georgia, U.S.A., formerly an evangelist under Mr. Spurgeon's direction, hopes to arrive in England at the end of April on a visit. He will be glad to accept preaching appointments during his stay. He may be addressed, care of Mr. Frank Cockrem, secretary of the Open-Air Mission, 11, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

Rev. Walter Wynn, of Earby-in-Craven, has penned a tribute to the memory of Rev. Horatio Wilkins, whose death we recorded last week. He writes: "Unostentatious, calm, loving—such was the very life of the man himself. He was one of God's hidden ones. Some of his sermons were models of spiritual beauty and power. His listeners would be strange souls if they doubted the marvellous power and variety of Scriptural truth. His every exposition of it was kindled by a fire that burned in his own heart."

Calls.—Rev. W. Tooke, to Bury St. Edmunds; Mr. J. D. Robertson, to Alloa, N.B.; Rev. R. D. Darby, to Hornsey Rise.

Resignations.—Rev. C. Broome, of Fressingfield; Rev. W. J. Denmee, of Providence Chapel, Maidstone; Rev. John Thomas, of Exmouth.

METHODIST.

A new chapel has been erected at Blackburn.

Dr. Waller, who has been indisposed, has resumed work.

Rev. Joseph Olphert has arrived in Wellington, New Zealand.

Rev. James Monahan, of Hemel Hempstead, is reported to be seriously ill.

The Old Town Mission, Hull, has held its annual meetings with enthusiasm and much encouragement.

New chapels are about to be built at Cheetham Hill; Hampsthwaite; Laverton; Burton Leonard.

Successful missions have been held at Chatteris, Knockhole, Skelmanthorpe, Spennymoor, Bawtry, Worksop, and Eastbourne.

Four out of the seven men who lost their lives in the recent Snailbeach lead-mine disaster were active workers among the Methodists.

Rev. W. H. H. Kelshaw, of the Ancoats Mission, Manchester, has concluded a very successful ten days' mission at the Unsworth North Chapel.

Additional promises of £1506 for the Methodist New Connexion Centenary Commemoration have been reported to the secretary, and the total now amounts to £42,500.

A series of special evangelistic services under the auspices of the Bristol District Meeting has been held at Newport by Rev. J. Foulger. The services were productive of good.

Rev. F. W. Macdonald, speaking at a missionary meeting, stated that of the 330 ordained missionaries of the Wesleyan Society, more than one-half were natives of the countries in which they were engaged.

Missionary services have been held in the United Methodist Chapels of Birmingham, followed by a demonstration in Carr's-lane Church, in which Mrs. Wakefield, Revs. T. Wakefield and J. Hocking took part.

A Convention for the deepening of spiritual life has been held at Preston under the presidency of Alderman Duckworth. Rev. J. Sarvent read a paper on "The Larger Spiritual Life." At an evening meeting Alderman Duckworth spoke on "Connexional Loyalty," Rev. R. Hebbron on "Saintliness" and Rev. W. C. Rank on "Power."

PRESBYTERIAN.

Grange-road, Birkenhead, reports a membership of 565.

Principal Dykes and Mr. H. M. Matheson are recovering from attacks of influenza.

St. Andrew's Church, Canterbury, reports that the income for the past year has been the largest in its history.

Rev. John Tudhope, late of Glasgow, has been ordained to the pastorate of Queen's-road Church, Liverpool.

Rev. Dr. Mathews is about to leave for the United States to attend the General Assemblies and arrange for the Pan-Presbyterian Council next year in Glasgow.

Widespread regret is expressed in Salford and Manchester at the resignation, owing to age and infirmity, of Rev. John Reid, whose forty-three years' valuable service has endeared him to many.

An affectionate leave has been taken by the London Presbytery (North) of Rev. Theodore Meyer, who, after long and faithful service among the Jews in Whitechapel, feels compelled to retire.

The Presbyterian Social Union will hold its next gathering in the Venetian Chamber of the Holborn Restaurant this evening (21st inst.). Mr. H. M. Matheson will receive the guests at half-past seven, and the subject of the evening will be "The War in the East, and its Probable Influence on Missionary Work."

Calls.—Rev. S. McLennan, of Stonehaven, to Sherbrook, Glasgow; Mr. T. G. Evans, of Llandovery, to Ynysbwl; Rev. J. Primrose, of Broxbourne, to Cathedral-square Church, Glasgow (accepted).

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Ipswich, on 7th inst., Mr. W. D. Sims, aged sixty-nine, a leader among the Friends, president of the Y.M.C.A. for twenty years, and a liberal helper of many philanthropic and Christian institutions.—At Weston-super-Mare, on 11th inst., Rev. James Davis, aged sixty-six, a Baptist minister.—At Eltham, Mr. H. W. Dobell, aged eighty-one, prominent as a director of the London Missionary Society, and a leader in many good works.—At Haverfordwest, on 10th inst., Rev. Thomas Davies, D.D., aged eighty-three, formerly principal of the college; it is noted, as giving a link with the past, that his first application to be admitted as a student was signed by Christmas Evans.—At Sheffield, Mr. Cornelius Atkinson, aged eighty, for more than half a century an earnest leader among the Baptists.—At Yarborough, Southsea, aged ninety, Mr. John Stevens, a faithful servant of Jesus.—At Spalding, on 9th inst., Mr. William Parkes, aged seventy-three, a devoted preacher of the Gospel.—At Sheffield, Mr. R. Searle, aged seventy-two, an active Methodist.—At Edgbaston, Mr. A. Keep, aged seventy, a useful worker.—At Fernham, Farringdon, suddenly, while preaching, Mr. Edwin Ayres, aged fifty-five, who had been used of God to many.—At Cambridge, Mr. Joseph Sykes, a mission worker for many years at St. Andrew's Church.—At Pulham St. Mary, Rev. James Lock, suddenly, formerly Baptist minister at Saxlingham.—At Northampton, Mr. H. Marshall, J.P., aged sixty-eight, ex-mayor of the town, and a liberal helper of the Lord's work.—At Cardiff, Councillor Vaughan, a leading Methodist, and an ex-mayor.—At Keighley, Mr. W. J. L. Crabtree, aged eighty-five, a devoted follower of Jesus.—At Swinton, on 12th inst., Canon Heywood, vicar of the parish.—In the City, on 11th inst., Rev. T. D. C. Morse, aged 70, vicar of Christ Church, Newgate, E.C., a well-known educationalist.—At Barton Turf, Norwich, on 8th inst., Mrs. J. G. Poole, aged 42, wife of the vicar of the parish.—Mrs. Sallie Ann Pierson, mother of Dr. Arthur T. Pierson, on March 3, in her ninety-fourth year, retaining to the last her remarkable faculties of mind and body.—At Dublin, Rev. Thos. Gloster, formerly incumbent of Ballyhaise, aged seventy years.—At Drogheda, Mr. J. C. Lambert, an earnest Christian worker, aged eighty-six years.

Sowing in Tears—Reaping in Joy.

BY J. W. C. FEGAN.

I am writing from a sick room, where I have been confined for the last fortnight. The very day we came to an end of our relief work I was seized with a very malignant type of influenza, which has left me very low.

I hardly know at times whether to laugh with joy or weep in trouble. I have never felt the good hand of my God upon me like this last few months.

SHOWERS OF BLESSING.

Amongst our lads here and the little fellows at Greenwich we have had "showers of blessing." Scores have turned to the Lord, and are bright in his love.

OLD BOYS' GRATITUDE.

Then my old boys in Canada (in spite of the great depression there) have sent as their New Year's Gift the truly noble sum of £294 8s. 10d. (£34 increase on last year)—making £1457 these dear fellows have voluntarily contributed in the last seven years to mark their attachment to their old Home.

OUR ROLL OF HONOUR.

Further, we are adding eighteen more names to our Roll of Honour in the school-room here—boys who have spontaneously repaid the £10 spent on their emigration "to help another poor fellow out." This is the largest number we have ever put on in one year. The next largest was twelve in 1893.

FEEDING THE HUNGRY.

Again, by the liberality of my Christian friends, I have had the joy lately of distributing no less than £625 in coals, bread, groceries, etc., to the deserving poor, searched out in their own homes. At the services preceding the distributions many we know were led to Christ, and are now confessing Him as their Saviour and Lord. More than twenty who received relief died within a fortnight, and others have passed away since.

A GREAT PERPLEXITY.

But I am in great perplexity amidst all these encouragements. In a few weeks I shall need £1000 to despatch our next party to Canada, and we require £500 at once to extend our printing department, lay down new machinery, and add to our stock of type, etc., to keep pace with the orders pouring in upon us. We must either enlarge our plant and employ more boys at this trade, or we must turn work away. We have only been able to struggle on this winter through the self-sacrificing devotion of an "old boy," who is our Master Printer, and, as a labour of love, has worked late night after night. It is not fair to him or his wife and little ones to let him continue under this strain any longer. What am I to do?

MORE OLD BOYS' GRATITUDE.

A few weeks ago some of our "old boys" in London (mostly printers) entertained all the officials and boys here and the little fellows from Greenwich to a splendid dinner, and handed me a purse of £20 towards the support of the old Home. As I sat and listened to their reminiscences, recalled the plight they were in when they came under our care, and saw them fine, self-reliant, intelligent, industrious men, I felt what a grand boon it is to a poor boy to take him out of the gutter, save him—it may be—from the gaol, and send him out into life with a skilled trade at his fingers' ends in which he takes an honest pride. No wonder I am grieved, as I think that we could double our printing trade and double the number of boys under instruction at it if only we had £500 for immediate extension.

WILL YOU?

Is there not a business man whom God has graciously prospered who can remember when he was hampered by want of capital to extend a growing business who will send us £500 as "A thank offering"? Is there not someone who, it may be, "in lieu of a legacy," or as "an In Memoriam Gift," will give this £500 as an endowment of the most useful and profitable character?

THE LATE MISS PEEK.

It is to the prescience of a Christian lady (the late Miss Elizabeth Peek), who was "a succourer of many, and of myself also," that we are indebted for the establishment of this industry. Will not some lady with womanly sympathy and intuition follow her example, and by a generous gift put many poor boys in years to come in the way of honourable self-support, and provide a source of substantial support year by year for our Homes, by the development of a profitable industry?

TIME PRESSES—NO ALTERNATIVE.

I cannot in this dilemma turn to any of my own friends for substantial help. They have so freely helped me already, that, sturdy beggar as I am thought to be, my mouth is closed. I have conferred with my Friends in Council, and they have not been able to suggest any way to meet this emergency. They see it would be a thousand pities to have to refuse remunerative business, and to shut poor boys off from the chance of learning the trade, but time presses. There is no alternative. In a few weeks we must either have an enlarged plant or decline further large orders offered to us.

THE EFFICACY OF PRAYER.

Personally, I can do nothing in the matter but write these faltering lines, and turn to the Lord and wait upon Him to appear in his own way and time for our deliverance. Will all who have proved the efficacy of prayer join me in spreading this matter before God day by day? Surely He will hear and give a speedy answer, for He will know that "the king's business required haste."

OUR HIVING OFF.

In a few weeks we ought to be sending our 100 boys off to the comfortable homesteads waiting to welcome them in the Far West. Would not some like to have the joy in their own life-time of devoting £500 or £200 to give fifty or twenty bright, well-trained boys a good start in life? Will not some provide for five, or three, or one? Each boy's passage and outfit cost only £10.

WHAT AN INVESTMENT!

For £10 a precious young life may be saved from all the contaminations of slum-life, from the desperate struggle for bread in an overcrowded land, from the fierce temptations (often acting upon hereditary predispositions) developed by enforced idleness and bitter want, and be transplanted in the natural, healthy, self-reliant, encouraging environment of a prosperous farmhouse, to breathe the prairie air, strengthen a youthful frame, and under the stimulus of liberal remuneration find a pleasure in toil.

AN OLD BOY'S MESSAGE.

"I am earning," writes a Roll of Honour boy whom we sent out nearly six years ago, "165 dollars a year, so that I can put 120 dollars in the bank every year, and I am glad to tell you that I have saved over £93 already, so that is a proof that Canada is the best place for a young man to get along, if he is careful and works well."

ONLY TWO BOYS PAID FOR YET.

We cannot send any boys this year till we have the money actually in hand. We can only send as many boys as the gifts of the Lord's people may provide for. I am quite clear that in my present state of health I am not justified in incurring a responsibility that may weigh upon my mind or upon those who may be called to take my place, all the summer. At present we have only two boys paid for out of the one hundred we are anxious to send.

"EXCEEDING ABUNDANTLY."

I am not despondent, however. "I will trust and not be afraid." When I asked £100 for "our little jolly boys" I thought my plea had missed fire at first, but I kept clinging to the Lord, and first came £100 from a new friend in Ireland and then £100 from an unknown friend in Edinburgh, so that I was able to do far more than I ever expected to make our little fellows comfortable for the winter, and put their home into nice order. The promises still hold good. "Jesus saith unto them, Believe ye that I am able to do this? They said unto Him, Yea, Lord." (Matt. ix. 28.) Amen.

THE SILVER GOBLET.

Some few weeks ago an elderly Christian gentleman came to see me. He told me how God had used a sudden reverse in fortune to the salvation of his soul. But though so reduced in circumstances he had found a joy in Christ above all circumstances (Hab. iii. 17, 18), and was happier than ever he had been in days of affluence. With tears in his eyes he produced a silver goblet with an inscription testifying a widow's gratitude for loving care bestowed upon her dying husband in a foreign land. "It was my dear father's," he said, "I have always valued it for his sake, but I cannot withhold it from the Lord's treasury any longer." It weighed about 40oz., and he thought we might get 3s. per ounce for it thus realising about £6. However, on submitting it to Messrs. Spink and Sons, they valued it at 7s. per ounce, and gave us a cheque for £14. "With such sacrifices God is well pleased." (Heb. xiii. 16.)

AN OFFERING TO THE LORD.

Surely there are jewels, gold and silver, which cannot any longer fascinate the heart or give the gratifying sense of proud possession they once did, but which, brought to the Master's feet, would be to God "a sweet savour of Christ," and a benediction to the heart that laid them there. "Whosoever is of a willing heart let him bring it an offering to the Lord—gold and silver and brass." "And they came every one whose heart stirred him up, and every one whom his spirit made willing, and they brought the Lord's offering to the work." (Ex. xxxv. 5, 21.) "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ that though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor that ye through his poverty might be rich." (2 Cor. viii. 9.)

FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED.

Contributions towards General Fund, Conference Hall, Prison Mission, Prisoners' Christmas Letter Branch, Princess Mary Village Homes, Palestine and Lebanon Nurses' Mission, to be made payable to Mrs. Meredith.

STARVING & SICK POOR.

The Committee of Management of the London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission are giving help in various ways to the very needy, through Clergymen, Ministers, City Missionaries, District Visitors, etc., by means of its system of relief tickets for Coal, Meat, Bread, Provisions, Grocery, Lodgings, and Cocoa and Bread. These are available all over the Metropolis. In addition large quantities of Clothing are distributed in the East-end of London, and elsewhere, by the Sub-Committee, Rev. W. Cuff, Rev. Samuel Hester, Mr. George Nokes, and in various other ways. Free breakfasts and dinners for children, and free soup dinners to the unemployed, are distributed daily in large numbers, and many sick ones are sent to the Society's Black Rocks Convalescent Home, Sandgate, which accommodates over 200 patients. Donations are urgently needed, and will be gratefully received by the Chairman of the Committee (Rev. Wm. Cuff), or by the Manager, Mr. John James Jones, at the Offices, 98, High-street, Homerton, London, N.E.; or may be sent to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.

Bankers: London and County Bank, Hackney, London, N.E.

MRS. HILTON'S
CRÈCHE, INFANT INFIRMARY, & ORPHAN HOME,
12, 14, & 16, Stepney Causeway, Commercial Rd., E.
Convalescent Home, The Limes, Feltham.

The Crèche is situated in a densely populated part of East London, and for 24 years has helped thousands of poor mothers, babies, and children.

In a time of great need we appeal to readers of The Christian, who have so often helped us, for special contributions. All communications should be addressed to Mrs. Hilton, Shore House, Shore-rd., South Hackney.

The 24th Anniversary of the Crèche was celebrated February 24th.

* The new report is ready, and will be gladly forwarded on application.

THE CHILDREN'S CRY!

Our Mission at Bow Common is in the midst of the poor little child match-box makers, about whom a writer says: "In many cases the lives of these children is a veritable slavery. They are set to work, and girls of six and seven are kept at it till past midnight. Sometimes I've said to the mothers, 'Oh, let the poor heavy-eyed lamb go to bed, and I'll take her place for a bit.' Free meals and other help is given, to continue which contributions would be gratefully received by Mrs. F. A. Bevan, 59, Prince's Gate, S.W.; or the Director, N.E. London Gospel Missions, William Chorley, 6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, London, N.; or may be sent to the Office of The Christian. Parcels to Mrs. Davis, 205, Devon's-road, Bow Common, E.

HUNGRY, COLD, STARVING!

And the Sick, and poor Hungry Children.

We desire to aid these.

Will the Readers of THE CHRISTIAN send Help to the Working Men's Mission, Collingwood Street, New Cut; or to F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or to T. and J. Young, 33, Nelson-square, Blackfriars-road, S.E.

CONSUMPTION,
AND
ALL CHEST DISEASES.

CORRESPONDENCE with a CLERGYMAN'S DAUGHTER at TUNBRIDGE WELLS.

"Dear Mrs. P., I want you to ask your father if I might have some of his wonderful medicine at 'charity' price, as supplied to my sister. The effect of it is so wonderful, and the demand for it so large, I should feel grateful to have it. I met a young woman in the train who was sadly troubled about her husband. I went and saw him, and found him very ill. He has had several bottles from me, and is getting very much better. . . ."—Jan. 22nd, 1895.

Note.—The father and sister of this lady had long used the medicine, and were supplied by me at "charity price," as named by her. A large case of medicine was sent to her; in response to which she writes:—

"Dear Mr. Congreve,—Many thanks for the supply of your medicine, and the liberal response to my request. It is an invaluable help. I trust, with God's blessing, it will be of great use as heretofore."

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S work on CONSUMPTION, &c., in which are detailed THE CAUSES, SYMPTOMS, PROGRESS, AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT of this SCOURGE OF ENGLAND.—WITH NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED CASES OF CURE. ALSO ON COUGH, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c., &c. The Book will be sent, post free, for ONE SHILLING by the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

RESCUE HOME
(Late Asylum), Harrow-road, W.

Founded by Rev. Thomas Scott, the Commentator, in 1787.

Thousands of fallen and friendless women have been sheltered and placed out in service. FUNDS ARE URGENTLY REQUIRED, ESPECIALLY ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Treasurers—Lord Kinnaird, 1, Pall-mall East, and J. F. W. Deacon, Esq., 20, Birchin-lane, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, or the Secretary will be thankful to receive contributions. c4702

SICK CHILDREN'S AND INVALIDS' DINNER TABLES, 77, Church-street, Lisson-grove, N.W.—Nearly 2000 dinners of fresh roast meat were partaken of last year by groups of invalids and weakly poor whose strength had failed, owing to illness and want of good nourishing food. Tickets for these dinners were given by subscribers or friends who visited amongst the poor, and dinners were served four days in the week. We want your assistance to carry on this work, which is so much needed, and any contributions will be gladly acknowledged by the Matron, 77, Church-street, or by the Lady Superintendent, and Treasurer, at 52, Montagu-square, Hyde Park, W. c4612

THE THEATRICAL MISSION AND INSTITUTE, Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.—The Nineteenth Annual Meeting will (D.V.) be held at the Institute on Thursday, April 4, 1895, when the chair will be taken at 3.30 by the Rev. Canon Wilberforce, supported by Rev. Prebendary Barker, Rev. H. G. Rosedale, Joseph Peters, Esq., Dr. Norman Kerr, Colonel Griffin, and others. Mrs. Martin Harvey will sing two solos. Admission free. c4881

NOW READY. Cloth Gilt, 2/6.

A NEW WORK BY

ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D.

Uniform with "The Heart of the Gospel," "The Heights of the Gospel," and "Evangelistic Work," entitled—

"LIFE-POWER";

OR, CHARACTER, CULTURE, & CONDUCT.

"A happy book, dealing in Dr. Pierson's best vein with such themes as 'The Elements and Secrets of Power,' 'The Power of a Presiding Purpose,' 'The Use and Abuse of Books,' 'The Genius of Industry,' 'The Ethics of Amusement,' and 'The Inspiration of Ideals.' The style is natural, easy, and sympathetic, while the marks of wide reading are on every page. Throughout the work the writer thinks in the sunlight—which is enough to say that this handsomely-got-up book is bound to stimulate both old and young."—The Presbyterian.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL

To the Public Schools and Royal Navy, for Gentlemen's Sons, aged 8 to 14.

The Old Hall, Wellington, Shropshire.

(Founded 1845.) Very healthily situated, 370 feet above the sea, near the Wrekin. 3½ hours from London, by L. & N.W. or G.W.R. Beautiful grounds, playing fields, &c. Illustrated Prospectus on application to the Head Master, G. E. W. Cranage, M.A. (Shrewsbury School and Trinity College, Oxford); or Haddon's Advertising Offices, Salisbury-square, E.C. 4956

MANY CHRISTIAN PARENTS who at the present time are seeking a school at which to place their sons, are invited to write to the under-mentioned, who is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, where the constant aim of the principal is to train those committed to his care in the fear of the Lord; and by the power of Gospel teaching maintain a Christian tone among the boys, combining this with a thorough and first-class education.

The premises are advantageously situated upon HIGH GROUND NEAR and WITH VIEWS OF THE SEA on the south coast, a short run from London, and afford especial facilities for outdoor recreation.

Notes and Comments.

WE would again remind our readers that it is proposed to hold meetings for Thanksgiving and Prayer in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, E., on Wednesday, May 1. We are thankful to note, from letters received, that a spirit of expectancy prevails among many Christian workers.

The reasonable state of mind does not appear to have been reached in the Midlands yet, either among men or masters. More contention and more suffering will have to be gone through before the industrial struggle ends. Mediation is at present impossible. Meanwhile the struggle between China and Japan appears to be entering upon a more hopeful phase. China, having at last taken the war seriously, and having admitted that she has been worsted, has sent her greatest man to make peace. There is much about Li Hung Chang to encourage the hope that he will succeed in his mission, and save his country from further loss. She has had a rude awakening, and will perhaps arise from her sleepy self-contentment.

"The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty." There are dark places yet, and they are full of cruelty. Take what Dr. S. L. Hinde, a member of the Congo Medical Service, says of some parts he has visited. A representative of The Westminster Gazette asked him :—

"Is cannibalism still very prevalent in the districts you visited?" "Yes, in many of them. At N'Gandu, the headquarters of Congo Lutete, we found that chief had gathered together about 10,000 cannibal brigands, mostly of the Batatela race. Through the whole of the Batatela country and from the Lurimbi northwards, for some four days' march, one sees, as I said at the Royal Geographical Society, neither grey hairs, nor halt, nor blind. Even parents are eaten by their children on the first sign of approaching decrepitude. N'Gandu, I may tell you, is approached by a very handsome pavement of human skulls, the top being the only part showing above ground. I counted more than a thousand skulls in the pavement of one gate alone. Almost every tree forming the boma, or fortification, was crowned with a human skull."

Dr. Hinde adds horror to horror as he proceeds with his story.

The same paper which contains these statements, gives the report of Captain Maloney, who has just returned from the Niger. His story is :—

The Brass natives on their return took with them about 100 prisoners, bound down in their canoes. All of these, it is believed, were tortured and killed, and in some cases eaten. A scene of a shocking kind was witnessed at Brass, when the natives, headed by King Koka, who had led the attack, returned to their town. It is related on the authority of French missionaries that the religious festival of "Ju Ju" was held. Some of the participators in this ghastly rite suspended around their bodies the limbs of the slain, and danced until exhaustion rendered them incapable of further exertion.

If we wait for evolution to lift these poor people up, we shall wait for ever. In a generation the Gospel has changed savages quite as fierce, and can change them. Some Moffat or Mackay is wanted in these dark places.

The tales of outrage from Armenia are if anything worse than those from Africa. The correspondent of The Daily News has heard from a Turkish soldier a very full report of scenes in which he took part, and his words only too fully confirm all that has been alleged. Without following him in detail, we give one or two of his replies.

"I then overheard his own friend say, 'And how many did you kill?' And he whispered back, 'God knows. It may have been five. It may have been seven. What could I do? I had my orders.' This was not said to me, and was not even meant for my ears.

"Asked whether many children were among the slaughtered, he replied that 'the soldiers raised infants on their bayonets as one lifts the sheaves of corn on the pitchfork, and flung them thus into the ravine as one tosses hay on to the wagon.'

"Asked whether the soldiers liked this hideous work, he groaned and rolled his head from side to side for a while before replying. Finally he said, with a despairing shrug of the shoulders, 'We were soldiers; what could we do?' He added that if any of them hung back the Bey menaced them with his sword and revolver. He gave thanks to God, he said, that he had himself killed no children."

Although he acted under "orders," his conscience gives him no rest; human orders cannot cancel Divine commands. He was under the orders of a certain Bey who is a Cretan. Are the Cretans the same as in Paul's days?

Whatever the faults of English rule in India, we have always had some wise and noble men there. One of them is Sir John Adye, who has said a few things in his "Recollections of a Military Life," which we shall do well to lay to heart :—

We hear a great deal nowadays of the depreciation of the rupee, but in our government of India, unless we act on the principles which I have endeavoured to illustrate, we may find in the days to come that we have a far more dangerous result to face, and that is the depreciation in the character of the millions under our rule....It is often said that India has been won by the sword, and must be governed by the sword. The first statement is to a great measure true; but to the second, as laying down a principle of government, I demur. No nation can be permanently or successfully governed by the sword.

This brings us to the Christian position. The safety of a nation depends on the character of its men and women, and purity and strength of character are best promoted by the Gospel.

If Rev. Harry C. Vrooman gives a fair account in The Arena of the habit of a large number of American women, there is cause for much shame. A sporting man of thorough information on the subject informed him that "women are the main support, directly and indirectly, of the race track business. Large numbers of women bet and sink thousands of dollars annually on the track. They buy up the jockeys for money or special favours to trick the race in their favour. Sometimes it is a success, oftener not." Some of these women belong to families of respectability and social position. Some who have had little to do have been sent to this gambling by their physicians "to relieve their ennui and its consequent dyspepsia and other ills." They are peculiarly superstitious. Many gamblers in Chicago, particularly women, systematically consult mediums regarding their chances, and blindly follow all they are told." The links of sin are plain—idleness, excitement, gambling, and fortune-telling.

In England our great religious danger, if we could only see it, is in our day schools. The Roman Church and the High Church clergyman are vigilant and unwearied in endeavouring to get every one of them under their power. We are creating a State endowment of the most costly and most dangerous kind for the Church which Englishmen thought they had for ever disposed of. Public elementary State-aided schools should be under public control, not under that of any Church alone. As an illustration of the proselytising which is done with public money, take this instance :—

In a certain London suburb there were two chapels adjacent. One was Roman Catholic, the other Methodist. The former had a day school. In fifteen years the Roman Catholic trained up a congregation of the "faithful," many of whom began life as infantile Protestants. The Methodist cause was when I last heard of it "still struggling."

Here is another example of what is going on :—

In a certain town 500 children attended a British school. The school was closed. The 500 were swept into Anglican and Roman Catholic schools, in which provision was made to keep out a School Board.

The protection, so far as it goes, against this sort of proselytising is the conscience clause; but a labourer who is dependent on his master, and a tradesman who is dependent on his customers, is shy at claiming it. Even when claimed, the child has to stand against the spirit and tone of the whole school. A new generation of Englishmen and Englishwomen is being made—of what?

While we are protesting against the children of the poor being perverted in Romanising schools, we should not forget that some Protestant parents in good circumstances voluntarily send their children to Roman Catholic Schools, hoping or believing that they will get no religious harm. Pity but all such credulous persons could see the testimony which Rev. R. H. Moreton, of Oporto, sends to The Methodist Recorder :—

I wish some of these over-credulous mothers would come and live in Portugal, where we have anything but full religious liberty, and yet convents were doomed to extinction more than sixty years ago, and have not been legally re-established. It is true that groups of nuns have started schools, as they call them, in many parts; but the popular feeling against them is such that their windows have been repeatedly smashed in Oporto, and Roman Catholic parents have again and again applied to me for education for their children, assuring me that they would rather let them run in the streets than hand them over to the Jesuits. The explanation of all this is, of course, that the Portuguese know the wiles of Rome, while English people, reposing in mistaken security and accustomed to truthfulness in their own dealings, are taken in by the honeyed words of official deceivers. These may seem strong words, but one born and brought up and spending forty years of his life in Romish countries may be supposed to know something of the "great conspiracy against the liberties of mankind."

Nor is it in Portugal alone that these things are true, but wherever Rome reigns.

With Romanists the authority of "The Church" is sufficient warrant for prayers for the dead. Ritualists defend the practice by quoting a curious passage in one of the less reputable books of the Apocrypha, and then fall back upon the statement that in the time of our Lord prayers for the dead were offered in the synagogues of the Jews. Hence it is reasoned that as Christ attended synagogue, and administered no specific rebuke, He sanctioned the practice. In the Church Intelligencer for February and March, Dr. C. H. Wright, of Liverpool, shows the utter worthlessness of these confident assertions. Taking point by point, he proves that prayers for the dead were unknown in Judaism at the beginning of the present era. Later on, with other accretions from Roman Catholicism, came this; and then a prayer for mourners, the Kaddish, was looked upon by the ignorant as an invocation of blessing upon departed friends.

Corea is a land of peculiar interest at the present time, and it is gratifying to know that during the past ten years vigorous evangelistic effort has been made in its borders by the Methodist Episcopal Church of America. Several of the missionaries are doctors, and the city of Seoul is the centre of many operations, in which native helpers have shown genuine devotion. The war between China and Japan has interfered with progress, but nevertheless the report is encouraging—medical, educational, and evangelistic. The Mission Press is a grand agency, and last year turned out nearly two million pages of printed matter, mostly in the form of tracts! We hope soon to hear of greater and better things from the Land of the Morning Calm.

Without the indwelling Spirit Christians have but "a name to live." The Spirit giveth life, to individuals and to churches. If this sanctifying, energising Guest is not ours, our lives will not be holy, and our efforts, however varied and unremitting, will be vain and fruitless. The late Dr. Gordon, in his valuable book just issued, THE MINISTRY OF THE SPIRIT (4s. Baptist Tract and Book Society) says of the work of the Spirit through the Church:—

So vital and indispensable is the ministry of the Spirit that without it nothing else will avail. Some trust in creeds, and some in ordinances; some suppose that the Church's security lies in a sound theology, and others locate it in a primitive simplicity of government and worship; but it lies in none of these, desirable as they are. The body may be as to its organs perfect and entire, wanting nothing; but simply because the Spirit has been withdrawn from it, it has passed from a church into a corpse.

This is a grievous condition of things, against which all need to guard. To fear the mere possibility were sad enough; to mourn the actual calamity, should drive us to sincere humiliation and earnest prayer.

This subject of the Holy Spirit is of vital moment. God's great power is exerted by the Spirit, which can use the weakest of human agencies. Dr. Gordon pertinently says:—

Our generation is rapidly losing its grip upon the supernatural; and as a consequence the pulpit is rapidly dropping to the level of the platform. And this decline is due, we believe, more than anything else, to an ignoring of the Holy Spirit as the supreme inspirer of preaching. We wish to see a great orator in the pulpit, forgetting that the least expounder of the Word, when filled with the Holy Spirit, is greater than he. We want the Gospel, forsooth; but in the strenuous demand that it be set forth according to the "spirit of the age," we ignore the supremacy of the "Spirit of God." And the method of discourse soon tells upon the matter. We cannot very long have the truth in the pulpit after we have lost "the Spirit of Truth" therefrom. "When one possesses not the whole of life," says Vinet, "he possesses not the whole of truth."

God's Spirit is life indeed, and power supreme. In proportion as the Spirit guides and controls Christians and churches, there will be manifestations of faith, virtue, and godliness. With these abounding in the Church, there would be spiritual concern among worldlings, and other tokens of the revival for which we have so long been praying.

One advantage of the smallness of the early churches was that they could be minutely looked after, every member could be particularly cared for. "Ye know," says Paul to the Thessalonians, "how we dealt with each one of you, as a father with his own children, exhorting you, and encouraging you, and testifying, to the end that ye should walk worthily of God." As a parent tries to adapt his words to the peculiarities of each child, so does the wise teacher seek to do it to each follower of the Saviour who forms his charge. We have nothing to say against the large and numerous fellowships which are to be found in some cities, and which may enjoy an amount of supervision not always given to smaller places, but still, on the whole, the fellowship of moderate size ought to have the fullest and most particular attention. "As a father with his own children." That is the model to be aimed at.

Those who glory in Christ cannot but be impressed with the personality of Moses. The Gospel associates the two: "The law came by Moses; grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." Modern thought has done much, on the one hand to obscure the Law-giver, and on the other to qualify the authority of the Saviour. It is time that a halt was called, in the interest of logical and Christian consistency. There is a note of such a halt in the March issue of The Biblical World, of Chicago, edited by President W. R. Harper, who is by no means of the "narrow" school of theologians. With evident truthfulness it is written in the article referred to:—

Cut off Moses, and Israelitish history, if we may compare it to the human body, has lost its head. Take away Moses, and Israelitish history, if the comparison be that of a structure, is a structure without foundation. With Moses removed, Israelitish history, if it is viewed as simple history, is history without a beginning.

Hence it is forcibly maintained that Moses must continue to occupy the place of prominence which has always been accorded him.

But no Christian regards Moses alone; he is "the Man of God" who spoke of the Greater Prophet which was in the future to be manifested. So President Harper writes:—

If Moses and his work form the basis of the structure which culminates in the Christ; if the institutions of Moses each and every one point forward to the coming of this Christ; if the prophetic order established by Moses had for its chief work the preparation of Israel, and through Israel the world, for the coming of the Christ; if the royal order of Israel provided for by Moses was to represent in song and in history the great king of David's line, whose throne should be eternal—how can we satisfy ourselves with a purely naturalistic explanation? If the Divine hand had to do with anything in this development towards Christianity, must it not have dealt with the times of Moses, must it not have shared in the work of Moses?

The answer to these questions is one and emphatic. The Gospel presupposes the Law, and Christ presupposes Moses. If we reject Moses and the Prophets, we shall be in danger of letting Christ go also. As by faith we live unto God, we shall enter into the aspirations of Moses, the Servant of God, as well as share the love of Christ, the Son of God (Heb. iii. 5, 6).

The plan of publicly naming companies and employers who do not pay their employés a sufficient wage, or treat them with sufficient care, seems to be coming into vogue, at least in London. Provided every statement is verified, and the exposure is made with a pure desire to see the right done, it cannot fail to do good. London is a great place, in which firms may do almost as they like, and in which the insignificant human units who toil for them are unknown. If, therefore, the Press can take the place of that inquisitive and active public opinion which operates in provincial towns, it will be a good thing for both employers and employed and the public generally. Light, more light, is what we want.

Of all the manifold operations carried on by the Salvation Army none claims our sympathetic interest more than the rescue work of the Social Wing. We would earnestly commend to our readers Mrs. Bramwell Booth's report recently issued, and entitled "Broken Fetters." Copies may be had from 259, Mare-street, Hackney, N.E. The saddening and yet in some respects gladdening details are not such as we can transfer to these columns, but we hope many readers will peruse and pray over the pages of this report; if they do they will certainly bid God-speed to such a Christ-like endeavour.

AMONG NORTH PACIFIC INDIANS.

DR. V. ARDAGH, of Metlahkatlah, in a letter appearing in Missionary Leaves for March, says:—Some of our young men of musical talent have now taken charge of the music and singing in the church, and I am very glad of it, for there is nothing they like so much, and in which they are so forward, as music. This winter the hospital has become the head of the mission here, the doctor being left in charge, in the absence of the Bishop and Rev. W. Hogan; so that my duties are rather various and somewhat numerous, from attending to the in patients, visiting the sick, road-making, repairing fences and houses, taking Sunday-schools, preaching in the church in both English and Tsimshean, and Bible-classes. I am glad to say that I think, on the whole, though the bad ones are still very hard to deal with, the village is taking more interest in God's Word, and seems anxious to go ahead, not only in civilisation, but in further knowledge of spiritual things and purer life.

Rev. R. W. Gurd, of Kitkatlah, writes:—When I tell you that every Indian has some five or six dogs, you can imagine what a number of dogs there are in a village of three hundred inhabitants. They are very treacherous, great thieves, and tremendous howlers. It is unsafe to go along the village after sunset unless you are well protected, either with stick or gun. The people are a very difficult tribe to manage; but I notice a striking change for the better. They have emerged out of darkness, and are now struggling in the light. At all hours of the day and night they come with Scriptural questions—some difficult for theologians to solve, some easy and practical. It is nothing unusual for Mrs. Gurd to be instructing Indian women as late as eleven o'clock at night, whilst I am in another room with several men. We dare not turn them away, because we think they are sincere searchers after truth, although we advise them to come earlier in the day.

I need scarcely say they have little or no idea of time. Then they have no regular occupation during the winter months. In the summer they work very hard, and nearly earn sufficient to keep them through the winter. There is no employment for them in the winter, and so they have too much time on their hands. Mrs. Gurd and I take charge of the day school, which keeps us occupied for four and a half hours per diem. Every evening we have either service in the church or Bible-classes, which keep us employed until very late. There are nineteen under instruction previous to their admittance by baptism into the Church. When these are baptised, the whole village will be nominally Christian. The people come to me with every little quarrel, between husband and wife, lovers, and neighbours. At times these are trifling, at others perplexing. As there is no doctor within forty-five miles, I have to act as medical man, which entails much work, but affords opportunities of speaking into their ears words of comfort or warning.

THE UNVEILING.—12.

FOUR LEADING SYMBOLS.

At this stage it will be helpful to pause and consider more definitely the significance of the leading symbols — the Roll, the Seals, the Trumpets, and the Bowls, and their relation to each other.

THE ROLL.

What a letter is to a friend; what his written instructions are to a traveller, or an ambassador; what, in a word, the Old Testament Scriptures were to the early Church—that the roll whose seven seals no one in heaven or earth was worthy to unloose, was to John who wept and to the angels who stood around the throne. If we said the Roll was the Holy Scriptures we should not be very far astray. For the Apocalypse, the Revelation, the Unveiling, is nothing more than the bringing to light of the hidden things that the Eternal Wisdom, the only wise God, our Saviour, had written there. For Luther's saying is profoundly true, "There is only one book [one roll], the Bible; only one Person, Jesus Christ."

He, after his resurrection, had opened the understanding of his disciples, to understand the Scriptures, and had expounded to them, in Moses and the Prophets and the Psalms, the things concerning Himself. Just as in the beginning of his ministry He had taught them the mysteries of the Kingdom of heaven, and asked them, "Have ye understood all these things?" "Yea, Lord." Yes, like Ezekiel up to his ankles in the mystic waters, but finding at last that they were waters to swim in, a river that could not be passed over. So, when He had opened their understandings, there was still need of this Unveiling, as there is to us the perpetual need of the revealing Spirit.

The whole New Testament is an unveiling of the Old. There is nothing opened in the New which was not hidden there. And the last book of the New is the completed unveiling of the Old.

THE SEVEN SEALS.

A seal answers many purposes. There are the seals of office; the seal of ownership; the seal of a covenant; the seal of authentication; the seal of secrecy. None of these are absent from the seals of this roll of God; but secrecy, intensified and emphasized by the number seven, and by the word used, which signifies firmly-sealed, is the leading thought. The unsealed roll utters things which have been kept secret since the foundation of the world.

The opened seals do not express the infliction of judgment: they reveal the secret things. Even the sixth seal does not bring us to the great day of his wrath, but only to the terrified cry of the conscience-stricken dwellers on the earth.

THE TRUMPETS AND THE BOWLS.

The sounding of the Trumpets gives the signal for partial punishment, peradventure the sinners will hear the rod and Him who hath appointed it.

The pouring out of the Bowls shows that the chastening has been unheeded and that wrath is come to the uttermost.

The history of the Babylonish Empire may illustrate the process. In Daniel iv. Nebuchadnezzar's dream, interpreted by the prophet, is as the opening of the Seal, informing him of the future which awaits him. The proud utterance is followed by the threatened penalty, yet his kingdom is preserved and restored to him. But when Belshazzar and his lords and wives and concubines drank idolatrous wine from the golden vessels of God's Temple, though he knew all that had happened to Nebuchadnezzar, wrath came upon him to the uttermost. "In that night was Belshazzar the king of the Chaldeans slain, and Darius the Median took the kingdom."

The dream with the interpretation was the opening of the Seal; the seven times among the beasts was the sounding of the Trumpet; the Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin, was the pouring out of the Bowl.

THE SEVENTH SEAL OPENED.

The seventh Seal being opened reveals the method of God's righteous government, in relation to the conditions disclosed by the opening of the previous Seals, the chastisement of the seven Trumpets, and the wrath without measure of the seven Bowls.

When this last Seal was opened by the Lamb as it had been slain, there was silence in heaven as it were half an hour. For God has no pleasure in the death of him that dieth. He does not afflict willingly nor grieve the children of men. A solemn silence pervades the court before the Judge pronounces judgment. How this dignified judicial calm in heaven contrasts with the prejudiced and passionate haste with which the Lamb had been hurried to his death on earth; with the impatient hatred of the priests, who cried, "What need we any further witness?" and with the timorous vacillation of the governor, who washed his hands of his blood, yet delivered Jesus to their will.

Silence for half an hour would prevent many of our own unjust or extreme judgments, whether expressed by tongue or executed by hand.

The same judicial deliberateness marks the whole procedure. The Trumpets are given to the angels who stand in the presence of God, and they prepare themselves to sound (2, 6).

Oh the madness of those who dwell upon the earth. During the awful stillness in heaven which precedes the judgment to come, they are as men "watching the antics of an ape with a buffoon."

> But mortal pleasure, what art thou, in sooth?
> The torrent's smoothness ere it dash below.

THE INTERCESSOR.

The Angel who stands at the altar, and in his censer of gold presents the prayers of saints upon the golden altar which is before the throne, is, or represents, our Great High Priest. And the answers to the prayers of the saints on earth are thunderings and lightnings and voices and earthquake. "By terrible things in righteousness wilt thou answer us, O God of our salvation." It is not that the saints pray for terrible things to those who dwell upon the earth, but when prayer goes up from a world where wrong is rampant, how otherwise can the righteous God answer prayer?

The opening of the Seals revealed to us the rejection of the Gospel of the grace of God; the oppression of the saints; the terror of the panic-stricken dwellers upon earth—a drama continually rehearsed in individual and family life, as well as being enacted upon the great scale of the nations through the centuries.

The sounding of the Trumpets shows (the constitution of the moral universe being what it is) how rebellion is met by its appropriate penalty, corrective and reformative, if the sinner, when God's judgments are abroad on the earth, will learn righteousness.

Like Pharaoh, men have rejected the messengers of God, the ambassadors of Christ, and when the first Trumpet sounded John saw that it was followed by hail and fire, mingled with blood, which were three of the chief plagues on Egypt, and symbolize and summarize the judgments of God throughout the ages.

THE FIRST TRUMPET.

They had rejected the only-begotten Son of God, on whom the great hail-stones of judgment had been cast down from heaven (whereof the appalling record of Josh. x. 10-14 was but a feeble and dim foreshadowing), when Jehovah, the Judge of all the earth, was wroth as in the valley of Gibeon, that He might do his work his strange work, and bring to pass his act his strange act—that act so apparently foreign to his nature and his character—of smiting the Good Shepherd; of awaking the sword against the Man that is his Fellow; of slaying the righteous instead of the wicked; of fighting for Israel, by fighting against the King of Israel, whom He had by eternal purpose and decree set upon his holy hill of Zion. They had contemned and condemned the sure foundation Stone, on whom had fallen the hail which swept away the refuge of lies, when God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, condemned sin in the flesh (Isa. xxviii., Psa. ii.; Rom. viii.).

They had rejected the Sin-offering of God manifested in flesh (of which the sin-offering consumed with devouring fire without the camp was but a weak and far-away type). They had despised Him

> On whom the ten-fold vengeance fell,
> That would have sunk a world to hell.

They had counted a common and unholy thing the precious blood which was mingled with that hail and that fire of judgment. They had "wantoned in the wounds of God." His elect people, the seed of Abraham his friend, had cried "His blood be on us and on our children!" and to shed the blood of God's holy and anointed child and servant Jesus, the Gentiles and the people of Israel were gathered together.

Wherefore at the sound of the first Trumpet hail and fire mingled with blood were cast upon the earth. Men must suffer in themselves the judgments which Jesus suffered for them, but whom they reject. The history of the Christian era has been written in hail and fire mingled with blood. Yet judgment has been tempered with mercy, for while all the green grass was seen in the vision to be burnt up, only the third part of the trees was burnt up.

"With measure-by-measure, when Thou puttest her away, wilt Thou contend with her. He sighed with his rough breath in the day of east wind."—Heb. With seah-seah. A seah, being the third part of an ephah, was a moderate measure. With forbearance and graduated severity—dealing out punishment in carefully adjusted quantities, and at successive times—"not suffering thy whole displeasure to arise," "correcting with judgment, not in anger."

When He sent his hot and stormy desert-blast on Israel, amidst the rough and stern severity which He breathed into the tempest, there was an undertone of sadness and grief, as of the mourning dove, or of one making lamentation—the Just One sighing as in meditation on his own necessary work of correction. —Dr. Kay on Isa. xxviii. 8, in Sp. Com.

THE SECOND TRUMPET.

The dwellers on the earth have refused the Kingdom of God, which is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, with the beatitudes of the Kingdom upon the poor in spirit, the mourning ones, the meek, the hungerers and thirsters after righteousness, the merciful, the pure in heart, the peacemakers, the persecuted for righteousness' sake; and at the sound of the second Trumpet as it were a great mountain of pride and self-assertion, self-will and selfishness, burning with hatred and malice and all uncharitableness, is cast into the sea of nations, and a third of the sea is turned into blood—the blood of war, of murder, of persecution, and all the ways in which man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn. Zechariah asks, "Who art thou, O great mountain?" The ultimate answer is, "Satan." So St. Cyril—"The words seem all but to rebuke the great mountain, i.e., Satan."

THE THIRD TRUMPET.

They have cast away from them the Meek and Lowly One with all the sweet and holy influences flowing from his divinely human life, his obedience unto death, his glorious resurrection, and his gracious teachings; and when the angel has sounded the third Trumpet, the great star, the bitter rebel, falls upon and embitters all the fountains and rivers of human life, so that all its amenities are turned into wormwood; all discovery and invention, all art and science, all labour-saving appliances, all social ameliorations, become impregnated with the bitterness of rebellion against God, and bitter envying and strife in competition with one another, where there might be, and would be if Christ were accepted, loving and mutually helpful co-operation. The great star, burning as it were a torch, is surely Lucifer, the light bearer, the son of the morning, fallen from his first and high estate—the light of heaven exchanged for a firebrand of hell.

THE FOURTH TRUMPET.

Men have hated the light and loved the darkness rather than the light, and at the sounding of the fourth Trumpet, the sources and reflectors of light are darkened; "the light is darkened in the heavens thereof"; "and if the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness."

The principle of all God's judgments is, "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." If we sow to the flesh, we reap corruption; if we sow to the Spirit, we reap life and peace. If the inhabiters of the earth, the men of the earth, who have their portion in this life, prefer Satan to Christ, then blood and bitterness and darkness follow.

These Trumpet judgments are distinguished from those under the Bowls by their partial character—only a third of the various elements is in each case affected; while under the latter wrath is poured out without measure.

Again: the first four Trumpets are distinguished from the three which follow by their affecting the environment of the dwellers on the earth, whereas the later three affect the persons, the consciences, the spirit and soul, as well as the body, of men themselves.

And this is very emphatically shown by the eagle flying in the mid-heaven, saying, "Woe, woe, woe, to those who dwell upon the earth, by reason of the voices of the trumpet of the three angels which are yet to sound." They have, therefore, been called the three Woe Trumpets, and they well deserve the name, for they represent the three ways in which under the wise and righteous government of God, sin is punished:—(1) Its punishment is contained within itself. (2) God punishes it in this world. (3) He judges it finally in the age to come. M.

RAILWAY SERVANTS AND DRINK.—The New York Independent says:—Most railroad companies have learned that the saloon is a bad resort for employés, and that trainmen or switchmen who have formed the drink habit are dangerous to the service. They are also learning that attention to the moral and religious welfare of their men pays in improved service and in greater safety. The Chesapeake and Ohio is one of the companies that have turned their attention to the needs of their men. It has had Young Men's Christian Association buildings erected at various points on its route. President Ingalls himself has given the movement his countenance, has aided in procuring books, sites, and the necessary fittings, and has encouraged the use of the conveniences by railroad men.

A Day of Fasting and Prayer.

Mr. Crosbie's recent article in The Christian has not yet received the attention and response required in order that definite action be taken by the Church of Christ. Most earnestly would I, as an Evangelical Churchman, commend the call of my Nonconformist brother to the consideration of the Lord's people. Surely, before God, "To us belong shame and confusion of face." Writing from another centre of industry, after some little experience as a mission preacher and resident minister, I am compelled to own that the need is great for real humiliation before God, and confession of sin. The Church of Christ is not the true witness for her rejected Lord He would have her be, and "power from on high" is not upon her collectively.

It is true that in a few cases outward prosperity is visible, such as large congregations and classes, but the worship of God or seeking the knowledge of His will, is not the sole reason why congregations assemble or classes meet. Musical services, popular preachers, P.S.A.s, attract large gatherings—one of the largest men's classes in Birmingham gathers every Sunday in my own church—but where is the power of God manifested in anything like what might be seen were we fit for God to use, and in a condition to be blessed? In this parish there are about 9000 souls; out of these there are not 150 who confess Christ at his table in this church, nor are there 100 more bonâ fide members of any Christian body. The bulk of the people are of the poor labouring class, and although the Salvation Army has been at work in this city for fifteen years, I know of but two active members in this neighbourhood. Hearers of the Word we all have, but where are the doers? Individual cases of conversion gladden our hearts, but where is the power of Pentecost, which turned the hearts of thousands and "the world upside down"?

Admitting the sovereignty of grace, are not God's children contented with little, and therefore have but little from Him? Are we not "limiting the Holy One"? Surely it is vain blinding our eyes to the real and increasing indifference to the truth that prevails. Frequenters of our churches can more frequently visit the theatre than the house of prayer; concerts and amusements can be crowded, and the week-night means of grace have the "twos and threes." Efforts of various kinds abound, but there is not the proportion of blessing as in former days; nor do missions, whether lay or clerical, take hold of men as they did twenty years ago.

Surely the Church of Christ needs to be in tears and sorrow before our God "travailing in birth." We ministers of his need breaking down before our Lord. Our Christian men and women need to be delivered from unbelief and coldness of heart. Christ's dear cause is not progressing, and the sin and fault is not the world's, but ours. The enemy is fearfully busy within and without the Church, and we are losing ground as a whole. Might I suggest that the committee of the Evangelical Alliance consider whether there is not an opportunity for such a day to be observed throughout the world? It has a connection with the world through its associates, and as the week of prayer has been a blessing, so might this special day prove another from our loving Father.

Let us only convince Him that we are mourning because of the few signs of His presence, that our souls are bowed down with grief because of our selfishness and worldliness, our negligence and cowardice, our sin and strife, our prayerlessness and unbelief, and He is good and gracious, full of compassion and mercy, and will not keep his anger for ever. To secure more than partial blessing there must be more than individual action, collective and united humiliation "by fasting and prayer" will bring blessing through the Church to the world. "The days will come when the Bridegroom shall be taken from them, and then shall they fast" (Matt. ix. 15). "As they ministered to the Lord and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me.....for the work" (Acts xiii. 2). J. O. West.

IN THE PALACE "BEAUTIFUL."

A happy converse, long drawn out
From hearts with holy fervour stirred;
When Thomas can no longer doubt,
Nor Peter disavow his Lord!
And oh! when Jesus spreads the board,
And we his welcome guests commune,
What peace his gracious words afford:
What grateful joys our hearts attune!

Blest hour, when faith her King beholds
Arrayed with vesture dipped in blood;
And He his bannered love unfolds
O'er all our fellowship with God!
Fair Elim on the desert road!
O welcome shade! O fountain sweet!
Where for a space we leave untrod
The sands that scorch our pilgrim feet!

With Prudence, Piety, and Love,
Our interviews, though all too brief,
Oh, how they wing our souls above
The murky clouds of unbelief!
And, as the springs of tender grief
Are touched as with his pierced hand,
The Lamb in all our thoughts is chief,
And Marah seems Immanuel's Land.

Blest inn, whose upper chamber, Peace,
Lies open to the dawn of day!
Here would we, till our journeys cease,
Our weariness on Jesus lay;
And when the shadows flee away,
And all our pilgrimage is past,
His love shall crown our homeward way,
With endless fellowship at last.

LIVERPOOL STRANGERS' REST.

The eighteenth annual meeting of subscribers and friends of the Liverpool Strangers' Rest was held on Friday last, under the presidency of Mr. R. J. Glasgow. The report stated that during the year 871 meetings had been held, about 5000 letters had been written, and 116 bags and parcels of books were given to sailors of eleven different nationalities. The premises in Park-lane were now greatly improved, which was highly appreciated by the sailors and emigrants who came in to read and write their letters.

The Chairman, in the course of a brief address, remarked upon the unique character of the institution, and upon the opportunity it offers to Christian workers; the Rest has no rival, so those who help it may throw themselves into the work with every hope of success. Rev. J. Barrow, who followed, said he was glad to find, from his long experience of the neighbourhood, that many persons had found a haven of rest at the Strangers' Rest. This part of Liverpool was becoming more and more populated every year with strangers, and they were therefore to be congratulated upon the splendid work that was being carried on by the institution.

Addresses were also delivered by Revs. R. Lewis and T. J. Madden, also by Messrs. T. F. Agnew, R. Heber Radcliffe, and T. A. Leigh.

LEEDS.—A large gathering assembled at St. Peter's Wesleyan Chapel on Sunday evening last, when Mr. J. B. Wookey spoke. The service was deeply solemn and impressive, and at the close a number came publicly forward seeking salvation.

NOTES FROM THE U.S.A.

By Mrs. MERRILL E. GATES.

"When a man dies, a world perishes with him; the world he carried in his brain," says Schopenhauer. When the news of Frederick Douglass's death flashed through the two nations which had fought the hydra of slavery, there perished a world of emotion, strong as the tides of life; a world of thought, vigorous, intense as the subject of human bondage could produce in a subtle, comprehensive brain; a world of action—self-sacrificing, fearless, effective, masterly action—without which, perhaps, the other forces working against American slavery would have proved futile. What a world of facts, feeling and volitions perished when we laid Frederick Douglass to rest, his human life-work done! What of uncompromising patience and bitter struggle he underwent no man can know. Only those who lived in the days of suppressed but tremendous feeling "before the war," can even imagine it. But the saviour of a race came from its bosom. He was born to set men free. And his conflict is ended.

The memory of what Frederick Douglass was to the anti-slavery cause leads us to contrast the needs of forty years ago with the needs of to-day, one of which is the rehabilitating of the ex-slave in all that pertains to a useful manhood. Nothing has conduced more to this upbuilding than the education which men of their own colour and others have diffused among them. Tuskegu, Ala., is one of the most forcible distributing centres of education for the masses. It is under the management of Mr. Booker T. Washington, a coloured gentleman of extraordinary ability. The fourth annual conference has just been held at Tuskegu, in the very heart of the Black Belt. The first day is given up to the negro farmers, who discuss crops, management, industry, etc. This year it was a very racy session.

The sentiment of the coloured people was that "their prosperity lay in hard work, strenuous savings, a variety of crops, and the buying of homes." Industry, education, and moral integrity, based on religion, are the hope for the masses in the Black Belt, as for humanity at large. One white planter was present at the conference; he spoke of its value, and allowed himself to be entertained at the institution. The speakers were both coloured and white, and represented our most philanthropic and most earnestly religious men.

The National Women's Council has recently closed after a session of two weeks. It is a confederation of the manifold societies conducted by women. The subjects were very numerous, each presented by the society devoted to its furtherance. The new president, Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, is a noble, attractive woman, already at the head of many good works. It is one of the signs of the times that Jewish ladies presented papers warmly commended by the press.

Mr. Hermann Warszawiak, whose work among the Jews in New York is arousing much interest, has the plans completed for a very handsome structure, to be erected at a cost of 100,000 dols, to be known as "Christ's Synagogue," erected to Jesus Messiah, the Lion of the Tribe of Judah.

The common ground of belief that we have with the Jews in the authority of the Old Scriptures, is our mutual meeting-place. To be better fitted to persuade them, we need a most intimate acquaintance with the Bible. We must be students, not so much of the Higher Criticism as of the text itself in a devotional spirit. We are and have been most admirably led in this by such men on this side of the water, as Mr. Moody, Dr. Arthur T. Pierson, Dr. A. J. Gordon, and Dr. Wm. M. Taylor. When we think of that world which perishes when a man dies, who can but wish that such a world of intimate knowledge of the Word of God as Dr. Gordon possessed might be actually transmitted to us before he should leave us? But such a knowledge is a personal growth, and to acquire it we must grow by the inner teaching of the Spirit, as did he. But we mourn the loss of such beautiful, illuminated assimilations of the truth as Dr. Gordon and Dr. Taylor gave us.

When we are studying the oracles of the faith once delivered to the saints, we are becoming insensibly joined to the saints. The words of the venerable Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota, in a letter recently received from him come to mind. He says, "I hail with you every sign of the reunion of those who love to serve Jesus Christ. The things in which we agree are all a part of the faith once delivered to the saints; the things in which we differ are human opinions." There is in America certainly a progress in union for purposes of help to men. The visit of General Booth, which has brought out immense audiences, has done much to arouse and stimulate Christian people, and we shall see an actual fruitage, no doubt, in practical uplifting of the so-called masses.

PERSECUTION IN BULGARIA.

Six months have expired since I began missionary labour in Bulgaria, in connection with the A.B.M.U. During this time I have been actively engaged in direct evangelistic work in our three Danubian stations, Rustchuk, Widdin, and Lom-Palanka.

The Lord has given us much blessing; over forty souls have professed conversion. The adversary could not look on with indifference at the progress of the kingdom of God, so in Lom-Palanka, three weeks ago, we began to hear of all kinds of threats from the clergy of the Greek Church. As the Berlin Treaty of 1878, as well as the laws of the Principality, give full religion freedom, we apprehended nothing in the way of violence. But we have been deceived.

On Sunday, March 3, a priest of the Greek Church made a speech against the Protestants, saying they were the greatest enemy of religion. In consequence of his words a gang was formed, which entered our chapel when I was preaching. At the end of the service they tried to produce a scandal, but could get no opportunity. In the afternoon, during Sunday-school, the enraged party, led by some Government officials, entered again; some of them shouted, "We want the preacher," others "We will see how his head will fly off." I was in the house of one of our members, a German gentleman, and remained there for personal safety. Because of these proceedings the Sunday-school was closed, and the chapel locked. But the crowd returned, broke the windows, got in, pillaged its contents, and at last pulled down the very building itself.

The chapel could seat a hundred people comfortably; it was suitably furnished, and there was a cupboard full of books and papers, among which were some church documents and letters. Some of the things were destroyed, and others carried off. The streets in the neighbourhood were covered with leaves of Bibles, hymn books, and with other papers. Three Protestants were beaten (one of them is a German subject), and many others were hit with snowballs and stones. During several succeeding days no Protestant could pass unmolested through the streets. Women and children are attacked on the streets in broad daylight. A Protestant lady, with one child in her arms, and another walking beside her, was beaten and stoned.

The police regarded the whole affair with indifference, and took no measures to put a stop to it. Towards evening no Protestant dared leave his house, and their children could not go to school, because the other children were set against them, without interference on the part of the teachers. This mischief is the work of the Government authorities in this town, combined with the clergy of the Greek Church. The motives have been political rather than religious. The fanatical spirit of the people has been played on, in order that their attention may be diverted from political conflicts.

Insults to Protestants have now ceased, and the children are again going to school. We have, however, no place wherein to meet for worship. For next Sunday we have planned to meet in bands in the houses of members. We trust that Christian friends in Great Britain will help us to build another chapel, and that these untoward events will redound to the glory of God.—Faithfully yours,

Lom-Palanka. Basil S. Keusseff.

REDRUTH TOWN MISSION.—The annual meeting was held on the 19th inst. The report was gratifying as the extracts taken from Mr. Burrell's journal showed many cases of interest and of conversion. The Gospel services, Sunday-school, and mothers' meetings are in good condition. During the summer open-air services were held, and 24,227 tracts and books distributed. Meetings were also held at three large fairs, and the show people were also visited in their caravans. The missionary is Mr. George Burrells, 6, Belle-vue, Redruth.

THE VEDDAHS OF CEYLON.

Dear Sir,—It may be interesting to your readers to know something of these remarkable people, and of the mission work about to be commenced among them. Now wild and uncivilised, living in the jungles of the central and Uva Provinces of this island, in trees and caves, with a language still unreduced to writing, with no desire to mix with other people, they were not always so. About 1810 B.C., headed by three kings, they came over from the hills of Central India to Ceylon, and took possession of the land. Then they were of princely character, very different from the veddahs of to-day. By holding themselves aloof from others, gradually through the centuries they have become plunged into the utter darkness of ignorance and poverty. When the English took possession of the island at the beginning of the century, it is true that some of these people became partially civilised, and by intermarrying settled down in the villages. Among these, admirable mission work is now being done by the Wesleyan Mission on the east of the island. But amongst the majority who are still wild, nothing further than an itinerating journey at long intervals has been undertaken. Like the American Indians, they are dying out; but should not something be done to rescue those that remain, although the difficulties seem at times to be insurmountable?

Their very name signifies their occupation, "veddah"—i.e., a shooter with a long bow and arrow. By the natives they are known as the rock or jungle veddahs as contrasted with the partially civilised ones, the village or coast veddahs. Confined to the heart of the forest, they live by the chase. With unerring skill they bring down the red and spotted deer, the elk, and the wild boar, that roam through our dense jungles. They also take honey from the wild jungle bees, and with these spoils they barter with the surrounding villages. It is usual for them to have an appointed trysting-place where they place the pattern, maybe of an arrow head, that they want manufactured of iron, together with some deerflesh, skins, or honey, and then to return on the following night to find the article needed. They are extremely shy to strangers, and it is this that makes the work so difficult. They will become friendly with those who can use carpenters and blacksmiths' tools, and with those who can help them by the means of a medicine chest; but much patience and perseverance are needed to first gain their confidence. They have no idea whatever of marriage relationship, although, strange to say, they have a stringent code of morals. A breach of their morals is punishable by an arrow through the heart of the offender or offenders. Their dead they hang upon trees until the elements, birds, or animals have disposed of them. It is most dangerous to laugh in their presence, as it is considered a most serious offence, and an arrow may be the penalty incurred. Their honesty is remarkable; they hide their honey, dried deer, flesh, etc., in hollow trees, each man cutting his own peculiar mark upon the tree that contains his spoil, and no other veddah will touch it upon any account. They do not know God or Creator; consequently they have no idea of religion whatever. Their ideas are only confined to the present state of existence.

It is to make known to them a Saviour's love that I am hoping to commence this work. The base of my operations will be at a village called Alutnewara, on the verge of the "veddah country." Thence by itinerating journeys I am hoping to obtain a detailed knowledge of their customs, to acquire their language, to help them all I can by raising them physically, mentally, and, above all, spiritually. The Government had attempted the work but failed. It now remains to be seen what the Gospel can do. Any other information can be obtained through Mr. C. A. Ewbank, 39, Beresford-road, Mildmay, N. I hope to leave Colombo early in March, accompanied by a Singalese servant, and after a railway journey of 150 miles, a coach journey of thirty miles, and a walk through the jungle of thirty miles, to reach my new home, and to commence the work.—Yours very sincerely,

George W. Tebbs.

THE GIRLS' GUILD OF GOOD LIFE.

"Mary's task was a hard one indeed. Tempted and tried on every side, gloom, misery, and vice surrounding her, she yet shed around the sweet influence of a pure heart. Determined for her uncle's sake to remain at his side, she worked at the task she loathed—often serving in the bar of the public-house—in order that she might do her best to keep him from drifting down into the fatal current of drunkenness, and unceasingly begging him to get out of the dreadful trade. Into the depths she descended with a self-sacrificing love, willing to 'step out from sunlight into shade to make more room for others,' and her influence did not go unfelt. Many a word was spoken, many a silent prayer was said, and in that unlikeliest spot of all—the bar of an East-End public-house—the temperance pledge was signed by those who felt unconsciously the unseen Presence of her Lord and Master. 'Only a girl'—her sensitive womanhood shrinking from coarse compliments and coarser jests—yet strong in the undaunted strength supplied her. Could it be otherwise? For as in that fiery furnace of old, there was One standing close by her side and the fire could hurt her not.

"Every week, sometimes oftener, Mary came up to the Guild as usual, and those who knew her well and could appreciate the real heroism of the life she was living, did all in their power to help her in the fight."

The foregoing paragraphs are taken from a most interesting little story of humble life written to illustrate the work of this Guild, which has Hoxton Hall for the centre of its beneficent operations. As to the general progress of the Guild, we cannot do better than quote from the last year's report, written by Mrs. J. T. Rae, 17, Darenth-road, Stamford Hill, N., who is the moving spirit of the Mission:—

"Since its formation 2852 girls have passed through its books, the number at the close of last season being 776. A considerable number of girls are kept in touch by correspondence; thirty-two are in service, and many others are prevented from more than occasional attendance at the weekly parlour meetings. These were, however, attended more or less regularly last season by 414 girls, the average for each Tuesday being 164. The temperance pledge was signed by 167 probationary members, 108 of whom matured into full membership after a month's trial.

"The parlour meetings prove sometimes rather irksome to young girls who have been used to roaming and romping at their own sweet will, but it is wonderful to notice the change in demeanour gradually coming over even the roughest by the influence of the various interests, duties, and amusements which occupy the evenings, and to sustain which and the other agencies fifty-six workers, twenty of whom are old Guild members, devote their care and attention. At the tables set about the hall will be found in active operation—pledge-signing; registering of attendance and names of new members; dressmaking and plain sewing, with the sewing-machines in full work; wool-work of various sorts and stocking-knitting; drawing and painting; writing and fretwork; music and elocution; embroidery and millinery; games and magazines; linen and boot clubs; library, penny bank, and holiday fund. The workers take their turns in closing the evening's engagements with family worship; thus, and by personal contact, the higher welfare of the members is sought to be secured. On other days of the week auxiliary agencies are carried on, including a Bible-class on Sunday afternoon, a social meeting and situation agency, instrumental music class, musical drill, choir, cookery and domestic economy classes. These all appeal to different circles of girls, and are well supported.

"To all who wish to see the Kingdom of God established on earth; to all who believe that brotherly and sisterly feeling should join together conflicting classes, and promote unity of hearts; to all who try to carry out the ethics of Christ in doing to others as we would that they should do to us, we appeal for help for our girls. Few of our readers are so poor but that some little act of self-denial is possible to enable them to give comfort and happiness to those who cannot procure these for themselves. It is difficult for those who live in ease to imagine the hardships and temptations surrounding girls whose lives are a constant struggle against evil conditions of every kind—shortness of work, which means shortness of food; impure air from over-crowding, both within the house and without it; inability to ensure proper cleanliness from the same over-crowding, with never a moment of blessed solitude, and in consequence of all these disadvantages a constant fight against ill-health. Yet, in some cases, they are borne with a cheerful patience and uncomplaining fortitude, which are wonderful and incomprehensible if their simple faith in the love of God and trust in his laws of compensation are not taken into account. They do not talk of such as doctrines and scarcely know they believe them, but they live them. If anyone should desire to be a co-worker with Him for the good of others, we ask for any and every kind of help it is in their power to bestow."

DR. JOSEPH COOK'S LECTURES.

The closing lecture of the series was given on March 4, with the usual large and interested audience. It is a satisfaction to the lovers of truth and righteousness in these days of misrule and exaltation of vileness (says the Boston Morning Star) to have so clear, complete, well-balanced, and fearless an expression of the fittest in truth and doctrine as these lectures have been.

The prelude was devoted to recent advances in world-wide orthodoxy. Mr. Cook takes the ground that no other religion approaches Christianity in numerical force and influence, both moral and material. There is a reaction on both sides of the Atlantic against meagre views of the Deity. The findings of science are coming more and more into harmony with revelation. It is surprising to find so little progress in sceptical criticism in thirty years. The school of rationalism has passed its climax in Boston, but is doing great mischief in Japan. It is absurd to make room for the hypothesis of probation after death. There is a reaction against loose orthodoxy all through the land. Revivals are no friends to it. The deficits in mission funds are due not so much to hard times as to soft doctrines. There has been a devitalised religion taught at Andover. The visitors of that institution have not yet redeemed their pledge of reinstating correct teaching, and at the approaching election of visitors and trustees those should be chosen who have sound doctrine as well as learning.

The Parliament of Religions was defended from misrepresentation. While parliamentary equality was granted, doctrinal equality was never thought of. Christianity was not muzzled. Two lectureships have been established, at Chicago and Calcutta, for the purpose of considering the relation of Christianity to other faiths, and in the end missionaries will agree with others that the Parliament was a help to their cause.

Dr. Stuckenberg, formerly of Berlin, offered prayer, after which Dr. Plumb spoke briefly on freedom of religious speech in America, saying that a writ of error had been entered in the Supreme Court to determine the right of free speech on public grounds. The case of Mr. Davis for violating the statutes of Boston in this matter was rehearsed, and a resolution passed in favour of removing existing restrictions. Dr. Hamilton Mabie was elected chairman of the executive committee of the Monday lectureship, in place of Dr. Gordon, deceased. It was voted that the lectures should be continued another year.

The lecture was upon the Holy Spirit the administrator of the State. He brooded over the creation of the world, has planted our civilisation, and been in every great reform.

This lecture was the last one of the present course, and Mr. Cook's plan for the next two or three years will probably prevent his resuming them another season, but he made an earnest plea that the Monday lectureship be filled during his absence from America by men of ability.

LORD AND LADY BRASSEY have arranged for the 19th anniversary meeting of the Bethnal Green Free Library, E., to take place next month, at their residence, 24, Park-lane.

"A DUMB SPIRIT."—Dr. Barrett, preaching on Sunday week, said that nothing filled him with more concern than the silence of professing Christians about spiritual things. The churches ought to go to Christ and implore Him to cast out this "dumb spirit." The Kingdom would never be hastened by preaching alone; ministers would never bring it in. It would come by the bearing of personal testimony.

THE TIBETAN PIONEER MISSION.

Dear Sir,—Some of your readers who have taken a warm interest in the origin and formation of this Mission, and who saw the paragraph published in your issue of Dec. 13 last, intimating that Mr. Cecil Polhill-Turner was about to proceed to Sikkim, to render what assistance he could to the Mission, will possibly be glad to hear further news of a more definite character.

Mr. Polhill-Turner arrived at Calcutta towards the end of January, and proceeded as soon as possible to Sikkim, to see Miss Taylor, who, with Pontso and Anders Jensen, was at Gnatong, the remainder of the party being engaged at study at Kalimpong, near Darjeeling. At Gnatong he found Mr. Jensen very ill with typhoid fever, from which two days later he died. Pontso was also ill with the same fever, but not so seriously. It is expected that he will recover. Miss Taylor herself was well, though naturally tired with her nursing work.

With regard to the future of the work, neither Miss Taylor nor the men saw their way to re-association, and therefore Mr. Polhill-Turner will undertake the sole training and leadership of these latter, while Miss Taylor continues alone with Pontso at Gnatong watching for any opening into Tibet that may occur. Miss Taylor retains the name of the Mission, hoping to be joined later on by some ladies. The band under Mr. Polhill-Turner will henceforth be known simply as "The Tibetan Mission," omitting the distinctive word "Pioneer." It consists of Mr. Cecil Polhill-Turner as leader, Mr. and Mrs. Evan Mackenzie and two children, Messrs. Wm. Soutter, J. Johannsen, T. Sorrensen, E. Amundsen, H. M. Stumbles, James Moyes, and Jas. Neave, a party of twelve in all. Including Mr. Jensen, who has just died, the two mentioned in my letter in The Christian of November 1, and the one previously invalided home, this accounts for the whole party who arrived with Miss Taylor just a year ago in Calcutta.

The arrangement thus come to in India necessitates also a change at home to the following extent, namely, that I am henceforth hon. sec. and treasurer to the Tibetan Mission, that is, the band under Mr. Polhill-Turner. Any donations intended for Miss Taylor, or the work she has in contemplation, may be sent to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., who will receive the same on her behalf.

I must not conclude this letter without telling something of the encouragements contained in Mr. Polhill-Turner's letters. He has gained a good impression of the men so far as he has seen them, and finds they have been making good use of their time in study of the language, and in taking opportunities of speaking to meetings of Tibetans when possible. He feels Kalimpong to be a more suitable place for present purposes than either Darjeeling or Gnatong. They have hitherto been unable to find any house in Kalimpong that would hold them all; but now, by the goodness of God, they have had a house placed at their disposal where they can all live together, with Mrs. Mackenzie as housekeeper.

Then as to their main object, there seems to be some likelihood of the door into Tibet opening in the course of the year. Will those interested in seeing the Gospel preached in Tibet, continue earnestly in prayer that this may soon be possible, remembering all God's servants who are quietly waiting just outside the still closed door, Also for Pontso, Miss Taylor's faithful servant, that he may entirely recover.

William Sharp,
Hon. Sec. and Treasurer Tibetan Mission.
Norwood, London, March 25.

MANX WAIFS AND STRAYS.—The twenty-sixth annual meeting of the Isle of Man Industrial Home for Waifs and Strays was recently celebrated by a large, influential, and enthusiastic gathering. The institution, which is conducted on unsectarian lines, is supported by all denominations, and largely contributed to by English visitors. It is, to a certain extent, self-supporting; out of the gross income of £1500, one-third was contributed through the industrial resources of the inmates, and during the year 860 days' work had been provided for the poor out of work elsewhere. About a hundred boys and girls are yearly maintained and educated in the institution, and from time to time batches are sent to Canada out of the emigration fund. The home is under the able superintendence of Mr. and Mrs. S. Campbell.

SOCIAL MORALS IN THE ORIENT.

It was a shameful story of sin and oppression that was unfolded before a large audience in the Queen's Hall last Friday evening, by Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell. It was difficult to bring the mind to conceive that such a state of things is possible in any land where the Queen of Great Britain bears sway. We call ourselves a Christian nation, but it would be more in conformity with the fitness of things if we were to forswear that title and take our place at the bottom of the scale in national reputation, till we have purged ourselves of this horrible iniquity.

In opening the proceedings Lady Henry Somerset pleaded in most eloquent and womanly words for more real sympathy with those who are the victims of evil, and for greater sacrifices that they may be set free to enjoy the common birthright of humanity.

Mrs. Andrew gave a long and powerful address, detailing many of the sad and sorrowful scenes visited and witnessed by herself and Dr. Bushnell during their tour in the East. A year ago last November they left England, and pursued their investigations as to the opium habit and its bearing on social morals in India, Burmah, the Straits Settlements, Hong Kong, Canton, Shanghai, Northern China, Corea, and Japan. They need not have really visited Japan, because in that country opium has been excluded from the beginning. The most humbling thing in all these investigations was that the evils they discovered are allowed to flourish, not under a heathen Government, but under enlightened British rule and under the supervision of British officials. In looking back over this sad pilgrimage, Mrs. Andrew said that the one word that stands out in the memory of the picture is hopelessness. The frequenters of the opium shops they visited, whether of the higher order (so far as elegant surroundings went), or of the underground dens, all belonged to the same dregs of humanity. They are there without a ray of hope as to the future. The physical wreckage caused by indulgence in the opium drug was only equalled by the utter mental and moral degradation that accompanies it. Mrs. Andrew described in vivid language the insanitary conditions of the dens and the crowds of victims that filled them—a revolting and altogether awful picture. She also recapitulated the testimony borne by the opium smokers themselves, freely given, as to the iron bondage in which the habit kept them, and the terrible physical sufferings that ensued on any lengthened abstinence from the drug, so fell and fatal is its power. So low had these people sunk mentally that it is almost hopeless to attempt to awaken in them any effort or striving after release from the grip of the destroyer.

Passing to the side of the question that mainly affects woman, Mrs. Andrew went on to show the ultimate and inevitable connection between the opium habit and immoral indulgence. This was specially seen in Singapore, Penang, Hong Kong, etc. In close proximity to the opium houses there are to be found smaller or larger colonies of native slave girls, who are kept there to minister to the worst vices of the patrons of the dens. Those in charge of the girls had no scruples in explaining to the visitors the real purpose of these establishments. These girls are as literal slaves as can be found in any part of the world. They are actually bought in childhood, sometimes in infancy, by women who are called "pocket-mothers," and who bring them up without any concealment to a life of open shame. This is well known to the British officials, and the term "pocket-mother" is a recognised one in official documents. Some of the girls found in these places are very young indeed. To their great horror and anguish the visitors discovered that a regular trade in these slave girls is carried on between Chinese ports and various parts of the Straits Settlements. Along the banks of the Canton River there is a large floating population, and whole streets of house boats are openly devoted to these horrible opium hells, in conjunction with houses of ill-fame. Some streets visited in Hong Kong, also given over to these twin vices, were described by Mrs. Andrew. In closing her black recital, she made a deeply-impasssioned appeal to all who have any sort of influence in the good government of the British Empire to join in overthrowing these mighty strongholds of evil. The resource of prayer was open to all, and those who could not exercise much direct influence might do great good by besieging the Throne of Grace, and giving God no rest till this horrible iniquity is swept from the face of the earth.

Mdme. Antoinette Sterling having sung a solo, another address followed from Dr. Kate Bushnell. She told of large buildings to be seen in Singapore, Hong Kong, and other places, ostensibly for the protection of Chinese girls who are immigrated, but which are really places for the official registration of these slave girls when entering on a life of shame. These institutions are presided over by British officials, who call themselves "protectors" of the Chinese, but they really bind the shackles of slavery more firmly around these unhappy girls. Oh that another Mrs. Beecher Stowe would arise and help to strike the fetters from these oppressed and degraded sisters! The girls are all supposed to be questioned whether they enter on this life of their own choice, but what choice have they under the circumstances, being the property of "pocket-mothers"? One case, mentioned in the Blue Books, was cited by Dr. Bushnell, of a girl whose lover desired to redeem her, but could not raise all of the 2300dols. demanded, with the result that she committed suicide. The speaker was very severe in her condemnation of those ultra-refined Christians who are too delicate to think of or try to remedy such dreadful evils. Dr. Bushnell went on to describe the pitiable condition of woman in the East, apart from the elevating power of Christianity. She is never able to call her life her own, but is the property and the slave of some male relation. The deadly qualities of the opium drug were also descanted on most powerfully, and the unbiassed opinion of physicians in Europe and America set against the interested views of Indian officials. This is far more than a question of "revenue"; it is a question of right and wrong, and God will make inquisition into it.

At the close of these two addresss the following resolution was submitted to the great assembly:—

That this meeting, having heard from Mrs. Elizabeth Andrew and Dr. Kate C. Bushnell, the deeply interesting account of their investigations made personally in China, Hong Kong, the Straits Settlements, and India, into the facts relating to the use of opium by the peoples of those countries; and being firmly convinced that the opium habit is both a moral and social evil of the gravest nature, regards with the deepest concern the connection of this country with the opium traffic, involving, as it does, national complicity in a great wrong inflicted upon unwilling peoples contrary to morality and righteousness. This meeting therefore calls for the suppression of the opium trade between India and China, the placing of the retail sale in India, as is already the case in England, under restrictions, as a dangerous poison; and directs that copies of this resolution be sent to the Prime Minister, and to Her Majesty's Secretaries of State for Foreign Affairs, for India and for the Colonies; and to every member of the House of Commons.

The resolution was ably moved and seconded by Miss Lucy Guinness and Mrs. Bamford Slack. It was most earnestly supported by Mr. B. Broomhall, who expressed the gratitude that must be felt by all friends of the cause to Lady Henry Somerset for her practical help in furthering this movement, and to the two lady speakers who have done such splendid service to humanity at great sacrifice of feeling and of strength to themselves. The resolution was carried by acclamation.

In a brief closing address, Lady Henry Somerset referred to the monster world-wide petition against the crying evils of the time lately presented at Washington, and soon to arrive in this country for presentation to the British Government. The benediction was pronounced by Bishop Turner, of Georgia, a lifelong friend of the oppressed negro in America.

Many influential friends wrote to Mr. H. J. Osborn, by whom this campaign and the final meeting were organised, expressing regret at absence and sympathy with the objects in view.

CALEDONIAN CHRISTIAN CLUB.—The monthly social gathering was held at 5, Southampton-street, W.C., last Thursday. There was a large attendance, a special feature being that most of the guests had but recently immigrated from the Provinces—mainly from Scotland—into the business life of London. The first two hours of tea and talk gave scope for making happy and healthful acquaintances, followed by a varied programme of music, provided by the Stoke Newington Presbyterian Choir. Mr. T. R. Lyell, of Hampstead, who presided, gave earnest and wise counsel to his young friends, strongly urging that each heart be strong to fight the battle of life, and that every fresh arrival in London should be closely associated with some church. He rejoiced in the very practical work being done by the club, whose example is worthy of the most serious attention of all our churches in the desire to solve the sad problem of "drifting" or "lapsing" on the part of new-comers to London.

DUBLIN MEDICAL MISSION.

The review of the past year's work formed the occasion of an interesting gathering of the friends of this beneficent labour of love among the poor. From the report presented by the Mission physician, Dr. J. Long, we cull the following information. The numbers attending the dispensary have rapidly increased. Speaking to these poor people of God's love seems to bring them all the more to the Mission. The attendance at the morning dispensaries has specially increased very much, the daily average being now between 90 and 100. By degrees prejudice is being dispelled. It may be asked, What class of people are these? The poorest class and the poor middle class. Where do they come from? From all parts of the city and for miles round. To the Tuesday evening dispensaries for men only, great numbers are coming, and we speak to them as if they were our brothers. Last Tuesday I asked if there was any poor fellow who was tired of sin. Seven men stood up, and I told them of the love of God. One Roman Catholic said afterwards, "Well, doctor, I do believe it's a gift from God, and that you cannot work to get it."

The mothers' and Sunday evening meetings are well attended. The vast majority who attend are Roman Catholics. We have also a great work visiting those who cannot come to the dispensary. It is a blessed going from house to house. The following incident is worthy of record:—A poor woman, who had lost two of her children in consumption, was turned out every Sunday morning by her husband to go to chapel, but you would find her walking about not going to mass, for she had found something better to rest her weary soul on. She was minding the infant of another poor woman who was dying, and who had been visited by a lady doctor from the Rotunda (Dr. Eleanor Montgomery, of Belfast), who had spoken to her about her soul. This poor woman told her she had found the Saviour, and during her illness she bore testimony to the saving and keeping power of Christ.

Unfortunately, the hon. treasurer, Dr. H. T. Bewley, had a less satisfactory statement to make, viz., that while the growth of the work demanded the engagement of a medical assistant, the funds, which had fallen off rather than increased, did not justify such an addition. This was lamented by Rev. Gilbert Mahaffy and the chairman, Dr. W. J. Smyly, who in earnest and practical addresses commended the work to the hearty sympathy of all who desire to see the poor reached to the blessing of body and soul. The hon. sec. of the Mission is Mrs. E. E. Figgis, 6, Simmons Court-villas, Donnybrook, Dublin.

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE.

When the Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel was closed in August, 1894, the committee believed that in the course of a few weeks the transfer to the Drapers' Company would be effected, and the building be again open to the working lads of the neighbourhood. Their disappointment was great that from various causes this was not effected. Month after month passed away; the lads assembled nightly at the doors, and continually inquired when they might come back. In December, 1894, a written appeal came, signed by over 100 of the former members, begging that the Institute should be reopened, and that they should be permitted to come again.

Five months had elapsed, during which time these poor fellows had been practically shut out in the streets. It was then the depth of winter, and we realised the urgency of the appeal, and felt we could not refuse it. In the circumstances, therefore, it was decided to reopen the reading-room, the library, and the gymnasium; to continue the Bible-class and mutual improvement society, to carry on these operations at the lowest cost, but to have no educational classes, except such as could be made self-supporting. The Institute was reopened on January 5, and the first night fifty-five lads re-entered; others have been coming ever since, and they are evidently rejoiced to be here once more. We were placed in an unexpected and very difficult position, but we believe the reopening will be approved by the subscribers and friends, and we earnestly ask for a renewal of their generous help to the work until the proposed transfer is actually accomplished.

Founder and Hon. Secretary.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MARCH 31.—1 COR. XIV.

The Use of Gift (1-19).—It was a remarkable time, and marked by these significant phenomena in the use of speech. Probably they were a sign of the special prerogative of speech during the present age, and of the way in which God could control and inspire the tongue to carry his messages. There are deep lessons for us, not in the use of an unknown tongue, but in the placing of our speech at the disposal of the Divine Spirit, and asking Him to fill it with his burning utterances. We must also see to it that our words are always for the edification and enlightenment of our hearers. Never speak for your own glory or pride, but that the Church may be built up and sinners saved.

The Effect of Gospel Testimony (20-25).—The unknown tongue was a sign; it indicated the presence of a superior will and power that dominated the speech. The ungodly could not but be arrested and impressed by it. But on the whole prophesying, or teaching, was of greater utility in unfolding and enforcing the divine truth. When we are speaking in the Spirit, He through us strikes home to the secrets of the heart.

Not Confusion, but Peace (26-40).—One was to speak at a time. And if there was none to interpret his speech, he was to keep still. (32) In our most exalted moments, we should keep our spirit well in hand. All that is really of God is orderly and peaceful. (34) In those first days the Apostle was careful to counsel the avoidance of needless extravagances, such as would alienate public sentiment on indifferent issues. As a rule, it is better for women not to teach in the constituted church-meeting, but there is nothing in these words to hinder them doing the work of evangelists. In all our worship there should be the reverence, decorum, and order which becometh his holy name. Let us order our thoughts and prayers before Him.

MONDAY, APRIL 1.—1 COR. XV.

The Facts of the Gospel (1-12).—Our holy faith is founded on certain well-ascertained facts. These were not only attested by eye witnesses, but communicated to the Apostle by direct revelation. This constituted him on an equality with the rest of the apostolic band. But he never forgot how unworthy he was of the position. Thrice he uses the phrase, Yet not I.

Christ's Resurrection (13-19).—In those early days there might be questionings about the Resurrection generally, but there was none that Christ had risen. This was accepted on all hands as incontestable. The Apostle held that the resurrection of Jesus proved that such a thing was not only possible, and also certain, for all. On the historical fact of the Saviour's Resurrection the whole structure of our hopes for this life and the next rests. The Church should not linger at the cradle or the cross, but beside the empty tomb, looking away and up.

The Eternal Reign (20-28).—First the Resurrection of our federal Head, then of his own at his coming, and lastly of all mankind. How blessed the anticipation that all adverse rule and authority shall be abolished. The Father is even now subduing all things to the Son; and those who abide in Him share his victory and his throne. Let Him reign over you, and you shall reign in and with Him.

Reasonings and Analogies (29-58).—Nothing but the hope of the future could have animated the early Christians to pass through their awful sorrows, and amid our own let us anticipate the joy of the eternal morning, when sorrow, sin, and death shall flee away for ever. (35) What the seed is to the wheat plant that the body sown in the ground is to the resurrection body. There will not be identity in the component atoms, but a continuity of life and development. God will give the body as He shall see fit, to clothe the spirit, raised in his likeness. But how fair it will be—incorruptible, glorious, powerful, and spiritual, yet recognisable as in the days of the flesh. (45) Note the teaching about the first and second man, as though the whole race were summed up in these two. To which of these do you belong? The first birth unites to the one, the second to the other. If united to the second Adam, He will be to you a life-giving spirit. (50) These words, generally read over the grave, cannot be understood apart from the teaching as to the change which will instantly pass over the saints at the coming of the Lord. Suddenly the mortal will be swallowed up of life, and those who are permitted to share in it shall for ever elude death and the grave.

TUESDAY, APRIL 2.—1 COR. XVI.

The Collection and Plans (1-12).—It is the secret of raising money to encourage people to give systematically and regularly. To lay aside a little every week is much better than to give large sums spasmodically, and under the influence of a moving appeal. (3) It becomes those who have charge of public money to be extremely particular that no suspicion should attach to their stewardship of it. (6) Let us live by the day, always leaving it to the Lord to determine our path. (9) The presence of adversaries and difficulties was an incentive to the Apostle. Where men want you least is where you are needed most. (12) There was no trace of jealousy in Paul's heart, though some had sided with Apollos as against himself. He was only eager that the Lord's work should proceed. How much we may do in setting forward God's workers. Words of encouragement and hope are of inestimable worth.

Refreshings (15-20).—God sends to his reapers refreshment by the hands of their fellow believers. Let us set ourselves apart for this work. If we cannot reap the harvest, we can minister to those who do. Those who only help in the work of the Lord stand in the front rank, and deserve the respect and fellowship of the best. Those who serve are enthroned. The last are first.

Salutations (21-24).—What a spirit of love perfumes these early letters. It is the scent of the garments of Christ brought from the ivory palaces. Not to love Jesus was the basest of crimes in the esteem of this ardent soul. It carried with it a curse, because it evidenced a heart utterly incapable of being blessed. We may not feel love as we would, but let us choose to love, and ask the Spirit of God to shed his love abroad in our hearts. Maranatha; in the R.V. this word rightly stands alone. It was written by the Apostle's own hand, and fitly indicates the bent of his aspirations. That coming would answer all questions, put right all wrongs, and bless waiting and eager hearts. Lord Jesus, come quickly.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 3.—2 COR. I.

The Comfort of God (1-11),—It made Paul strong in his ministry to know it was based in the will and appointment of God. He had more trials than most, but they drove him to God, and led to discoveries of God's nature, which have enriched mankind. All comfort, however expressed, emanates from His tender heart. God comforteth! One says that it is worth being afflicted to come under such care. Many go uncomforted because they look at their sorrow, and not for the Comforter, who is the Holy Ghost. Sometimes we go through special trials that we may catch a glimpse of a new side in God's comfort, so that we may pass it on to others. (6) Whatever be our experience, let us make capital out of it for the benefit of our fellow believers. Out of the eater let us bring meat. (10) Hath delivered, doth, and will. All our life is spanned by our Father's care.

The Affirmations of God (12-24).—Transparency and holiness should characterise the behaviour and planning of all God's servants. We must not don the devil's livery of expediency and fleshly wisdom. We should act so that our converts may never repent of making their boast of us. (16) Paul feared that his friends might accuse him of fickleness in not having executed his avowed purpose of coming to see them. He says that he refrained from coming because of an adequate reason which he proceeds to unfold. (18) Men judge of God by us; we should be very careful, then, how we speak and act. (19) There is no fickleness in God. He ever answers the deepest yearnings of the soul with a yea; and all his affirmations and promises are ratified in the life and words of Jesus. He is God's Amen. (21) Permanence and stability are the result of God's work on the soul. Let us claim them.

THURSDAY, APRIL 4.—2 COR. II.

The Reason why the Apostle Wrote as he had Done. (1-11).—The former epistle had caused acute sorrow among the converts at Corinth. The Apostle says that his primary aim was not to give pain, but to put away the evil. Not in anger but in love, he had written as he did. The true cause of sorrow was not himself, but the offender against the elementary laws of purity, against whom his strictures had been directed. (5) The evil, however, had now been dealt with and put away, and its perpetrator was overwhelmed in grief. There was no need therefore to pursue the matter further, but to forgive; lest the sense of unforgiven wrong discourage the offender, and drive him still further afield.

The Triumphant March of the Redeemer (12-17).—It is very remarkable that the Apostle allowed his love and anxiety to sweep him past that open door. It shows how true a man he was, and how our God understands and permits the exigencies of human love. (14) Christ, to his judgment, was going in triumph through the world, and he was as an incense-bearer in his victorious train, raising aloft his censer, and scattering the sweet perfume of his name far and wide. (15) Being saved and perishing, as R.V. indicates, are processes. We deteriorate or are perfected by almost imperceptible stages. None stand still. And each is affected by the Gospel for better or worse.

FRIDAY, APRIL 5.—2 COR. III.

The Best Letter of Commendation (1-11).—Challenged for his credentials, the Apostle points to the vast spiritual change that had passed over his converts as being sufficient evidence of the genuineness of his commission. Every Christian should be a clearly-written tractate circulating for the glory of God. (4) If the Apostle counted himself insufficient for his work, how much more must those who cannot claim his special enduement! Yet for them also God is sufficient. (7) By a quick turn of thought he passes from the law graven on the tables of stone to the Lawgiver, stern and veiled. If the glory that shone on the face of Moses was so transcendently beautiful, surely that of the Gospel must be more so—the one transient, the other abiding; the one reflected, the other direct.

The Unveiled Heart (12-18).—Not only was Moses veiled, but the hearts of the Jews were covered with a thick veil of prejudice. They could not understand God's inner meaning in the Levitical dispensation; and as the Law was read, they listened to it without spiritual insight. The first thing that Jesus does for us is to remove the outer coating of prejudice and misconception. Directly we turn to the Lord the veil is taken away, and we see the inner meaning of Scripture. (17) Liberty to know and to do is the prerogative of the Spirit's teaching and indwelling. We are unshackled from prejudice and evil habit. Free to love, to serve, to realise our ideals, because all power is his. (18) The "open face" of the A.V. is better rendered as unveiled, and "beholding" as reflecting. The more we seek to resemble Jesus, doing things because they are right and He wishes them, the more certainly and inevitably we are changed into his image. But this transformation is due to the direct work of the Holy Spirit on the yielded heart and life.

SATURDAY, APRIL 6.—2 COR. IV.

The Minister's Commendation (1-6).—The true minister never forgets that he has obtained mercy himself; he therefore bears and pleads. His weapon is the truth, his appeal to the conscience. Others may vie with him in the brilliance of their thought and the splendour of their rhetoric, but he has unrivalled supremacy in the realm of conscience. There is deep down in the human heart a correspondence with the truth of the Gospel; manifest the one, and you will secure a response in the other. (3) The sun may shine in the eyes of a blind man without his perceiving it, and Jesus in all his glory may be manifested to the unregenerate and awaken no response. The dawn (R.V.) is breaking, but they perceive it not. (6) The miracle of the Creation of Light has to be performed with each saved soul. Perhaps there is a spiritual identity between each step of the Creation and of the regeneration of the soul.

The Minister's Life (7-18).—The earthen vessel gets very scratched and cracked, but the heavenly treasure is unimpaired. The feebler the vessel, the more evident is the Divine power which can do so much with it. (8) It is only in proportion that we are conformed to the sufferings and death of Christ that we enter into fellowship with his resurrection glory. (11) The more we drink the cup of his death, the closer we sit with Him on his throne. And through all our sufferings we are animated by the thought that we are promoting the interests of those we love, and that the time is not far distant when they and we shall stand together in the glory of the Kingdom. (17) Note the contrast: the affliction is light and transient, and can only touch the outward man; the glory, which we may even now begin to realise, is heavy with blessedness, eternal, and perfectly satisfying. Let us look steadily on this side of our present discipline.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

APRIL 7.

THE TRIUMPHAL ENTRY.—Mark xi. 1-11.
GOLDEN TEXT, verse 9.

THE Passover Feast is at hand. Vast numbers of pilgrims journeying to Jerusalem swell the numbers joining in this procession. The fame of the miracles of Jesus, especially of the raising of Lazarus, has increased the enthusiasm in his favour. After the Sabbath rest at Bethany, the journey—which He knows is a journey to death—begins.

It was the tenth day of the month Nizan—the day upon which the lamb for the Passover was chosen (Exod. xii. 3). It was an indication of the accuracy with which God fulfils his prophecies that on that day Jesus should enter the city in which, as our Passover, He was sacrificed for us.

Bethany was on the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives, and about two miles distant from Jerusalem. Bethphage was near at hand, but its exact site cannot be determined. "From Bethany to Jerusalem there were two routes, one leading directly over the top of Olivet; the other less difficult and more frequented, winding round the southern shoulder, crossing the low ridge between Olivet and the Mount of Offence. Thence descending the hill in a north-easterly direction, passing what is described as Gethsemane, crossing the brook Kedron, and ascending the hill on the other side, enters the city by St. Stephen's Gate."—Stock. The latter was the course taken by this procession.

PREPARATIONS FOR THE ENTRY (1-6).—The two disciples (1) were probably Peter and John (Luke xxii. 8). They received a strange commission (2-4). In issuing such a command Jesus showed a remarkable mingling of majesty and lowliness. He knew where the colt was, to whom it belonged, that he who owned it was either a disciple or favourably disposed towards Him, and that He had but to demand it. In this He speaks like a king. But that He should need it and be willing to acknowledge his need witnesses to his condescension. If Jesus had need of a little colt, is there anyone, however young and feeble, who can say, "The Lord has no need of me"? The obedience of the disciples is worthy of imitation (4-6). How many objections they might have urged against obeying such an unlikely command. Suppose there should be no colt there, or that the owner should not be willing to let it go. True obedience asks no questions; and will always prove the wisdom of our Lord's commands. It is always safe to obey Jesus.

THE TRIUMPHAL ENTRY (7-10).—This is the only occasion on which we read of Jesus riding. And now He rode not on horseback as a warrior, but as the old rulers of Israel rode (Judges v. 10, x. 4). "The ass in the East is in high esteem. Statelier, livelier, swifter than with us, it vies with the horse in favour," Geikie. The object of this was two-fold:—first, that He might fulfil a prophecy given centuries before (Zech. ix. 9). And, next, that He might thus publicly declare to the Jews who He was. They were familiar with the prophecy, yet they did not see its fulfilment (see Acts xiii. 27). The pageantry of the moment did not elate Jesus. Luke tells us (xix. 41-44) that the sight of the city moved Him to tears and lamentations.

The delight of the people was unbounded. Their garments provided his saddle (7), or were spread in the way (8). (Compare the proclamation of Jehu in 2 Kings ix. 13.) "The branches off the trees" were strictly the palm leaves, twelve to sixteen feet long. The welcome shouted by the people in front and by those who followed was taken from Psalm cxviii. 25, 26. The meaning of "Hosanna" is Save, we pray; and "in the highest" means in the highest degree, in the highest strains, in the highest heavens. There was no honour they seemed unwilling to pay Him. We know Him better, and understand more perfectly the meaning of his entry into Jerusalem? do we pay Him equal homage?

Yet what was their enthusiasm worth? It lasted a brief while after the entrance into the city (Matt. xxi. 12-16); and not the least important part of it was the songs of the children. We may be sure that their voices were not heard a few days afterwards crying, "Crucify Him!"

For the Young.

AUNT MARION'S PICTURE-ROOM.

No boy in Mr. Forrest's class looked forward to the approaching Easter holidays with more eagerness than did George Harris. In a letter he had received from home he was informed that his uncle Jack and Aunt Marion wished him to spend his short vacation with them at Grange Lodge, and this was, of all things, what our young friend most desired. George had a great love for drawing and painting, and, young as he was, he decided he would become an artist when his schooldays were over.

Mr. and Mrs. Elliot—his uncle and aunt—had lived many years in India, and on their return to Scotland brought many beautiful curiosities with them. But these were not the chief attractions for George. He had often heard his mamma speak of his Aunt Marion's picture-room, and now looked forward with great delight to the time when he would actually gaze upon the paintings which his late uncle had painted.

The happy day came at length, when George found himself a guest at the mansion-house of Grange Lodge. Mr. and Mrs. Elliot gave their bright young nephew a warm welcome, and formed many plans whereby they hoped he would enjoy his holiday. Several days passed, but still no mention was made to him about the "picture-room" which he longed so much to see.

One afternoon, however, while George lay resting on the sofa, he began to sketch "Major," a handsome Mastiff, who was a special favourite of his uncle's. When finished, he handed his sketch to his aunt for criticism. "Why, George, it is like life," she exclaimed, "I must remember to let you see your late dear uncle Hugh's pictures, before you leave us."

Uncle Hugh was Mrs. Elliot's only brother, and George knew she still mourned his loss, and so answered simply, "Thank you, Aunt Marion; I shall enjoy seeing them very much indeed." While she admired his quiet response, she did not fail to observe the look of pleasure that overspread his face.

Next day, George, accompanied by his aunt, went upstairs and entered the little room of which he had so often heard. Here Aunt Marion had hung all her favourite brother's paintings, both finished and unfinished, and it seemed to George as if he were treading on sacred ground.

"These were Hugh's first attempts at painting," said Mrs. Elliot, pointing to several small paintings. "That one there is called 'Looking for the Wind,' and, as you see, represents five children—two girls and three boys—eagerly inspecting a pair of bellows. The two elder boys have an idea in their heads, and the others are looking on in wonder. Suddenly one plunges a knife into the leather; but though they all gaze intently they cannot see what they expected—the wind. Just as they are beginning to realise their disappointment, in comes their mother.

"The other little sketch is that of 'Flora,' the teetotal doggie. She would not drink out of any tumbler or tank that smelt of beer, no matter how thirsty she might have been."

As George gazed in wondering admiration at the various pictures so neatly and tastefully arranged, Mrs. Elliot continued explaining the different subjects to him. "Yonder is a shipwreck; the sky is dark and lowering, while the angry billows are dashing over all that remains of a once magnificent vessel. The crew were all saved, but she foundered a few yards off Aberdeen Harbour.

"Next to it is a painting from the old original of St. Peter's Cathedral at Rome. It is beautiful, though some of the sacred relics, and one or two of the candlesticks on the table to the right, are unfinished.

"The large picture in the centre represents a holiday at Edinburgh Castle fifty years ago. 'Mons Meg' is the chief attraction to the many visitors, and there you see one inquisitive fellow has scrambled inside the immense cannon.

"Opposite to this is a sketch of the Fisherman's Pier at Newhaven, a thriving fishing village a few miles from Edinburgh. The fishing boats have just arrived, and everyone is busy unloading the spoil of the deep. The fishwives, in picturesque attire, are waiting impatiently for the sale to take place, after which they set out on their various rounds carrying their heavily-laden creels upon their backs. I wish you could hear their peculiar cry. Sometimes it is coarse and harsh, but oftener musical. I laughed outright the first time I heard the accent given to 'Caller haddie-ee!'"

Just as Mrs. Elliot was concluding, she observed George gazing intently upon a very, very dark painting, framed in ebony, and relieved by a good slip. At first she had not intended to say anything about it, but she could not resist her nephew's look of silent inquiry. "I see you wish to know the history of that strange-looking picture also," she said, "and I don't wonder. You will see that from where we are standing the face is smiling down upon us blandly; now turn in whatever direction you please, you will find his eyes are ever upon you."

It had been the work of a poor drunkard upon whose terror-stricken mind an imaginary representation of the enemy of souls had impressed itself.

"But are you not surprised that the artist should have given Satan such a pleasant expression?" queried George. "I think he should be depicted as ugly, treacherous, cruel, mean, and fierce."

"Many others who have seen this strange picture have thought so too," answered Mrs. Elliot. "But I think the poor artist was quite correct in painting Satan like that. If the enemy of souls didn't deceive men and women, ay, boys and girls, too, in a winning, beguiling way, there would be less sin in the world. I can easily imagine he is well pleased when people carry out his evil suggestions. It is only those who strive to oppose him to whom he appears in his true character as a serpent or a roaring lion."

"Now that I begin to think about him, all you say is quite true," replied George; "and so long as I live I will never forget this picture and what you have said about it."

When George Harris went back to school he had much to tell his companions of all he had seen and done during his holidays; but the subject that interested them most was the picture of Satan. While George described his dark visage so vividly and accurately that each one formed a good idea of what the picture was like, he also narrated all that his Aunt Marion had said about our great Enemy, and urged the little group of listeners to put on "the whole armour of God" that St. Paul speaks about, so as to be able to withstand his assaults.

THE ORBS OF HEAVEN.

"And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night: He made the stars also" (Gen. i. 16).

How beautiful the orbs of heaven!
The stars, the sun, the moon,
Each shining in its several sphere
As night succeedeth noon.

Yes, beautiful these orbs of heaven!
And Jesus bids them shine
To tell us of the brighter Sun,
And lovelier Star divine.

The "Morning Star" that soon will rise
O'er nature's darkened night;
The "Sun of Righteousness," enthroned,
So glorious, and so bright!

'Tis beautiful on high to gaze,
And think of Jesus then,
Who bears these glorious names, alone,
Amongst the sons of men,—

Who fills the throne of glory now,—
The bow-encircled throne;
Yet to our hearts, who know his love,
The tender Shepherd known,—

The tender Shepherd, good and kind,
The holy, undefiled,
Who stooped in wondrous love and grace,
To bear and bless a child!

He is the "Star," and He the "Sun,"
He rules the night and day;
How happy all who bask beneath
His cheery, blissful ray!

Some London Missions.

RICHMOND-STREET MISSION, WALWORTH.

In the densely-crowded district of Walworth, right in the heart of a labyrinth of narrow lanes and streets, inhabited chiefly by the humbler working class and costermongers, a band of workers have planted and maintained for many years a spiritual lighthouse, warning men of their danger, and witnessing before the eyes of the heedless thousands to the grace of God. One of the most interesting features in the work at Richmond-street is the testimony borne by those who have been themselves awakened and made new creatures through means of the Mission. Not a few of the present workers and teachers are who, being saved, have learned the privilege of seeking to save others. But apart from these, there are many now serving the Lord elsewhere, who thankfully confess that, under God, they owe their changed life to the prayer, influence and effort brought to bear on them in the "dear old Mission Hall."

The new report, issued within the last few days, gives a striking instance of the way in which fruit is found after many days:—"A lad who attended the Mission over thirty years ago, and was there led to give himself to God, after serving Him as an evangelist in different parts of England and America, has recently returned and made himself known to the workers, attributing his conversion to the teaching he received at the schools. He has now accepted the pastorate of Charles-street Chapel, Camberwell New-road. Moreover, two lads who were noted for the trouble they formerly gave, were lately met by one of the workers in a distant part of London, and testified to their conversion through the instrumentality of the teachers at Richmond-street."

The open secret of much of the success here is prayer and faith; the workers have learned to believe in the power of God to save, if only his Gospel be clearly and faithfully set forth. In addition, they have learned to begin with the children, finding that where the little ones love to go the elders are apt to follow. Hence great importance is attached to the Sunday-schools, which, indeed, are the basis of the whole operations. The morning and afternoon Sunday-schools report 714 on the books, while the evening school reports 637 children. This branch of the work is carried on under serious difficulty, from sheer lack of room. The place is too strait. A larger building must be provided, when doubtless many more children will be added who at present are regularly turned away from the doors by reason of want of accommodation.

Another feature which has interested me in inquiring into this Mission is the way in which the senior scholars are got hold of and retained. All practical workers know that this is one of the most

DIFFICULT PROBLEMS IN HOME MISSIONS

—a problem which presses constantly and sorely on devoted men and women labouring amongst the young. As the boys grow up to the ripe and mature age of fifteen or sixteen they are apt to fall away, considering themselves "too big for Sunday-school." Yet alas! it is the most dangerous period in their lives; and evil habits then learned on the street oft enslave them in later years. Nor is it the boys only; the girls also are prone to wander off in similar fashion. Here and there various missions, happy in some peculiarly gifted worker, endowed with force to hold and interest these wayward ones, have been successful in retaining the elders. Amongst these, Richmond-street may be reckoned, for no fewer than 133 senior scholars are in touch with the school. Many are actively serving Christ. As far as possible work is found for all who will. Quite a number are regularly teaching in the classes, and throwing enthusiasm and energy into winning the children.

The circle of operations among the old and young—evangelistic, temperance, and social—is wide and varied, but for detailed description let readers refer to the report, which may be had of the secretary of the Mission, Mr. C. G. Barr, 67, Aytoun-road, Brixton, S.W. It may be added here that, not content with the central Mission Hall, these friends have a vigorous little branch in Townsend-street, where also useful service is being done among old and young.

The whole work, being voluntary, is carried on at the cost of some £350 per annum, a singularly small amount for the results achieved. At present, however, a special effort is being made to raise funds for the new building, which, as I have indicated, has become imperative. Considering the circumstances of the locality and the character of the population, it is evident that this evangelistic centre must be maintained, and this means that a building must be secured. The site (freehold) has been purchased, and about £1200 are yet required, which the committee fully believe will be forthcoming in God's time and way. On Him they rely, reckoning the work as his, and that, as He has hitherto supplied every need, so will He when He would have the undertaking go forward. Mr. T. W. How, 42, Saltoun-road, Brixton Hill, S.W., is the Hon. Sec. of the New Building Fund. Pearl Fisher.

NOTES FROM ALGERIA.

Mr. Arthur V. Liley writes from Mostaganem, province of Oran, Algeria:—On the first Saturday in February, I went to the Dahra, to visit the villages, and hold services among the French Protestants. During the past two or three years, the colonists have had rather poor harvests, and some of them have been completely ruined. Yet in several instances earthly loss has been heavenly gain, and hearts have been led to seek a more enduring substance. In two villages Roman Catholics came to the meetings, and it cheered me to hear them say how much they enjoyed what had been said.

Doubtless many of these people abstain from reading God's Word through prejudice, and refrain from attending evangelical meetings through fear: but when they know what Christian Protestantism is, they are filled with admiration. This is the case among the Spaniards. It has been our privilege to place the Word of God in their hands, and the deep interest with which they read makes us most hopeful. One woman came to us in great distress about her son. He had been reading the New Testament, and had said that it was the truth, and that the teaching of the priests was false. He also declared his intention to give up going to the Roman Catholic church, and said he had no desire to take his first communion! By putting the Gospel before her, I was enabled to remove her distress, and lead her to look to Christ instead of to ceremonies for salvation.

The children continue to come in good numbers to the Sunday-school, the shed being quite full, especially when some of the mothers are present. By means of my bicycle I have visited several villages and had interesting conversations with Arabs in the cafés, etc., as well as on the road. Recently, when riding to a village, some eight or ten Arabs were overtaken returning to their tents. That a European should stop and address them in their own tongue was surprising, but when spoken to concerning religion their astonishment seemed unbounded. After telling them what Christ had done, I asked them what was their hope of eternal life. "We don't understand much about these things," said one of the Arabs, "we are like cows, and have no one to teach us."

"No one to teach us!" Oh that the Christian Church could have heard this solemn declaration. "No one to teach us!"—thousands thus dying in ignorance of the Gospel, while in crowded England Christian workers are treading on one another's heels. New Testaments were given to these men to take to their lonely camps. In a large district like this it is utterly impossible to reach all the people, so we must distribute largely the Word of God. I have just heard of an Arab in a village I visited last year who is reading daily a Gospel left with him.

My dear wife is visiting the women in their homes, and encouraging incidents are now and again met with. They are so much under the dominion of their husbands, that it is difficult to lead them to feel that they have any right to exercise their own wills. "I have cried and prayed so much," said one woman, "I am tired of doing it, no relief comes." Such is the state of thousands of these women.

"TEMPERANCE POLICE" have been lately organised in Madras with a view to detecting drunkards, who, after dusk, resort to liquor shops and toddy taverns, and of converting them on the spot by means of persuasive words to total abstinence.

ORPHANS IN BRIXTON.

With the closing of the Palestine Exhibition, Brixton Hall has resumed its customary prosaic attire, but on one evening last week, at any rate, it was a centre of great public attraction. It was the annual gathering of the Brixton Girls' Orphanage. Since the preceding anniversary the institution had suffered a heavy loss in the death last August of Mr. Montague, husband of the much-esteemed founder and superintendent, and himself a hearty and devoted friend of the orphan. This event naturally threw its shadow over the meeting, but thankfulness was mingled with sorrow, and Mr. Montague's noble example may well be a stimulus to those who are left. As usual, the bright, healthy-looking band of girls that filled the greater part of the platform was an irresistibly powerful object-lesson as to the capital work that goes on year by year in the Barrington-road building. They looked as happy and sang as sweetly as ever. It was claimed by some speakers in the course of the evening that the Orphanage is a real "home" rather than a mere charitable institution, and the appearance and demeanour of the girls were strong corroboration of the claim. One statistical sentence from the report will give in brief the history of the work during the year:—"During the year, thirty-six additional orphans have been received into the Home, twenty-eight have been returned to their mothers on their re-marriage, or have been taken from the Institution by their friends to assist at home; thirty have been placed into situations of domestic service, and there are now 283 in the Home." It was pleasing also to hear a statement like the following:—"Several of the girls are now filling the positions of under-matrons and teachers in our own and similar institutions; others are nurses in hospitals and infirmaries, and we rejoice in the belief that many are following the Saviour."

In addition to the delightful songs of the children, the platform performances of the evening were such as would have done high credit to Exeter Hall. There were seven or eight speakers, each of whom vied with the others in sounding the praises of Mrs. Montague's stewardship, and in advocating its claims. First of all Mr. Greenwood, jun., one of the trustees, read a touching tribute to the memory of Mr. Montague. Then Mr. Gunston, another trustee, who has undertaken the onerous duties of hon. secretary, read Mrs. Montague's admirable report, and supplemented it with some warm words of his own. After that came a speech from the Chairman, Mr. Frank A. Bevan, who said he admired the work because the education of the girls, while it was thorough, was sensible and economical. No fewer than five South London ministers afterwards spoke, so that the Brixton Orphanage is certainly not without honour among its neighbours, and those who know it best. Rev. D. Herschell came from a sick room to show his sympathy, and to maintain the accumulated value of small gifts in the support of such a work. Rev. W. Skerry was practical, philosophical, and eloquent. "An orphan's cry is a common theology," he said. Rev. Carnegie Brown, as an unmistakable Scotchman, extolled the virtues of oatmeal porridge, one of the staple articles of the orphans' diet, and related some amusing incidents at the expense of Free Kirk elders. Rev. Walter Horne, referring to Mr. Montague's death, said the fight with sin and sorrow must go on though the leaders fall. Then Rev. W. R. Mowll contributed a most practical postscript to the speechifying by instructing his fellow occupants of the platform, and the audience generally, as to how they should increase the collection of £162 by £25 so as to bring it up to last year's mark. Unfortunately the balance-sheet of last year showed a deficit of nearly £500, largely owing to special repairs. Before the next annual meeting comes round we doubt not the many friends of this good work will have redressed the balance and relieved the mind of Mrs. Montague.

THE GARRISON, NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—In connection with the "Pleasant Thursday Evenings" and "Gospel Temperance Meetings" a six months' campaign was brought to a close last Thursday. Whole families have signed the pledge card during that time, as well as scores of soldiers and children. Mr. A. Draper, who has been working in the garrison for the past ten years, says this garrison is a model one for temperance. One-half of the soldiers and their wives are total abstainers, and scarcely a day passes by but someone asks for a card. On Thursday last Sir B. C. Browne gave an earnest address, the building, holding 500 people, being packed.

Rev. Dr. Ross Taylor.

FREE CHURCH, THURSO.

Few men live to have a record of sixty-six years in the ministry; fewer still spend sixty-four years in one sphere of labour; but such is the record of the venerable pastor whose portrait, taken a few months ago, is given on this page.

Walter Ross Taylor was born in the village of Cromarty, within a stone throw of Hugh Miller's house, ninety years ago. His father was a man of some local prominence, and Walter enjoyed all the advantages of a pious home and an excellent education, and left Aberdeen University with a good record for accurate scholarship.

In 1829, he was ordained in London as a minister of the Church of Scotland, the famous Edward Irving, then at the zenith of his wonderful popularity, taking part in the ordination service. For two years the young pastor laboured with all the enthusiastic energy of youth to build up a somewhat feeble church, and with such success, that he looked forward to many years of work in the metropolis. But his life's work was elsewhere, and he was destined to minister to three generations in a little-known town on the wind-swept shores of the Pentland Firth.

The living at Thurso was then in the gift of the Baronets of Ulbster, and the church becoming vacant, the patron arranged that young Taylor should preach before the congregation. For this purpose he journeyed from London, and so profound was the impression made by his first sermon, that an old elder, a man of great spirituality of mind, said as he left the church, "Arise and anoint him," The "call" addressed to him was of the most cordial nature, and he was, in 1831, "translated" to Thurso, and welcomed with Christian enthusiasm.

Thurso at that time was unlike many Scotch villages. In many parts "moderatism" reigned supreme. In the pulpits there was no fervour; no spirituality in the pews. The Evangelical party was gathering strength, but was still in an insignificant minority. Thurso was one of the exceptions. The Erskins, the Haldanes, and other notable Evangelical preachers had visited the far north, and the glow of that fervour which accompanied the movement they represented still continued. The late minister, too, belonged to the Evangelical party, and the need of spiritual preaching was felt by the whole Christianly community. Nor were they disappointed in the minister of their choice. His simple piety and manly Christian bearing endeared him to all classes, and it was soon found that the old parish church, a pre-Reformation relic, and exceedingly beautiful from an architectural point of view, could not accommodate the ever-increasing crowds who gathered on Sabbath days. A new church, the present handsome parish church, was commenced, and it, too, with a sitting capacity for well over a thousand, was filled with an eager crowd of expectant worshippers from week to week. So the work progressed; the people happy in their minister, and the minister happy in his work. But the clouds of controversy were gathering; Moderates and Evangelicals were sharply divided, and the matters at issue being deemed vital the cleavage of parties culminated in the disruption of 1843. From the first there was no doubt as to the minister of Thurso's views, and so it happened that for years much of the burden of public lecturing and organisation in the county fell into his hands. When the crisis came, and the minister left his new and beautiful church, where he had so delighted to preach the Gospel, the whole congregation left with him.

A new church, a low, roomy building, was hurriedly erected, and into it the same crowds gathered as were formerly seen in the parish church. For thirty years and more were the services conducted there, and it is a sign of the spiritual fruitfulness of that time that when the present Free Church was opened, many were reluctant to leave the old place, hallowed as it was by sacred associations and spiritual fellowship.

In 1884 the Free Assembly appointed Mr. Taylor to the dignity of Moderator, and at the same time the honorary degree of D.D. was bestowed upon him by the University of Aberdeen. The duties of the Moderator's office he discharged with grace and dignity.

He was now in his eightieth year, and by most of his friends it was supposed that his work was well nigh done. A colleague was suggested as a pressing necessity, but for eight more years he continued to do the work of a large congregation unaided and ungrudgingly. Till within the last two years he was chairman of the School Board, and took a keen interest in all educational questions. As a member of the parochial board he also watched over the interests of the poor.

A man of many labours and perennial youth and hope, it was not till 1892 that he sought assistance, and even then he had to wait two years before his people could agree on a colleague. Only in August last year was Rev. George Morrison ordained as colleague and successor. The waiting was all the more tedious as during a great part of the time Dr. Taylor was prostrated with a painful illness which prevented his taking any part in the work of the congregation. He, however, made a marvellous recovery, and was present when the junior minister was ordained and took part in the service. Since then, like a veteran resolved to die in harness, he has taken his fair share of preaching, and while rejoicing to see the executive in younger and more vigorous hands, he still loves to proclaim that Gospel which for sixty-four long years has kept around him a large and attached flock, grandfather, father and son.

A quiet uneventful life this: a life lived far away from the throb of great cities and agitated, by no storms and passions, but one that has grown and broadened and mellowed with the march of time, and in its growth influenced multitudes to lead nobler and better lives. Now, as the shadows lengthen and he waits for the close, the radiance of a well-spent youth and manhood casts a halo of honour round his snow-white head.

FAMINE IN ROUMANIA.

Dear Sir,—My companion in travel in Siberia and the Caucasus, etc., an Armenian from Baku, in Transcaucasia, had a nightly visit from the police, who examined and confiscated all his papers, amongst which some of my letters were found by which supplies were sent to the Stundists in their various places of banishment. About a week after this first visit the police appeared again, this time intending to arrest my friend. He had a very narrow escape, and was able to make his way to the north; he travelled through the whole Russian empire from the south to the north as far as Finland, and thence he travelled by steamer to Stockholm, where he met with a hospitable reception. Hearing of his arrival in Sweden I requested him to come to England. As he does not know English, we considered it best that he should go where he might be of service in the Gospel to Russians, Armenians, and Germans. He went to Bucharest in Roumania, thence to Tuleca and other towns and villages in the Dobrutscha, where he found many Russians, Armenians, and Germans, amongst whom he began to labour in the Gospel with great acceptance. There has been no harvest at all in the Dobrutscha, and my friend found the people in great distress wanting bread. By the gifts of a few friends I have been enabled to send him some money, and he has bought and distributed flour to the starving people. At the same time he began meetings for the Gospel and for prayer, and these have been continued night after night, many crying for mercy, and many finding peace and rejoicing in the Lord.

This work continues and increases; in one of the towns the Mayor at the prayer-meeting called on the people assembled, urging them to come every night, and saying, "We must all be converted to God." My friend spends all his time and money to give some relief to the poor, and the Lord blesses his testimony amongst them, making this time of distress a time of blessing to many souls. But it is not sufficient to feed the hungry—they have no seed corn and further help is urgently needed; indeed, in their case it may be truly said, Bis dat qui cito dat.

My friend has had to leave behind him his wife and four little children, who long to join him in his exile, but they have not been able to obtain a passport, although they have sent their petition for it, and there can be no cause for refusing their request.

The South of Russia has had a superabundant harvest, whilst in the Dobrutscha there has been no harvest at all. The channel needs to open between superabundance and utter want and starvation. Any gifts for this purpose will be received and forwarded by, Yours sincerely,

F. W. Baedeker.

THE CALENDAR BIBLE READING UNION is a band of those who wish to encourage one another in the daily reading of the Scriptures. Members are provided with permanent calendars, by following which the New Testament can be read through in a year, and the Old in two years. "Helpful hints," or daily notes on the portions read, with maps and plates, are supplied. Particulars may be had from the secretary, Mr. Horace B. Wilson, 39, Frederick-road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

MRS. M. B. INGALLS, the devoted American missionary in Burmah, writes me of blessing on the work she has taken up among the railway employés in Burmah. "The Lord has touched the hearts of two railway men, and they speak boldly for Jesus. The Lord's Spirit is at work among the Burmans, and this month a whole village came out on our side, and the seed of twenty years ago has burst forth. I have a great work to do for Burmans, and it is only with the aid of foreign (English) friends that I can do this extra for railway people. Please send me all the papers and books you can. The Calendars (Scripture sheet almanacks) are up in the station-houses." As the railway men are all English or Scotch, Mrs. Ingalls may well look to us for help in this work she has undertaken among them when already overburdened with her own great work among the Burmans. Her address is, Mrs. M. E. Ingalls, Thong, Zé, S. Burman. M. Wishart.

A TRUE STORY.

Sent by Miss A. Hume, 1, Spencer-terrace, New Kilmainham, Dublin. Published by G. A. Soulsby, 122, Wardour-street, W.

All alone in the evening grey,
Sick and dying poor Hannah lay,
Through the broken pane the cold wind swept,
Poor Hannah shivered and moaned and wept.
But it was not cold, and it was not pain,
That made her shiver and moan again—
She did not say, "My pain is sore,"
But, "Where shall I be when all is o'er?"

For Hannah remembered the years gone by,
And she said, "A sinner—a sinner am I—
All black and fearful the sins appear,
That I had forgotten for many a year;
And thousands, thousands, they come to mind,
There is hell before and sin behind.
The Lord is holy, and just, and true,
And what He hath said He will surely do.

He hath for sin an awful doom,
A lake of fire beyond the tomb;
And my soul is black with the sins of years,
They cannot be washed away with tears,
And sure it is vain to pray and cry,
He cannot hear such a sinner as I.
I am going—going—to stand alone,
Before the Lord on his awful throne!"

Bright and glad as the stars came out,
With many a laugh and many a shout,
Jack and Will in the garden played,
And they heeded not the noise they made;
But the neighbour calling said, "Children dear,
A woman is sick in that house so near;
There, where the broken pane you see,
She is lying as ill as she can be.

She soon must die, and you see 'tis best
You should be still and let her rest."
Then in a moment they were still,
For tender hearts had both Jack and Will;
And they sat and looked at the casement lone,
Till the stars shone out and the day was gone.
Then Jack said, "Will, she will go to Heaven,
If she has had her sins forgiven.

I learnt at school that when Jesus died
The door of Heaven was opened wide,
Because He was punished Himself for sin,
So now if we die we can all go in.
Of our sins there will not a word be said
For Jesus Christ was punished instead;
And if she believes He loves her so,
Beyond the stars her soul will go.

He will lead her in through the golden door,
And she will be happy for evermore."
Then Will said, "Jack, that is all quite true—
But does she know it as well as you?
What Jesus did we have both been taught,
But some know this and some do not.
Oh, Jack, maybe she has never known
What it is that the Lord has done!"

Then Jack said, "If you would help me, Will,
I would climb up to the window sill,
And through the hole I would call and say,
'Jesus washes our sins away.'"
The neighbour said, when her work was done,
"It may be Hannah is all alone,
And, oh, it's an awful thing to lie
Too ill to live and afraid to die;
So just to sit with her I will go;
But how to help her I do not know."
So the neighbour went, and she heard no moan,
And she thought, "Poor Hannah is dead and gone."
She lighted the candle with fear and dread,
And stooped to see if Hannah was dead.
But there she lay with her face so bright!
It shone with glory, and not with light,

And she said, "Oh, neighbour, the Lord is good!
He has washed me white in his precious blood!
My sins are gone from before his face,
And He has prepared a glorious place,
Where those He loves with Himself shall be,
And to that sweet home He is calling me.
Oh, neighbour, here in the dark I lay,
I felt so guilty I could not pray,

And all my sins like a mountain stood
Before the terrible throne of God.
Then, all in a moment, sweet and clear,
A voice spake loud, though none was near;
Like an angel speaking I heard it say,
'Jesus washes our sins away.'
And then did the words come, sweet and low,
That I had forgotten long ago.

I once heard tell in the years gone by
How Jesus came on the Cross to die,
And there He hung in the darkness dread,
With a crown of thorns on his holy head,
And the old, old words came back to me,
'He bore our sins on the cursèd tree.'
Yes, it was true that mine He bore,
So the guilt is gone and the judgment o'er.

And more than that, if He died for me,
What must the love of Jesus be!
He in his home of glory waits,
To see me enter the golden gates;
Whilst I lay moaning in black despair
His heart was longing to have me there—
And oh for the welcome I soon shall know!
No words can tell how I long to go!"

And so, ere many a day was done,
There was joy in the home beyond the sun,
For Hannah had entered the golden door,
To dwell with her Saviour for evermore.
God saith that all who to Jesus come
He in his love will welcome home.
The Lord is holy, and just, and true,
And what He hath said He will surely do.

TABEETHA MISSION, JAFFA.

Miss Grierson, describing the great storm of November last, says:—"It was accompanied by such floods of rain as have not been known within the memory of any of the inhabitants. On Saturday, November 24, we were aroused by an alarm of leaking in several of the rooms, and presently most of us were astir dragging out mattresses from the bedrooms and laying them in rows on the hall floor, where we settled ourselves as best we could for the rest of the night. Meanwhile the wind and rain increased in fury, and when we rose again we found ourselves in a woeful plight. The rain forced its way at every crevice through the east end of the house, until the girls' dining room below and the room above it were literally flooded. Of course, to the children it was all great fun, but to us it was a more serious matter.

"The wall between our garden and our Moslem neighbour's collapsed, destroying about £50 worth of his orange trees. It will involve an expenditure of about £100 to rebuild the wall. Whilst we were mourning over this calamity our attention was diverted by a fresh danger. A cry was raised that the tamarisk trees which shade our front garden were about to fall against the wall. A rush was made with ropes, saws, and axes, and several of the larger branches were lopped off, and the trees, relieved from the pressure, stood erect, but in a bare and forlorn condition. The next day the storm had spent its fury, but it left terrible traces. Many houses had collapsed, others were in such a dangerous condition that they had to be pulled down, while the tales of distress and damage were endless.

"Our premises have not yet fully recovered from the effects of the damp, and we have to leave the garden wall a melancholy ruin until funds can be raised to repair it. Strange to say, in spite of much exposure to cold and damp, especially during the disturbed nights, there has been no outbreak of fever, nor such colds as might have been expected; but the sufferings among the poor have been great."

Communications regarding this work may be addressed to Miss E. Walker Arnott, 24, St. Bernard's Crescent, Edinburgh; or to Miss Walker Arnott, Jaffa, Syria.

OPEN-AIR WORK IN IRELAND.

From information furnished by friends connected with some of the principal evangelistic agencies in Ireland, we learn some interesting facts respecting open-air preaching in the sister isle. The Salvation Army appears to take the lead in this form of missionary zeal, and conducts 293 meetings every week in the streets of Dublin and the northern towns throughout the year. This is a remarkable fact and it is pleasant to learn that although met at first and for some considerable time with shocking violence, the Army now is enabled to conduct this large number of street services without opposition.

The interesting meetings and Scripture sales promoted by the Irish Church Missions in the fairs and markets is of large, hopeful, and arresting import. General Haig, in his recent speech at the annual meeting, stated that last year was the most successful ever yet enjoyed by the society. This is very gratifying, and shows that if Christian men and ministers in Ireland had more courage, large numbers of the people who never hear the Gospel might in this way be reached.

The recent report of the Open-air Mission for Ireland gives additional evidence of the possibilities which open-air work in Ireland offer. The services in Cork, Galway, and Athlone are now conducted every week irrespective of the weather, and with little or no opposition from the roughs. A clergyman who recently was present at the preaching in the market place in Galway states that it would be impossible for a congregation in any church to give more reverent attention than the considerable crowd gave on that occasion. In this town, as in Athlone, the Spirit of God has wonderfully rested upon the preachers, and a large number of persons have been won for the Lord Jesus Christ. In Cork the new mayor, Alderman Meade, frequently is present at the preaching, in order to prevent interference with the preachers.

The City of Dublin strikingly illustrates the remarkable change in public feeling in Ireland in respect to open-air preaching. A few years ago an open-air preacher, even in Phœnix Park, had to be protected by sometimes as many as forty police constables, but now an excellent service is held every Sunday afternoon in Foster Place, off College Green, the most central and handsomest part of the city. An orderly audience listens with attention and the protection of the one or two constables in attendance is never required. In addition to this meeting frequent street services are successfully held at Beresford-place, Clonmel-street, Warren-street, and other centres.

The six open-air meetings held every Sunday in Arklow, and the all-day meeting conducted every fair day, demonstrate what may be done in the open air in Ireland by men of faith and courage.

AN OPEN-AIR CAMPAIGN.

Dear Sir,—The summer work of this mission is now about to be organized, and we are looking to the Lord, and to his people, to enable us to make it more blessed and successful than ever before. We may well seek to "Go out quickly," since the Master is so plainly saying, "Behold I come quickly."

We shall be happy to hear from clergymen and ministers, superintendents of missions and others residing either in town or country, who desire the services of our open-air evangelists for a succession of meetings, or from Saturday to Monday. It is the earnest desire of the committee that this mission may become increasingly the handmaid of the churches, and the helper of organized Christian effort everywhere.

Our plan of week-evening services, by which a company of earnest men is sent forth nightly to some needy district or suburb of the metropolis will, we trust, be in extended operation. Many local churches and missions have been quite revived and refreshed by a series of such visits, and their own open-air workers have been greatly encouraged. I shall be glad to hear from any such again, that we may know where best to concentrate our forces.—Yours faithfully, Frank Cockrem, Secretary.

THE LATE DR. DALE.

REMINISCENCES.

The religious Press teemed last week with references to Dr. Dale, and afforded, in the fulness of recollections by personal friends, a view of him which all followers of his Lord and Master will be thankful to have. His words to Rev. F. W. Macdonald, written in June, 1894, and published in The Methodist Recorder, have a very pathetic and solemn tone, resembling the words of many other workers when they have had time, on a sick-bed, to review their life-work. He wrote :—

"What you have said has sent my thoughts back into regions where, during the last few months, I have passed through a great deal of suffering; for I have been sorely exercised with thoughts as to whether the extent to which for many years I engaged in political and municipal agitation was consistent with perfect fidelity to Christ, and the ministry to which I hope He has called me. I meant right. I am not sure that I did right. Nor am I quite clear that I did wrong. It may be that God did not call me to what I feel is the ideal ministry—a ministry wholly consecrated to the direct achievement of the highest ends. But I must await the judgment."

WHY HE READ HIS SERMONS.

Dr. Parker relates how he once asked him why he read his sermons, to which he replied, "My command of words is such that as a young man I could preach standing on my head; to be condensed is my object in writing my sermons; if I spoke extemporaneously I should never sit down." If Dr. Dale's sermons are carefully perused, it will be seen that they are constructed as spoken sermons; his congregation is before him; his feeling glows as if he were actually addressing them; and the turn of the sentences is as easy as if he were extemporising. We greatly question, however, if he succeeded in abiding firmly by his manuscript.

HIS MAGNANIMITY.

The testimony to his magnanimity, his greatness of soul, his freedom from censoriousness, is very unanimous and strong. Dr. Parker says that in his freest conversation he was never censorious, and that he never knew him utter one wounding word.

"On the contrary, I have known him speak graciously of some whom others ignorantly and peevishly condemned. He had no gift of worrying. Once I asked him what to do in the case of a man who was a 'heretic' and had settled near me. 'Call on him,' said he; 'he is good, even if he is not what we call exactly orthodox.'"

Dr. Simon, of the United College, Bradford, was, at one time, in an exceptionally good position for testing his character, and he says:—

"How little there was in him of the disposition either to talk one down; or to talk one out; or to silence one by unpleasantly suggestive silence; or to overawe by learned allusions and big names, which some prominent men display—others as well, as I can testify! The utmost one might sometimes notice was a gentle smile of dissent, which passed away before it had time to become unpleasant.

"In two cases, he talked over with me a few points of the book he was about to publish, and nothing could be more gracious than the way in which he welcomed little criticisms and suggestions. That sort of thing is not by any means always a pleasure; but in his case, as far as my experience goes, it was."

CHRIST AS HIS LORD AND MASTER.

Dr. Barrett, of Norwich, relates a very solemn incident:—"Shortly after the serious attack of illness, of two years ago, I think, I called at Dr. Dale's house, as I was passing through Birmingham, to see how he was, and then he told me of the depression from which he had suffered during a part of his illness. Even the thought of Christ as the Saviour of sinners seemed powerless to comfort him, but he said: 'I remembered He was my Lord and Master as well as my Saviour, and the light and the power came. I wanted'—and the experience was singularly characteristic of the man—'something stronger, harder, on which to lean, and I found it in the thought of the ownership of Christ. I belonged to Him; that was enough. I knew it; He would not let me perish.'"

We believe that this is not an unusual experience with believers who know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ; for through grace we lay hold on truth and faithfulness and justice. Instances of it are in the Scriptures; "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"

THE MYSTERY OF PAIN.

When the end was approaching he was asked—"Do you not feel the mystery of death?" to which he replied, "No, not the mystery of death, but the mystery of pain." The last words he ever wrote were part of a sermon on "Unworldliness."

"Unworldliness does not consist in the most rigid and conscientious observance of any external rules of conduct; but in the spirit and temper and in the habit of living created by the vision of God, by constant fellowship with Him, by a personal and vivid experience of the greatness of the Christian Redemption, and the settled purpose to do and to will all that God wills, always, in all things, and at all costs, and by the power of a great hope, the full assurance that, after our mortal years are spent, there is a larger, fuller, richer, loftier life in——"

Dr. Fairbairn, who quoted the words in his funeral sermon at Carr's Lane Chapel, added: "There it ends—'in'—the ineffable, the unspeakable. Shall we say—'in the bosom of God' where now he dwells?"

OUR NEEDS IN CHRISTIAN WORK.

What we specially need in all Christian work is a fuller knowledge of God and his truth, and a deeper sympathy with the men and women whom we would help. Our life must open on both sides—on this side to the vision of God, and on that side to the wants of our fellow-men. Truth never seems so sacred as when we come in sight of its true uses; and men never seem so well worth living for as when we see how much they need the truth. And a life is only useful and beautiful when it stands between the vision of God and the needy lives of men, understanding both.

When we look back to the men who have taught us most, and study their character, we find that the real secret of their power lay in the harmonious blending of the knowing and the loving powers in their nature; on the opening of their nature on both sides, so that truth entered in freely here, and we freely there. This truth finds its highest illustration in the life of Him who called Himself the Son of Man. He who was and is full of grace and truth, combined perfectly the highest fellowship with his Father with the hardest and the most minute service of man. So He comes down from the Mount of Transfiguration, and takes up instantly the cure of the poor lunatic in the valley; or He descends from the hill where He had been praying to save his disciples on the lake; or He turns his back on the comforting angel in Gethsemane, that He might give Himself into the hands of the soldiers who were to lead Him to the cross. He who is our example, as well as our Saviour, has shown us that the secret of power lies in fellowship with God and sympathy with man.

The indispensable prerequisite of all Christian work is communion with God. For one thing it is the renewal of our vision of the verities in which we trust, the recourse for ourselves to the realities which we desire others should know. Truth seems vague, and we are weak and frivolous, until it becomes a personal conviction to us. And what is equal in persuasive power to the simple utterance of our own intense convictions? If a truth is to be infused by us into other minds, it must be fused by

THE HEAT OF OUR PERSONAL EXPERIENCE.

In this lay the power of the prophet. Hearing the voice of God speaking upon some matter of public interest, and that voice alone, he felt compelled to proclaim what pressed so irresistibly upon his own spirit. And the power of the Apostles lay in the fact that they could say to the men to whom they spoke; "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us, and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." It is so still. There must be the conviction of the truth of those things which we proclaim; and the realisation of the fact that our hearers need to have these things said to them, in order to be saved from the evils of time and the perdition of eternity. Mightier than all arguments, and penetrating into a deeper sphere than that of the understanding, is the simple statement that we have had an experience of God, and have a message from Him to those to whom we speak in his name.

Communion with God is also the source of all our power. The spiritual results of Christian work depend on what we are; and what we are depends on what we receive; and what we receive depends on the depth and reality of our communion with God. What we specially need in Christian work is not less organisation, but more force. It is possible to have too heavy machinery for the boiler power. And in church work there is frequently which is quite useless, not because things are not well adjusted and adapted, but because spiritual force is wanting in the workers. And there is no real spiritual force in any man, however earnest and active, except so far as he is strengthened with all might by God's Spirit in the inner man. But if we have communion with God, He will not only show us what we ought to do, but will give us power to do it. The gracious assurance is: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary, and they shall walk, and not faint."

Communion with God is the root of the truest and purest sympathy with men. Instead of withdrawing us from fellowship with our brethren, it enables us more fully and clearly to understand what they need. It at once supplies a standard by which to measure the greatness of man's need, and a motive for laying the pain of that upon our hearts, as if it were our own. He has looked at the things of God to little purpose who has not learned how bad and how sad the world is, and how God, bending over it in love, would have all men to be saved. The revelation that the Christian receives when in fellowship with God enables him to understand the needs of men; and then that revelation falling upon the many mirrors of men's various needs and natures, gives new interpretations and illuminations.

The privilege of the Christian is to stand between the vision of God and the needs of men, not as a screen, but as an atmosphere through which truth comes all radiant and beautiful. And there is no greater happiness in all the world than for a man to love Christ for the mercy Christ has shown him, and then to open his whole heart outward and help to save his brethren's souls with the same salvation in which he rejoices for himself. We cannot separate these two things in Christian service. We must not only understand men's needs, and pity them in their sad condition; we must have a revelation from God to declare that which will meet their needs. On the other hand, it will not do to say that we have seen God's face and got a message from Him, and then to act as if God and we were alone in the universe. It is only when we strive to help others that we understand the richness of God's blessing to ourselves.

It is only when we go to God and receive from him light and power that we can help others. And if we ascend the mount of vision, as the Spirit can ascend, and look upon the grace and glory of God, we shall carry with us the reflection of his brightness to illuminate and vivify the common associations and the every-day affairs of life. We shall come away from our fellowship with God, alive at the centre, and all around the circumference of our nature, to enter more fully into the sorrows of our fellows, and to work more earnestly for God in the world.

MRS. BAEYERTZ IN PAISLEY.

The success of Mrs. Baeyertz as an evangelist in Paisley has been gratifying. The meetings have been crowded from the start, and although at the time of writing only one week of the Mission has gone, already about 150 have professed decision for Christ, and large numbers of Christian people have confessed to spiritual quickening in the Divine life. The meetings have been held in the Free High Church, capable of seating about 1500. Some 2000 must have been in it on Friday evening, when Mrs. Baeyertz gave an address on "The Passover." She has been asked to re-deliver this, as many that evening could not get into the church. One of her most effective addresses was that given to women only, fifty of whom at the close, in the inquiry-room, openly confessed Christ. The address to men only was very able, and being based on the story of the rich man and Lazarus, dealt with many of the infidel views which hoodwink sinners. The Bible readings in the afternoon have been transferred from the hall, which is seated for 300, to the church the area of which will likely be filled this week.

CHILDREN'S PICTURE LEAFLETS.

The provision of attractively-prepared Gospel literature for children of different nationalities is one of the most important branches of the work of the Children's Special Service Mission. In connection with this agency a special appeal has been issued, and from that appeal we make some extracts that will speak for themselves:—

"The Children's Picture Leaflets have now been printed in fifty languages. In some of the Indian languages we have been enabled to bring out a series of about a hundred leaflets, and in Japanese we have as many as ninety-six, of several of which we have issued a second edition. In the European languages we have a series of fifty-six in French and in German, and nearly as many in seven or eight other languages. The total amount spent since the commencement of the work in 1875 has been, in round figures, about £10,000, and the total number of leaflets printed in the fifty languages about fifteen millions. The committee feel that the progress hitherto made, and the great needs of the work, fully justify them now in asking the friends of the Children's Special Service Mission for a sum of £3000, which would be sufficient to provide about five millions more of the leaflets.

"We are arranging for a series of pictures of Bible subjects and Eastern scenes which will be specially suitable for India and the East, and this will open a large field for the extension of the work. We have no idea in England of the store set on such literature by the children in lands less favoured than our own. A missionary in India remarked that a single leaflet was as much valued by a native boy or girl as a half-crown book would be by an English child. A little Karen girl in Burmah said of the leaflets: 'They are very good, they stir up our hearts very much.'

"Urgent requests come from all parts of the Continent of Europe and from very many places in the mission-field for a larger supply of these publications. It is found that they attract children to the Sunday-schools, that they open a way for a visitation of the homes, and that they are an invaluable means of leaving the glad tidings of salvation in a permanent form in remote places where the missionary or evangelist can only make a passing call. In many countries they are regularly distributed in connection with the branches of the Scripture Union, so that while the Gospel message is put before the young people, they are encouraged to read God's Word daily for themselves."

Mr. Josiah Spiers, 13A, Warwick-lane, E.C., the chairman of the foreign sub-committee of the Mission, will gladly send a copy of the appeal (which is strikingly illustrated), and also specimen copies of the leaflet in different languages, to any friends interested in the good work.

HOME OF INDUSTRY WORKERS.

The workers' meeting, like similar gatherings at this time, was marked by the absence of many who usually attend, owing to the prevalence of influenza in London, Suffering is all around; but we believe it is being over-ruled and blessed, many thereby are being brought into closer communion with their Lord, and are experiencing deeper longing for his speedy return. The evening was one long to be remembered for the refreshing that came to all hearts, as Pastor Fuller Gooch endeavoured to lift our thoughts into a fuller comprehension of the living God, and the life that is life indeed (1 Tim. vi. 19, R.V.).

Miss Macpherson asked prayer for four young lady candidates now leaving us: two in connection with the North African Mission, and two about to be sent by the Baptist Zenana Mission to India. Pray for these, who will soon be learning the difficult languages and be at work among the heathen. The evening closed with a deeply interesting account by Mrs. Walker, of the C.P.A., of her recent visits to Australia, China, Japan, and India, where Miss Gurney and she had the joy of opening many fresh centres of mission work among the police, both English and foreign, and had many opportunities of making known the glad tidings of salvation.—S.

THE FRENCH PRESIDENT.—President Faure (says Mrs. Crawford) speaks English like an Englishman, reads English papers, has adopted Cobden's teachings, and if he were not a Frenchman by birth and a Republican by circumstances and choice, he would gladly live under the mild and just rule of Queen Victoria.

MR. MOODY'S INSTITUTE, CHICAGO.

During the year 1894, our schools received some help from the readers of your paper, and I wish to express to them our heartfelt thanks for their interest in our work, and to give herewith a brief statement of what is being done and positions now held by former students.

There are now nearly 300 young men and women in training in Chicago. Every night witnesses their presence in a large number of missions in different parts of the city, while many lowly homes are made more cheerful and bright by the systematic visitation of the young ladies of the Institute, who spend their afternoons in house-to-house visitation, carrying the glad news of a Saviour born, a Father's love, and a Christian sympathy for the lost.

The winter has been an exceedingly hard one for many poor people who have been idle during a large part of the year, owing to the disturbed condition of Chicago, brought on by the strike of last summer. As a consequence, the opportunity to present the Gospel seems more favourable, and a rich harvest is sure to be gathered.

Of those who formerly attended the Institute, 153 are pastors or pastors' assistants in sixteen denominations; sixty-nine are home missionaries; sixty-seven are foreign missionaries; twenty are secretaries of Young Men's or Young Women's Christian Associations; twenty are employed by Sunday-school Boards; ninety are evangelists; twenty-five are superintendents of city missions; fifteen are teachers in educational institutions; and 140 are pursuing their studies in theological seminaries and medical schools for home and foreign work; and thus there are, with those now at the Institute, 902 men and women at work night and day, the year round. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman has become vice-president of the Institute, and we are hoping this will be a signal year in the history of our work.

"A HUSBAND TO THE WIDOW."

Some months ago a brother lawyer, and at the same time a brother in Jesus, spent a night in my house in happy converse about the Master's service. The day after he had gone I found an envelope on the dresser, closed, and containing a coin which I guessed to be a sovereign, upon which was inscribed in pencil: "For one of the Lord's own—I think a poor widow: you will soon find her, for the Lord has constrained me to give."

I carried that envelope about in my pocket for a fortnight, but no special directions came. I then laid it on my dressing-table, and it became covered with other papers. There it remained, forgotten, until a week ago. That evening, having need of a certain letter, I went upstairs, and on clearing the dressing-table picked up the forgotten envelope. With a smile on my face, I said to myself as I read the inscription, "Brother A——'s widow has not turned up yet; I will just write and suggest that he should allow me to use my discretion in applying the money." Instantly came a prompting: "Put it in your pocket, and if no widow appears within two days, then write." I did so.

Next morning, instead of riding direct to my office, I ran down to the book-room. As I approached it, an old lady in deep mourning passed. I went round to the back of the premises and was speaking to a friend when this old lady appeared at the door and asked if we had a room to let. I said No, and she retired. As I came out I saw her repass the lane and go into the book-room. I mounted my bicycle and had ridden some fifty yards when the suggestion forced itself upon me, "Is not that the widow for whom that sovereign was intended?" I paid no heed, but rode on, but the question repeated itself, so I said, "Well, I will go and see."

Returning to the book-room I shook hands with the old lady, ascertained that she had just recently lost her husband, and was almost destitute. In answer to my question, "How do you support yourself?" she replied, "The C—— Society pay the rent of my room, and my Heavenly Father will see that I do not want." "True," said I, holding out the envelope, "see, there He has sent you a sovereign from an unknown friend." When I told her the circumstances she had to leave the room to hide her tears, and I understood the reason of the specialness of the inscription on the envelope.

TO CHRISTIAN CYCLISTS.

Dear Sir,—May I suggest an idea which seems to me might be an effective means for good, and which might very easily be carried out? We are just at the commencement of the cycling season; why should not the Christian cyclists of our land bind together to do some real good this summer by forming branches in different centres, and riding out together ready, if opportunity arose, to do some evangelistic work in this country?

I would suggest that in each centre some Christian cyclists should commence at once, and get those who would join them to form a branch, and learn some good taking hymns in parts, which they could sing when riding along the road. How sweet it would be to hear a branch of the "C.C.C." sweeping through a village to the tune of "Follow, follow, I will follow Jesus," and no one could say they were causing an obstruction, for they would indeed be "moving on." Then on certain days different branches might meet at some prearranged spot and have a little convention of their own.

The "C.C.C." might later on form a central committee and arrange for evangelistic work on a still larger scale, touring abroad, for instance; and a badge might be adopted by which members might recognise each other on the roads. But that is in the future; at present those who will take up the idea, should begin work at once by forming branches, learning hymns, and organising for a good summer campaign.—Yours faithfully,

W. S. Walsh (Curate).

Derriaghy, Dunmurry, co. Antrim.

N.B.—If there are any Belfast cyclists who would like to consult together as to the forming of branches, I will gladly meet them with my machine at Dunmurry Post Office between 3 and 4 p.m. on Saturday, March 30.

Mr. W. R. Wright, 79, Carlyle-road, Manor Park, Essex, writes that some friends in that neighbourhood have formed a Christian Cycling Club for work in the villages of Essex. He would be glad to hear from any Christian cyclists who can help.

IN THE CANADIAN NORTH-WEST.

Rev. Gilbert Cook, Staggville Mission, Kinosota, P.O., Manitoba, in a letter to kind friends who last year remembered his temporal needs, affords a glimpse of the hard life led by missionaries in the Canadian North-West. He says: "I thank you for your kindness to my motherless children, in sending so many articles for winter's use. I have five children at home besides Kitty, who has the whole management of household affairs, and between cooking and washing, making butter and milking four cows, she has no time to make dresses for the girls or clothes for the three boys, so that anything in ready-made clothing is very acceptable to us.

"It is so refreshing to get a few lines of sympathy and Christian feeling from you from time to time. We have been in our new house for more than two months; in fact, ever since the winter commenced. It is rather small, but if it had been larger I would not have finished it. No cold can well get in the building; it has a double floor with paper between, and a shingled roof with the same material between the shingles and the sheeting. It is nicely lathed and plastered, and painted on the outside."

Mr. Cook's correspondent in this country is Miss Carpenter, The Vicarage, Compton Bishop, Axbridge, who will be glad to give particulars to any friends who may be interested.

THE ANNUAL "THANK-OFFERING DAY" was held at the East London Tabernacle on Monday last week. Mr. Archibald Brown was in his vestry from 7 a.m. to 7.30 p.m. to receive offerings from those who had reason to be grateful to God the place was ever built. The donors averaged more than one a minute for twelve hours. At the close of the day rather over £450 had been brought in, the largest offering yet brought in on the one day. The following analysis of the gifts was heard with interest at the closing meeting:—In cheques, £115 6s.; bank notes, £45; postal orders, £9 3s. 3d.; sovereigns, £137; half-sovereigns, £56 10s.; 5s. pieces, £3 5s.; 4s. pieces, £1 4s.; half-crowns, £39 12s. 6d.; florins, £22 8s.; shillings, £17 16s.; small silver and copper, £3 4s.; total £450 8s. 9d.

CONFERENCE IN QUEEN'S HALL.

A three days' conference was held in Queen's Hall, Langham-place, in the early days of this week on the threefold topic of Biblical inspiration, the condition of the Jews, and the Second Advent of our Lord. The audiences were not large. On Monday forenoon there were addresses by Sir Robert Phayre (chairman), Mr. Liesching, on the inspiration of the Scriptures, and on the same subject by Mr. W. G. Carr. In the afternoon, with Mr. J. E. Mathieson as chairman, Rev. John Wilkinson spoke on his favourite topic, the Jews and their claims on Christians; while Rev. J. Lindsay Young dealt with the doctrine of the Second Advent as a Divine necessity. A third meeting was held in the evening, when addresses were given by Dr. R. Anderson and Dr. Bullinger.

On Tuesday forenoon the first speaker was Mr. Lindsay Young, who expounded very earnestly the practical influence of our Lord's Second Advent with reference to the saved and the unsaved. He was followed by Rev. Sholto Douglas, whose subject was the character of the Antichrist. Referring to the fact of his residence in Scotland, Mr. Douglas said that the doctrines of the Second Advent were as little thought of there, practically, as in China or Japan. Not long since, however, forty-four ministers had met in his own house to consider this question, and he regarded this as a good sign of awaking interest in the northern part of the kingdom. The speaker cited passages from ancient writers, including Origen and Jerome, and from Gibbon, showing that Advent doctrines are not the novelties that some would suppose. As to the character of the Antichrist, Mr. Douglas declared that he would be a man; would be possessed of diabolical power; would assume the prerogatives of the Godhead; would be accompanied by a false prophet; would cause his image to be set up and worshipped, etc. The speaker could not believe that the Church should pass through all the tribulation that will then be on the earth. The Antichrist, further, would not be a repulsive personality, but would so ingratiate himself that he would be almost universally obeyed. At the close of his striking recital Mr. Douglas warned his hearers against cherishing the spirit of Antichrist—the earthly spirit which dethrones God and sets us up sin and self in his place.

A more detailed notice of the closing day's meetings will be given in our next issue.

CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW.

These sailor brethren, who hail from Miss Child's Welcome, Ratcliff Highway, held a second series of meetings at the Soldiers' Home, Winchester. The large hall was packed to listen to utterances as tender, picturesque, dramatic, and pathetic, as they were sound in Gospel principles. "I often get up to my eyes in water," was the expressive way in which one jolly-looking sailor denoted a sudden tearfulness that overcame him when his heart was melted by the wondrous love of the saving Christ of God. He and his brethren managed often to get the bulk of their congregation "up to the eyes in water," as well as themselves, as they told out with power and feeling the old, old story of the Cross, and the power of Jesus to save to the uttermost.

How many of the readers of The Christian, I wonder, have had the privilege of a visit from the C.S.L.B. Crew? Those who have not had a visit, would certainly do well to invite them to their hall, their chapel, their parish-room, or anywere else. They bring blessing with them; they leave blessing behind them; they warm, and quicken, and freshen the thoughts and hearts of the workers to whom they come. May God bless their work, and that of their devoted leader, Miss Child, and give them open doors, and a rich blessing.

SANCTIFYING GRACE is inseparable from pardoning grace; yea, I will venture to say, that the gift of the sanctifying Spirit is a part of our pardon executed and applied. For a part of the punishment of sin was spiritual death, or the loss of God's image. "He hath quickened you together with Christ, having forgiven all your trespasses" (Col. 2. 13). When God pardoneth He sanctifieth, and createth us anew, that we may be fit for his service; so that we are renewed by the Spirit, as well as recovered out of the snares of the devil.—Manton.

CHRISTIAN PATRIOTISM.

By Dr. J. OSWALD DYKES.*

If ever that decaying virtue called patriotism is to lose itself in a large or more cosmopolitan charity, it must be on a Christian, not (as some noble spirits are vainly dreaming) on a communistic or democratic basis. Socialism has no lord of the conscience to substitute for Jesus Christ. Where the conscience owns no lord, there can be no real loyalty; and without loyalty to the chief, love for the brotherhood can be at best a sentiment, not a principle.

It is sad to see how many of the best hearts in Europe are to-day groping after the foundations of a new civil order, in which all men shall be brothers and no man shall wrong his fellow's rights, while yet they cast off the very name of Him in whom alone these two principles of love and order, of freedom and authority, meet and kiss. But there is something sadder still to see. It is a Christian Church so rent into rival morsels by theological and sectarian animosty, that instead of practically demonstrating to the distracted peoples where to seek for the true secret of human brotherhood, it rather repels from Christ and from his faith those whose hearts are most passionate for peace and fellowship.

No man who judges Christianity only by the existing churches of Christ, take them all in all throughout Christendom, can rest on them his hopes for the unification of the world into a federation of equal, free, and peaceful men, mutually respecting each other's rights. The ecclesiastical organisations of Christendom have caricatured the divine idea of the kingdom of God. The spirit of schism is the cause of our torn and helpless and un-Christ-like Christianity—that spirit which puts orthodoxy into the place of faith, ritual in the room of love, and substitutes its esprit de corps—its own petty self-conceit—for the catholic fraternity of Jesus Christ. In a return of the churches to true catholicity—which means a practical recognition of one another as fellow-members in that one body, which is Christ—lies the return of strength to the Church.

Then, when Jerusalem shall not envy Antioch, nor Antioch vex Jerusalem, when churches that are poor in this world are rich in faith, and, those that are rich in this world are "ready to distribute, willing to communicate" when visible churches are felt to be knit together by invisible bonds of love and helpfulness—then, if ever, will men learn that to be a Christian is to be free of a universal, because spiritual commonwealth, all whose citizens are one, all equal and all loving.

* From Jerusalem to Antioch.—Hodder & Stoughton.

THE MISSIONARY BUREAU.

The committee of the Missionary Bureau are greatly cheered by the tidings that have reached them concerning the many students who have lately left them to proceed to foreign spheres. Messrs. Tilden, Eldridge, and Chapman, who sailed eighteen months ago for North Borneo, are now thoroughly acclimatised, and are constantly making fresh itinerations in districts hitherto unreached by the Gospel. Mr. Gale, in Durban, has seen much blessing amongst the Zulus. He is pushing forward into new regions, from free choice, wholly unsupported by any society.

Encouraging news has also been received from Messrs. Cullen and Cherritt in Assam, and from Mr. Crawford in Balaghat. Although all three have been greatly tried by the unhealthy climate and surroundings, God has graciously preserved them, and they are active and zealous in his service.

Miss Robinson, who recently went to Pondicherry in connection with the Bureau, reports already a work of grace amongst the daughters of the French officials there, who, although Roman Catholics, gladly attend her Bible classes.

The Missionary Training Home at Kennington is proving a most valuable auxiliary in the work of the Bureau. Not only does it provide just the training which these young men require, but it also enables the committee to discover, before the candidates leave for the field, those who are disqualified for foreign work by physical or other defects.

Mr. S. H. V. Halliwell, one of the students, who has completed his brief course with great satisfaction to the superintendent, has received an invitation to join a mission at Likabula, Nyassaland, to join Mr. Deeath, who is labouring in the Gospel there. The committee appeal to the Christian public to supply the sum of £36 required for the expenses of his passage. Miss Carter is shortly leaving the Hon. Alice Baring's Training Home for the same sphere, introduced to missionary work by the Bureau. Another student from the college, a missionary carpenter, will also probably proceed to the same sphere.

The Missionary Bureau is greatly in need of the financial support of the Lord's people. Gifts should be addressed to Major-General Haig, the treasurer, 186, Aldersgate-street.

VILLAGE WORK.

Dear Sir,—Seeing a notice in The Christian of Hackney Y.M.C.A. work in the villages, I give a short account of a visit two members paid to villages with myself and a local friend last June.

It was past 3 p.m. on Saturday when they reached us by rail, when we started for a long evening's work, preaching and visiting in three or four villages. One of the Hackney men spoke for probably an hour through one large village. It was quite late when we reached our lodgings.

Next morning, after quiet worship with our local friends, three of us started with pony and chaise to two small neglected villages, while the other spent the morning in the village, visiting from house to house. On meeting for mid-day meal each had some good news to tell. One new in the work told gladly of two or three cases of blessing he had met with. Starting home by another route, we came to one village where we seem never to go without blessing, and found it again. Passing on, we had a nice time with a farmer by the roadside, and in the next village one climbed a ladder to cheer an aged saint in bed. Another had a congregation at cross roads, loath to go, and several souls apparently received the Lord, as we told them of a waiting Saviour.

At 5.45 p.m. another village cross roads was reached, and we stood and preached to the numerous passers-by, some shaking hands, some passing on the other side. One sick woman, quite ill, came and stood at her door and drank in the Word. We called afterwards, and have little doubt but she found the Lord. One or two other cases there cheered us much. In the next village the people were returning from worship, and we had a few earnest words with them.

A steady rain now set in, preventing a meeting at a favourite spot, where stones were once thrown at us. About 9 p.m. we said good-bye, believing that quite a number in that needy district we had gone to had been blessed. We had several journeys together last summer, and should have had more but for my accident. Cannot other Y.M.C.A.'s go other roads in a similar manner?

A "ROYAL SERVICE" FUND.

The March issue of Service for the King, the organ of the Mildmay Institutions, explains the "Royal Service" Fund. It was started three years ago, with the idea that those whose daily business it is to minister to the wants of others, and whose faithful service adds so much to the comfort of our homes, would like to help in a special bit of service for the King (Himself the true Royal Servant), and have a bed in the women's ward of the Mildmay Mission Hospital, which should be all their own, only those in service, and their friends, being allowed to subscribe to it.

This idea has been so heartily taken up by them that the members now number about 400, and last year the sum of more than £59 (£70 being needed to fully support it) was paid in for this "Royal Service" bed. Some are subscribers of 2s. a year, or often of a larger sum; many also take collecting boxes and cards; some distribute the leaflets and papers telling of the work; and all help by prayer, Sunday being the day specially chosen, that all members may feel they are meeting together in spirit, and unitedly bringing the needs of their patient and the work of the hospital before the throne of grace. Communications should be addressed to the secretary of the "Royal Service" Bed Fund, Deaconess House, Mildmay Park, N."

Letters to the Editor.

THANKSGIVING AND REVIVAL.

Dear Sir,—In looking forward to the meeting to be held in the Great Assembly Hall, many are praying and expecting great blessing to be vouchsafed, with many conversions in London and elsewhere. But I fear the expectations of some are too indefinite. "Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it," is God's command and promise, and we must believe that we shall have the things we ask. "According to your faith be it unto you."

To this end it is necessary we should read and believe what our fathers have told us of God's mighty work in their days, and seeing that the generation who saw the American, Scotch, and Irish Revival of 1857-61 have so many of them passed away, the young should read the records of the Lord's doings as given by those who were eye-witnesses of these things. If there were still copies to be obtained of The Christian (then called The Revival) of those years, the reading of them during the next few weeks would be very edifying; and all should read every word written by Mr. Gordon Forlong as to his own remembrances of that great Revival, the recital of which he concluded in your last issue. I well remember most of the circumstances he relates. Martin Hope Sutton.

EXPLAINING THE WAY OF SALVATION.

Dear Sir,—I think "A. C. S." is right in saying there is a great need of the way of salvation being fully explained. I also agree with him that it is not the simplest thing in the world to "believe." I remember about seven years ago being at a meeting for young people, and the desire to become a Christian caused me to wait behind to hear further. A lady came to me and asked if I would like to be on the side of the Lord Jesus. Upon my replying, she put a number of questions something like this:—"Do you believe that Jesus is the Son of God? Do you believe that He died that you might be saved? Do you believe He is willing and is able to save you from your sins?" I answered, "Yes." "Then you are saved." "But," I said, "I cannot understand; I believe all that you have asked, but I cannot see it clearly." The lady very kindly went over all the same thing again, but to no purpose, and I came away in the same state as I entered.

Since that time I have heard many preachers tell people to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and they would be saved. I tried to reason it out myself, but could not succeed in any way until about ten months ago I was speaking to a Christian friend, and I asked him what made a Christian, and how should I know if I were a Christian. He told me many things, explaining as he went along. He used part of the text, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God which worketh within you both to will and to do of his good pleasure" (Phil. ii. 13 and 14). The same evening at a meeting I heard the same text given out, and nearly the same words my friend had spoken to me about two hours before. I could not help then believing it was God who was working within me, and I saw it was not simply my believing, but it needed the Holy Spirit's work. Since then, through God's help I have been kept, and believe that many others would be brought to Christ if the way of salvation were more carefully explained.—Yours truly, A Young Christian.

Dear Sir,—I was thankful indeed to see the letter by your correspondent "A. C. S." in The Christian of the 14th inst., entitled "Explaining the Way of Salvation." I well remember dealing with an anxious sinner who had been sent nearly frantic by the admonition given her, "Only believe! It's so easy!" The anguish depicted on her countenance as she exclaimed, "What am I to believe?" led me to see more clearly than ever that such preaching and teaching cannot reach the case of a convinced sinner; and looking back to the twenty-three years ago when in deep distress myself, I feel that to urge how easy it is to believe, would have produced quite a disastrous effect.

Surely there should be the teaching of Christ's atoning sacrifice as the ground of a sinner's acceptance with God, and His righteousness as the robe, wherein a sinner can approach Him; and when telling men that these things are apprehended by faith, that faith should be Scripturally defined and men should be told whence it can be procured.

Faith is indeed (as your correspondent states) something more than "A mere assent," it is "The gift of God." It is a most valuable gift, as it brings the possessor thereof into experimental possession of salvation and its attendant blessings; it is, therefore, called "precious faith" (2 Peter i. 1). All seeking souls, instead of being urged to exercise it, as though it was of man's manufacture, should be led to seek it from Him who is ever ready to hear the prayers of needy ones who have learned that in salvation matters everything must be wrought for them by Christ, and in them by the Holy Ghost.—Yours faithfully, K. B.

[We do not remember any Scripture which tells a sinner to seek the gift of faith. Every faculty we have is a gift of God, and we should not tell a man to pray for sight to see a rainbow, but to exercise his faculty of seeing. Equally we should not tell an inquirer to pray for faith. We should set the truth before him as to his lost condition, and as to God's way of salvation. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." We would emphasise the important and valuable counsel, "There should be the teaching of Christ's atoning sacrifice as the ground of a sinner's acceptance with God." We remember Mr. Henry Reed, who was a wise soul-winner, saying, "No one can assure another that he is saved, except the Spirit, who witnesseth with our spirit that we are sons of God."—Ed.]

GOSPEL HARMONY.

Dear Sir,—There is an important portion of Gospel Harmony which might well be definitely settled, although there still exists some divergence of opinion in regard thereto, and that is the true sequence of events from the Feast of Dedication to the entry into Jerusalem of Jesus as Messiah and King. And your International S.S. Lesson given on March 7, on Zacchæus, affords a favourable opportunity for a re-examination of the subject, for the writer stated, in the opening passage, that the Lord Jesus "having crossed the Jordan reached Jericho," which can scarcely be accommodated to the Gospel narratives. Now we read in John x. 39, 40, that at the close of the Feast, when the Jews "sought again to take Him, He escaped out of their hand and went away again beyond Jordan into the place where John at first baptized, and there He abode," that is at the Bethabara (or Bethania R.V.) in Peræa. Thence at the request of Martha and Mary He went "into Judæa again" (xi. 7) to the other Bethany near Jerusalem. But after the raising of Lazarus, the chief priests and Pharisees gathered a council under Caiaphas, and "from that day forth they took counsel to put Him to death." Jesus, therefore, walked no more openly among the Jews, but departed into the country near to the wilderness, into a city called Ephraim; and there he tarried (continued, A.V.; passed the time) with his disciples." And the Jews' Passover was nigh at hand.

Should it be objected that there is uncertainty about the position of Ephraim; still, it must be in Judæa, and on this side Jordan. It is marked on the Palestine Exploration map about fifteen miles to the northward of Jerusalem, and it may be confidently asserted that it was not in Peræa beyond Jordan, for it was "near the wilderness" which embraces the eastern precipitous descent of the Judæan mountain range. Therefore, the reputed site fulfils the requisite conditions. Moreover, it lies overlooking the ancient main road, still marked in places by the old Roman pavement, which runs from Galilee through Samaria and Jericho, by which the caravans and pedestrians from the cities and villages of those regions wended their ways to keep the feasts. Then about eight days before the Passover, Jesus, when the hour was come, to the consternation of the twelve, set out on the way from Ephraim to Jerusalem by Jericho and Bethany. The commencement of this final journey is recorded in Matt. xx. 17, Mark x. 32, Luke xviii. 31, where it lies almost concealed in the customary divisions into chapters and verses, and even in the R.V. by the omission of the helpful paragraph sign ¶.—Yours faithfully,

An Elder.

THE BOYS' BRIGADE.

Dear Sir,—The Boys' Brigade was started in a Glasgow mission school as a means of reaching boys at an impressionable and often ungovernable age, binding them together in bonds of obedience, discipline, and true fellowship, and winning them for Christ. The "military" system was and is only a means to an end, and the writer in your issue of March 7 has only to read some of the Brigade literature—the Christmas gift books, and especially the essays the boys write in answer to questions propounded yearly in them—to be convinced that a pure, strong, Christly religion is becoming the strongest influence in the lives of the boys of the Brigade.

Not only do the boys grow clean, respectful, obedient, and dependable, but they learn that true manliness is Christlike, and entirely lose the attitude of contempt towards religion which is doing such infinite harm among the youth of our cities. They are brought two or three times a week into close contact with their officers, who must be young, energetic, strong Christians themselves to take up the work, and that contact is of the greatest benefit on both sides. The officers gain as much as do the boys, and those who begin by looking at it from a "military" point of view cannot fail to find that their influence over the boys is only felt when they are seeking to make them soldiers of Christ.

In the company which I know best a boy was asked why he was taught to drill, and his prompt reply was, "Because they want to make us soldiers of Christ." In that company the attendance at the Sunday Bible-class is always better than at the weekly drill, which shows it is not the fascination of uniforms and ranks that draws the boys; but until the system was introduced into the school the same boys were as wild and careless a set as any of that age to be found in a town Sunday School.

Being more or less closely connected with four companies of the Boys' Brigade, I speak from experience when I state, confidently, that it has been greatly blessed as a means of bringing boys at the most important time of their lives, not only under healthy, manly, moral influence, but to the feet of Christ.—Yours sincerely, C. Elsè Wilson, Southfield Villas, Middlesbro'.

CORRESPONDENTS AT FAULT.

Sir,—Kindly allow a few lines in reply to "Amica," who writes under the heading "Religious Societies at Fault." There is another side to the question, and if we secretaries were in the habit of airing our own grievances as others air their criticisms of us, the letter might never have been written. She evidently knows little or nothing of the daily work of a secretary, of the unbusinesslike proceedings, the want of consideration, the carelessness, and the impatience, by which many of their correspondents are characterised.

My co-secretaries will agree with me that the text we most frequently have to bear in mind is "Ye have need of patience." Let me relate one or two incidents which have happened to myself. An angry letter arrived one morning, asking why I had not "troubled myself" (the writer's own words) to acknowledge that letter, containing a cheque, which was posted to me a week ago. My reply was that I regretted to say the letter had not reached me. By return of post came an indignant rejoinder, to the effect that my answer was a very poor excuse, the letter was posted, and would have been returned through the Dead Letter Office if not delivered; that if better arrangements could not be made for the reception and acknowledgment of letters, it was time for the committee to seek a more competent secretary. The former reply had to be repeated, with a request that an application should be made to the Post-office. Several days passed, and then the missing letter was found by the writer, "curiously enough" (the words used) "sticking in the drawer of my writing-table!" No expression of regret for the unadvised reproaches!

Once more. I received a letter from someone whose name was strange to me, asking for information on a subject of importance, but no address was given. Of course it was not possible to reply, for no clue could be found to the writer. In due time a sharp rebuke for my carelessness was hurled at my devoted head. In my reply I enclosed the addressee's letter, which was received with, "How funny! I do not think I ever did such a thing before!"

But time would fail if I were to attempt to describe our many trials of patience. Letters requiring lengthy replies and minute information, demanded by return of post; cheques imperfectly filled up (I had one sent me unsigned not long ago, and by the same post another without a date); Post-office orders with mistakes in the name of the intended payee; letters wrongly addressed; fault found with proceedings which were but imperfectly known; bitter reproaches respecting decisions the full ground for which could not be given to outsiders: these are but a few of the many stings and worries; and these would never have been brought to the knowledge of your readers but for the attack made by "Amica." I could say much more, but I forbear. A Secretary.

MR. W. R. LANE AT NORWICH.

A United Mission in connection with the four Congregational churches worshipping at Princes-street, Chapel-in-the-Field, Old Meeting, and Magdalen-road, was conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane, from March 10 to March 18. The city had been mapped out into districts, and visited by our earnest band of workers, and meetings for prayer were previously held.

The services were commenced in the Lecture Hall of Princes-street Church (Dr. Barrett's), but after one or two meetings it was found necessary to transfer them to the church itself, which was filled each evening to the close of the Mission.

Mr. Lane's manly and unaffected style soon won for him the sympathy and co-operation of all the workers. Possessed of strong physical and mental abilities, he combines rare insight into human nature with a tender, winning manner, which make his appeals irresistible but to the most hardened hearts. Earnest without being excitable, simple without being childish, he has the power of arresting and keeping the close attention of large audiences, composed of men and women differing very widely in social position and mental attainments, whilst he consecrates himself for the time on the one thing needful to each and all.

The Sunday services were held in St. Andrew's Hall, when Mr. Lane addressed gatherings of 3,000 at three o'clock and eight o'clock; the afternoon services were attended by the members of the Prince's-street P.S.A., which is nearly 1000 strong. The concluding service on Sunday evening, when Mr. Lane powerfully pressed upon his audience the question of Pilate, "What then shall I do with Jesus?" was one long to be remembered by all present. The daily Bible-readings were well attended by Christians of all denominations, who listened with interest and profit to his lucid expositions of truths more fitted for those of riper experience and faith. Abundant testimony has been received from many quarters to prove that the Spirit of God has been amongst us in considerable measure. Over one hundred have confessed Christ openly, but many more have gone away, we believe, sooner or later to become professed followers of the Master. One pleasing feature has been the number of young people of our churches who have been either quickened into life, or more fully consecrated to the service. We who are working in this city, proverbial for the hardness of its spiritual soil, have every reason to be thankful for Mr. Lane's visit, and for the loyal way in which he spoke of the more regular efforts which are being made by the ministers and churches, and we hope, if God wills, to see and hear him again in our midst. At the closing meeting Dr. Barrett expressed himself as being highly gratified at the way in which the Mission had been conducted, and in the name of all who had taken part in it wished Mr. Lane God-speed in his future work.

W. D. Hayward.

HEBREW CHRISTIAN TESTIMONY TO ISRAEL.

The work recently started by Revs. D. Baron and C. A. Schönberger in the Mile End-road is making encouraging progress. On Saturday afternoons the Lecture Hall is usually full, many of the Jews being of a class rarely seen in mission halls. Remarkable attention is paid to the preaching, and while this is proceeding inside, helpers are on the watch outside embracing opportunities to set the Gospel before groups of Jews who decline to enter any building set apart for Christian worship or instruction.

Testimony to Christ by men of their own nation means much to thoughtful Jews, and from week to week hundreds listen to Mr. Schönberger's impassioned addresses and Mr. Baron's winning arguments and appeals. The reading-room is well used, and every evening there is a Bible-class, at which the Old Testament is expounded in the light of the New. Like other kindred efforts this mission is passing through a time of trial through lack of adequate financial support.

TRIESTE.—During last year the new British Seamen's Home was opened at No. 27, Via Belvedere, on ground overlooking the port of Trieste. Associated with the Gibraltar Mission to Seamen, it is a two-storeyed building, providing spacious accommodation. Already many interesting and profitable meetings have been held on the premises. The Seamen's Guild is highly appreciated, captains, officers, and engineers, as well as crews, having been enrolled as members. The Scripture reader, Mr. C. H. Hughes, writes: "I am thankful to say, after fifteen months' experience, that God is blessing the work of the Gibraltar Mission. There is a great improvement in the conduct of the men visiting our port. There has only been one case of manifest drunkenness in Trieste during the year."

MARYLEBONE MEDICAL MISSION.

Dr. Chambers's annual report gives a delightful account of medical mission service in a poor West End district. Last year 12,224 sick poor were seen at the Dispensary, and 2772 visits paid by the medical superintendent to sick persons in their own homes. Not only has the best possible, medically, been done for these sufferers, but to all of them the way of salvation has been declared. Nor has this been without blessed results. Not only have thousands of sick been relieved of pain and restored to health and employment, but many have been led to the Saviour, bringing forth in new and changed lives and transformed homes, "fruits meet for repentance." The house-to-house visitation amongst those too ill to come to the Dispensary has revealed much misery and suffering. Several of the cases given reveal a deplorable state of things:—"We found a woman lying in a damp and dark cellar. She was very ill, and shivering with cold, but had no covering over her. She was supporting herself on her elbow, gasping for breath. Nor did the wind, cold and cutting, blowing in through a broken pane, help her. We hung a curtain to exclude the draught, supplied some necessary nourishments, treated the poor woman medically, and now she is about again, thankful for bodily relief, but still more grateful for the good news brought her in her illness. A young man was found lying in an attic. He was suffering severely with inflammation of the lungs, and had worked as long as he could—for his father also was ill, and the family depended on him alone. Happily, after some time, he recovered, and now comes to our meetings deeply grateful for the care shown him."

On behalf of such, a relief fund is maintained—which, indeed, among the poor is absolutely essential. The report may be had from Dr. Chambers, Marylebone Medical Mission, 12, Bell-street, Lisson-grove, N.W.

SOLDIERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Nearly 100 delegates and workers among soldiers attended the all-day conference held at Aldershot on Wednesday, March 20. The meetings were of a most encouraging character, and the work will doubtless receive a great stimulus as a result of the conference.

Col. G. Philips, secretary of the Army Scripture Readers' Society, presided at the morning session, the first part of which was devoted to praise and prayer. Mr. W. B. Harrington, founder of prayer rooms, and hon. sec. of the S.C.A., India, gave an account of the origin and development of the work abroad.

In the afternoon, Major J. Wilfrid Stirling, R.A., Aldershot, took the chair, and delegates from the different branches reported on their work, which showed that God was greatly blessing the movement in the barrack room, where it is so much needed, and which is so difficult for any but the soldier himself to reach. Col. M. B. Wilbraham Taylor and Mr. Edwards, of the Soldiers' Home, Winchester, gave short addresses.

The evening meeting was more of an evangelistic character, the chairman, Lt.-Col. H. Hayne, 1st Wilts Reg., Aldershot, starting off with no uncertain sound. Earnest addresses were given by Capt. G. A. K. Wiseley, R.E., and Col. G. Philips.

MISS MITTENDORFF'S HOME.

This Home for Destitute and Deserted Children, Clayton House, Epsom, has for many years engaged the interest of Christian people. The new report states that last year ended with fifty-five children in the Home. Miss Macgrath says: "We have been much tried, sometimes being very poor; but still in the mercy and faithfulness of our God we have been helped, except once, and that I am sure was for our profit. The great mercy of good health amongst the children has been granted to us through summer and winter. It has been a year of bringing low in many ways; being much tried for lack of helpers, one and another leaving from different causes, it did not seem well to receive many fresh children. Four only were admitted during the year; four of the girls went to service, the Lord opening situations for each, and five others left the Home.

"Many friends who have long helped still continued to send their gifts. Some have been called home, and some new friends have been given. The children are taught plain English, and daily instructed in the Word of God. Being brought up for service, they are taught to do all the work of the house, mend and make clothes, and knit stockings. They are received at the age of four years, and kept until they are sixteen or seventeen years. Visitors are welcome every afternoon between two and four o'clock."

WELCOME MISSION, PORTSMOUTH.

An interesting and successful series of meetings were held last week for the opening of these new Mission premises. The house is devoted to Bible-class, prayer, and reading-rooms. Upon the garden a hall has been erected to seat 700 people, at a cost of about £500. On Wednesday afternoon Rev. L. Railton, of Bristol, opened with a Bible-reading, setting forth the true uses of the house of God, after which some 200 sat down to tea. The evening meeting was opened by Rev. F. Baldey, vicar of St. Simon's, Southsea, with a Bible reading upon "Union with Christ and the Anointing of the Holy Spirit." Revs. C. H. Floyd, J. Robinson, and L. Railton gave addresses upon "Aggressive Christianity." At each meeting Mr. Thomas Hogben, the director of the Mission, presided. He stated that the work was commenced seven years ago in a tent, in connection with Miss Robinson's Soldiers' Institute; that after passing through great difficulties the site was sold last October, when it was considered necessary by some to cease the work. This he did not believe should be done, and after waiting upon God in earnest prayer with his co-workers for a week, the Lord gave to them the present premises, situate in the best position in the town, especially for their work amongst sailors, service men, and the large floating population always passing through Portsmouth.

He stated that they proposed to hold a thanksgiving meeting on Easter Monday, and he appealed to local friends to help, expressing his strong conviction that while such a work, being of national importance, should be helped by friends from a distance, its first claim was upon those attending the services, and next those who living in the town were constant witnesses of its value. To cover current expenses he said that they require £500 a year beyond what they could raise among their own poor people.

The meeting on Thursday, like those on Wednesday, was well attended, and many of the ministers and leading Christian workers in the town came together to express their hearty sympathy. The chair was taken by Mr. R. H. Tamsett. The speakers included Revds. B. D. Aldwell, M.A. (St. Luke's Church), H. Lindsay Young, M.A. (St. John's), A. Halliday, M.A. (Presbyterian), L. Railton (Wesleyan), and Comr. Key (Town Mission). Each day evidence of the Lord's saving power was given, and the gathering of all sections of the Evangelical Church for one purpose formed an object lesson of true Christian unity.

LEPERS UNDER THE LANTERN.

A large audience assembled in the Alexandra Hall, Blackheath, on Monday week to hear a lime-light lecture on the work of the Mission to Lepers by Mr. John Jackson.

Dr. R. McKilliam, who presided, emphasised the claim those working among the lepers have on our sympathy and our prayers. As photographic groups of lepers and views of the various asylums of the mission were shown on the sheet and described by the lecturer, the audience were moved to a deep feeling of pity for the sufferers. The story, while dark in many aspects, was relieved by cheering instances of what the Gospel of Christ is doing for those who, apart from its message of cleansing and life, are literally "without hope." We understand that Mr. Jackson has still some open dates this season on which he would be pleased to lecture. His address is Mission to Lepers, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

THE FARM FOR EPILEPTICS.

The Echo says that the first eight months' history of the National Society for the Employment of Epileptics is essentially the record of success. At Skippings Farm, Chalfont St. Peters, two or three epileptics were first of all placed, then two or three more, until, by the addition of units, never groups of persons, the number has grown to twenty, thus the family feeling has been preserved. The patients vary in age from eighteen to fifty, and "most thoroughly repay the unremitting care and attention bestowed on them." The work undertaken at present is, to a large extent, potato growing for market, vegetable gardening, carpentering, building, bootmaking, and tailoring.

There is room for enlargement, for in London alone there are 600 adult pauper epileptics, "few of whom are suitable inmates for either a workhouse or lunatic asylum, and who are yet quite without resource." It is desired to enlarge the present home, and also to establish another for women and children. The sec. is Mr. G. Penn Gaskell, 12, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The Florence Association is doing a very good work. Besides well maintaining its spiritual department, it has run a course of lectures, which have been much appreciated.

Mr. Robert McCann, travelling secretary for Ireland, is much cheered in his work, and reports that the prospects of the Irish Associations were never so bright as they are at the present moment.

The committee of the Belfast Y.M.C.A. have purchased a pony and trap for Mr. Black's use. The work has developed to such an extent that such assistance for visitation was found necessary.

The State Convention of the Associations of North Dakota, lately held at Fargo, was full of enthusiasm from the first session to the farewell service. 101 delegates were present from twenty-two towns.

"Something Attempted, Something Done," is the title of the annual report of the Bath Y.M.C.A., just issued. The new Bishop of Bath and Wells has become a patron of the Association, which is doing a good work under the guidance of Mr. A. H. White.

The twenty-first annual meeting of the Minnesota Associations held at Faribault proved both in attendance and practical interest to be one of the best conventions ever held in the State. The places of meeting were taxed to their utmost capacity to accommodate the crowds seeking admittance.

In connection with the thirteenth anniversary of the Grand Rapids, Mich., Association, special services for young men were held in the principal churches. The report for the year shows a net gain of 141 members in good standing. The average attendance per day exclusive of Sunday is 500.

A united social gathering was held on March 14, in connection with the Y.M. and Y.W.C. Associations of Woodchurch, Kent. Quite a number of addresses were given by hearty friends, and altogether a pleasant and profitable evening was spent. The members are looking forward to successful outdoor mission work during the summer.

By the kind invitation of Professor Gladstone, a large number of young men assembled at a conversazione at Exeter Hall on the evening of the 20th inst., when a most interesting and instructive lecture was delivered by the renowned Oriental scholar Dr. Ginsburg, on the subject "The Bible—the Way in Which it was Transmitted and Multiplied," illustrated by ancient MSS. and early editions.

Encouraging reports come from Omagh Association, organised last December. A social meeting was lately held, at which Mr. Robert McCann, travelling secretary, spoke. The secretary, Mr. William Thompson, gave a short account of the work, which showed that the spiritual life of the members was vigorous; five cottage meetings are conducted in the town every Sunday evening by them. Thirty-one new names have been enrolled since the beginning of the year.

The Boston, Mass., Association lately celebrated its forty-fourth anniversary, when there was a large gathering in Association Hall. The annual report set forth briefly the admirable work done in the different departments during the year. The total income of the Association was 32,652.49 dols., and the expenditure 32,301.31 dols. The main feature of the devotional work is the Sabbath afternoon service. This service is regularly attended by 200 young men.

A reception of members was held at the Oxford Y.M.C.A. by invitation of Sir Charles Aitchison on March 22. After refreshments had been served by the ladies' auxiliary, the company gathered in the large Hall. Prayer was offered by Professor Legge, and Sir Charles Aitchison, the host of the evening, expressed his great pleasure at welcoming so many young men. The hon. secretaries at various sections gave one-minute speeches. Representatives from Paris, Toronto, and Boston, U.S.A., also spoke.

The Nottingham Y.M.C.A. is taking a forward step, and extending and consolidating its work. On the occasion of the annual gatherings on Monday, the 18th inst., Lord Kinnaird and Rev. W. Hind Smith visited the town, and took part in the anniversary celebrations. An afternoon meeting was held by invitation of Mr. Frederick Wright, J.P., and a public meeting took place in the evening, when Mr. Ruthven Smith, president of the Association, occupied the chair. The Sheriff of Nottingham, Dr. F. R. Mutch, Mr. Alderman Mellors, and other influential gentlemen were amongst the speakers. The report stated that there had been during the year an increase in the membership, the number of members now standing at 155, and of associates seventy-two, Sixty-one young men had joined during the year, and forty-six had removed or lapsed.

At the fortieth anniversary of the Philadelphia Association there was a large audience at Association Hall to hear the reports of the past year's work and the address of Bishop Lawrence. The report showed that during the past year two new and spacious buildings have been dedicated, while the ground was broken and the corner stone laid for another branch in the city. The new branches opened were the Pennsylvania Railroad and Kensington branches. Satisfactory progress has also been made at the fourteen other points where branch associations exist. The growth of the central branch has been very marked. This is the great resort for strangers on coming into the city. Here there has been a gain in membership of 259. The Sunday afternoon men's meetings, and the Saturday afternoon Bible-class are largely attended and exert a wide influence.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The annual report of the Kilburn branch, 103, High-road, Kilburn, shows that out of 240 members and associates 148 are total abstainers. The other statistics show that a large amount of work is carried on, the attendances during the year numbering 7584.

At St. Fortunat, Ardèche, a rocky retreat in the heart of France, the Y.W.C.A. held, on the 17th inst., their annual fête—some co-workers coming in from surrounding villages. Interesting accounts were given of home and foreign mission work; and useful addresses were delivered by M. Narbel and others.

The annual meeting of the Fulham branch was held on Thursday, 21st inst., in the Fulham Town Hall. There was a large attendance. Mr. R. Bannister presided. The report was most encouraging. The membership has increased, the attendance at the classes has been larger and more steadily maintained, and a "Ready Band" is doing useful, earnest work in visiting sick and absent members, etc. Monthly socials, working meetings, total abstinence work, and a junior branch are carried on.

"How to use our Prayer Union members," was the subject discussed at the Workers' Monthly Conference, held at the Morley Halls, Regent-street, on Thursday last. Miss Wingate presided, and gave an address, showing that to lead others into service for God is the highest work of all. Various suggestions were made by secretaries as to utilising still further voluntary help for members, it being generally felt that every step in this direction would tend to strengthen the work and extend the spiritual influence of the Y.W.C.A.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

There are seventy-seven societies in Alabama, nine being juniors.

The York, Pa., Endeavourers, recently raised £10 for mission work in Japan at one meeting.

The German C.E.S., of Cleveland, O., has taken a share in sending Rev. S. S. Snyder to Japan as a missionary, and supporting him there.

A Methodist Protestant Endeavourer in Pennsylvania recently made a gift to his society of the money he had saved by shaving himself.

Rev. J. E. Newell, the Christian Endeavour superintendent of the South Sea Islands, writes that as yet the Samoan Societies are not united.

There are now 507 societies in the colony of Victoria, N.S.W., with about 16,038 members. These are divided among ten denominations, the Wesleyans leading.

In the Tokelau Islands, in the South Seas, there is a flourishing society on the island of Takaofo. It numbers fifty-six members, the entire population being only 264.

Christian Endeavour is now making rapid progress in Scotland, there being already over 160 branches north of the Tweed. On April 22 and 23 the "Endeavourers" hold their first national Convention, and form themselves into a Scottish National Union.

A Christian Endeavour evangelist, Miss Grace Scott, has held good missions in Fitchburg, Pokegama, and other Californian cities. One of the most valuable features of her work is the taking of promising missions and developing them into a stage where the church becomes a spiritual necessity. What it might take years to accomplish in the slow course of ordinary events is thus brought about, through God's blessing on her work, in a few weeks' time.

NAPLES.—Mr. Stephen Burrowes rejoices in cheering results of Gospel effort in connection with the Sailors' Rest. During the past six or eight months the numbers attending the meetings have nearly doubled. There is an increased demand for writing materials, which shows more general disposition on the part of sailors to correspond with their friends. Best of all, there are more facilities for distributing God's Word, which many are receiving with joy. Testimonies are continually being received of the good which God is working through the Rest. Christians of influence in the city are now rendering valued assistance, and with peaceful union and prayerful earnestness God's blessing, on a still larger scale, is confidently anticipated. Communications for Mr. Burrowes should be addressed 7, Vico 2do. del Piliero, Naples.

IRISH NOTES.

Much regret is felt by a wide circle of friends in the North of Ireland at the death of Rev. John Davis, who for over fifty years was the esteemed minister of the Third Presbyterian Church, Ballynahinch, co. Down.

A series of meetings in the interests of the Y.W.C.A. has been held in the South and West of Ireland, at which addresses that were much appreciated by those who heard them were delivered by Mrs. Smith, president of the Association.

Since its formation about thirty years ago upwards of £23,000 has been expended on buildings alone by the Belfast branch of the Church of Ireland Y.M.C.A., and the raising of this large sum has been mainly due to the energy of Mr. R. L. Hamilton, J.P.

The annual meeting of the Dublin Prison Gate Mission, which is doing a good work, has been held under the presidency of Lord Plunket. The proceeds of the laundry for the past year amounted to almost £1000, and Miss Rice, the lady superintendent, has received permission from the Prison Board to visit the Protestant prisoners in their cells.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Rev. J. Martin, of Free St. Paul's, Glasgow, has accepted the call to Nairn, as successor to Mr. Lee.

Mr. Quarrier has received another £1000 from an anonymous donor towards the building of his Home for Consumptives.

Rev. J. D. Mackenzie, of Morningside Congregational Church, Edinburgh, has accepted an invitation to the Chair of Systematic Theology in the Chicago Theological Seminary, and will enter upon his professorial duties next September.

There are nearly seventy workers enrolled in the ranks of the Glasgow Lodging House Gospel Mission. Eight lodging houses are regularly visited on the Sabbath, and from 200 to 300 people are drawn to hear the Gospel. There have been many tokens of blessing during the past year. There are many branches of work in connection with the Mission.

Religious instruction in the schools under the Glasgow School Board is not only thorough but spiritual. All the classes are opened by the singing of a hymn, and most of them have prayer. The first three-quarters of an hour of each day's instruction are devoted to Scripture lessons, and the shorter catechism. Although no Government grant is given for this, several members of the Board inspect the schools and examine the pupils on these subjects.

The Glasgow Branch of the British Women's Temperance Association has been giving conversaziones to teachers in Board Schools, with a view to stimulating them in the temperance instruction now given weekly in the schools. Miss White, Lady Mary Murray, Professor Murdoch Cameron, Dr. Jane Henderson, Dr. Fraser Harris, Mrs. Black, and others have taken part by addresses or lectures, and many teachers have been present on the various occasions.

The subject of "How to Interest Congregations in Evangelistic Work" was taken up in three addresses at the noon meeting in Glasgow on Monday, 18th inst. Rev. J. Paton, Rev. G. C. T. Gullan, and Rev. Wm. Dickie were the speakers. That the minister himself should be thoroughly interested, that he should lead, that he should keep his people alive to the progress of such work, that he should train the inexperienced, were some of the points in Mr. Dickie's very stirring and powerful address, following upon his setting forth of the real object of the Christian ministry—to preach Christ, not to shine as an orator, or charm a congregation by brilliant personal qualities. "Do not be afraid," he counselled his brethren in the ministry, "of special missions, even in the stiffest of West End churches."

THE BIBLE IN FRANCE.—A colporteur of the Bible Society gives an incident in the course of his recent travels at Haute Rivoire. He says: "I had been discussing at great length with a Socialist who boasted of having 'ni Dieu ni Maitre'! An ouvrier who had listened the whole time without saying a word came forward and said, "Whatever that man may say who has just left you, you have more friends among us than you think, and I am persuaded it is so elsewhere." This is exactly what the man at Belleville told Dr. McAll in 1872, and thereby determined the foundation of the Mission Populaire that has been ever since such a blessing for France. Since its establishment the Bible Society has circulated over 12,000,000 of French Scriptures, in whole or part, and there are constantly accumulating evidences that the liberal sowing of the good seed has been by no means in vain.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Dr. L. W. Munhall has been seeing much fruit of his labours in the Gospel at Saginaw, Mich. Large numbers of young people have confessed Christ.

Mr. Henry Smith, who has just closed a Mission at Barrington, is now evangelising with much acceptance at the Tanfield, Leeds. He hopes to commence in April a mission at Leeds.

Dallas, Texas.—Latest accounts from this southern city state that Mr. Sankey had joined his fellow evangelist, Mr. Moody, and crowds were flocking together to hear the song and the preaching.

Mr. Thomas Payne has held special meetings in the Gospel Mission Hall, Kensal-road, W. The power of the Holy Ghost was manifestly working among the people, and God gave mighty utterance to his servant. E. T.

Liverpool.—We praise God for the visit of Gipsy (Cornelius) Smith and his wife at the Hutchinson Hall. Many have professed to decide for the Lord Jesus Christ. The addresses from the evangelist were telling and impressive. Geo. Evens, Pastor.

Mr. Charles Inglis, who has been addressing crowded audiences at Stratford and Bournemouth, with much blessing, is now holding meetings at Keswick. He begins a mission next week, twice a day, at Tottenham, and afterwards visits Walthamstow.

Aldershot.—An eight days' mission, commencing on March 3, was conducted in the Baptist Tabernacle by Pastor F. G. Eland, of the Irish Baptist Home Mission, with most successful and encouraging results, many soldiers and civilians professing conversion.

Ireland.—Gospel meetings have been held in Parsonstown Methodist Church by Rev. John Good; in Newtownards Methodist Church, by Rev. Henry Ball; in Shinrone, by Revs. A. A. Crawford and S. W. H. Nesbitt; and in Stewartstown, by Rev. H. Kennedy.

Harringay.—For ten days the Rev. George Freeman, New Southgate, has been conducting mission services at Emmanuel Baptist Church. The attendance has been large, and the results encouraging, both in conversions and the revival of spiritual life and energy in the congregation.

Barrhead, N.B.—Mr. D. B. Tomkins, of the Evangelisation Society, has closed a fortnight's special meetings here, in connection with the Barrhead United Evangelistic Association. Many have been pricked to the heart by the word spoken, and not a few have professed conversion. A conference was held on the "Second Coming of the Lord."

Boxmoor, Herts.—Mr. Goudie, Herts Union evangelist, has conducted an encouraging six days' mission in the Primitive Methodist chapel. The meetings were well attended throughout. Believers were helped and quickened. Several came forward to be prayed for in the after-meetings, and several very interesting cases of conversion have taken place.

Llanelly.—A special mission has been held by Mr. Raymond Preston, in Hall-street Chapel, with blessed results. Large congregations gathered the first Sunday, and the power of the Gospel was manifested in the salvation of precious souls. The week-night meetings were well attended, and a great many brought in. Last Sunday proved a very memorable time.

Barking.—A sixteen days' mission has been held at the Dagenham Hall, in connection with the Barking Home Mission. The services were conducted by Messrs. Rees, Johnson, Cooper, and Hooper, of the North Africa Mission. The power of the Spirit was manifest, and more than fifty (most of them young men and women) professed their faith in Jesus Christ.

Plumpton, Sussex.—A twenty-one days' mission has been held in the Congregational Chapel, Plumpton, Sussex, by Mr. H. C. Wallace, of the Evangelisation Society. The meetings were well attended throughout. God's people have been revived and refreshed, and we believe deep and powerful impressions have been made upon the hearts of many of the unsaved. F. J. Tomkins, Pastor.

Messrs. Loney and Robinson, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, have been holding meetings for the past four weeks in Mount Mountmellick, in the south of Ireland, in one of the Society's wooden halls, which is full each night, and on the Sundays packed to the door. The Lord is saving many souls. The meetings are going on for a fortnight longer. Will God's people pray that He may continue to save?

Rev. Thomas Jackson has been preaching and addressing public meetings in behalf of the social agencies of Clapton Mission, at Bishop Auckland, Coxhoe, Hunwick, Birchester, and Middleton-in-Teesdale. Large audiences were present at the services, and a remarkable awakening of home missionary work was manifest. Many persons were led to consecrate themselves more fully to the work of aggressive evangelisation.

Murton Colling.—Miss C. Wilson, of Carlisle, has just closed a month's mission in the Wesleyan Chapel. As the meetings went on the interest seemed to increase, so that on the second Sunday night the chapel was crowded, and on each week night large companies filled the place. The addresses have been blessed to Christian workers, and all have been cheered by seeing many in whom they were interested, and for whom they had prayed won to the Saviour.

Burton-on-Trent.—A most successful series of meetings have been concluded, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., at Burton-on-Trent, by Dr. Harry Guinness. The Spirit of God was manifestly present, and a deeper missionary interest has been kindled within the hearts of Christians. His medical lecture to men proved a blessing to many, as did his address to the P.S.A. class on Sunday afternoon, which has a membership of over 900 men. The Association is doing a good work amongst young men.

Mr. W. Sampson commenced a ten days' mission in Beccles on the 10th inst. Prior to his coming prayer had been offered, and "good times" had been enjoyed. On Saturday, the 9th, at a workers' meeting, praise was given to God for what He was going to do. The mission opened with a day's work such as has seldom been witnessed in Beccles. Many were converted, and Christians were greatly blessed. During the week the power of God continued to be manifested, and there was much joy over sinners repenting. On Sunday evening the church was packed, and numbers decided for Christ.

FOX-COURT MISSION.

Lord Kinnaird (president) took the chair at Gray's-inn Hall on Thursday at the annual tea-meeting of the parents of the children attending these schools. The secretary (Mr. T. Fagg) stated that the school had just turned its forty-ninth birthday. He described the work of the Mission, asking support for the mothers' meetings, the Wednesday and Sunday evening services, and the Sunday-school; while he dwelt upon the advantages obtained at the school. Coming to the financial position, he was sorry to say that they were just now £80 in debt, but he hoped that, as the jubilee was about to be celebrated, that deficit would be swept entirely out, and they would start another year with a good reserve in hand.

Lord Kinnaird said he thought they might congratulate themselves, as one of the schools connected with the Ragged School Union, upon the way in which the principles which were inaugurated by the Ragged School Union were being taken up by others. As instancing the way in which an influence spread, the chairman remarked on the fact that for the past few years the City authorities had invited a number of Ragged School children to a dinner at the Guildhall; and, as another beneficent result of the Ragged School Union, he mentioned that it was now "a better time" for boys and girls than it was years ago. Earnest addresses followed by Revs. A. C. Smith and E. M. Mathias.

FEMALE STRANGERS IN MANCHESTER.

The report of the Lodging House for Respectable Female Strangers, 53, New Bridge-street, Manchester, states that of the 433 lodgers last year (occupying 2590 beds), 135 had been directed to the Home from the Victoria and Exchange railway stations; twelve were brought by the police, 120 were recommended by friends, and 125 had been lodgers in former years. The preventive influence of the Home should commend it to hearty support. The hon. superintendent is Mrs. W. Henry Talbot, Woodlands-road, Cheetham Hill, Manchester.

An encouraging report is also rendered of the Female Strangers' Lodging House, B105, Piccadilly, Manchester, near the London-road station. The names entered on the register were 1137 (beds occupied being 3086), and of the lodgers 622 stayed for one night only. Many domestic servants were helped to obtain employment. Of the visitors seventy-four had missed their trains, 100 had been directed from the railway stations, and 112 guided by the police. The matron answered inquiries as to twenty-three wandering wives and daughters, gave advice to many who were in need of it, and wrote a large number of letters in the interest of strangers. The hon. treasurer and superintendent is Miss J. E. Wright, 9, Addison-terrace, Victoria Park, Manchester.

MR. FRANCIS MURPHY is reported to be on the eve of making a temperance tour round the world, accompanied by his wife.

OBITUARY.

MR. R. GRIFFITH, SLOUGH.

The Congregational Church at Slough is mourning the loss of one of its oldest friends and supporters, Mr. Richard Griffith, for upwards of forty years a deacon of the church, which his active zeal helped to found. He was also superintendent of the Sunday-school, and in all educational, social, and philanthropic work in Slough he devoted himself with energy to the end of life. His humble, loving, and Christ-like spirit passed to its rest and reward after a week's illness of pneumonia following influenza. The funeral took place in the burial ground of Argyle Chapel, Bath, with which church he was identified during the ministry of Rev. Wm. Jay.

MR. C. HOLLIDAY.

Many will hear with regret of the death of this earnest worker, who for the last ten years has acted as secretary to the Baptist Young Men's Missionary Association. For some time his health had occasioned much anxiety, and on medical advice he visited Bournemouth. The reports until a few days ago were of a favourable character, and the suddenness of the end was not anticipated. So far as business engagements would permit, Mr. Holliday devoted himself to the promotion of missionary interests in the Sunday-schools of London. He conducted the Y.M.M.A. Journal, and was assiduous in delivering lantern-slide lectures on missionary subjects. Mrs. Holliday, who was a daughter of Rev. Robert Wallace, of Tottenham, is left with several children.

MRS. HOWITT, OF HEANOR.

On March 18, at Heanor, Derbyshire, Maria, widow of Francis T. Howitt, brother of the well-known William Howitt, entered into her heavenly rest in her eighty-first year. She had been through life a consistent and much-valued member of the Society of Friends, but her sympathy and generous help were freely extended to all branches of Christian work of whatever denomination. The principles of total abstinence were dear to her, but the Bible Society held the foremost place in her affection, and she privately distributed many copies of the Holy Scriptures. Ever shrinking from publicity, her alms were given in secret, but the large concourse assembled on the day of her funeral testified to the universal love and esteem in which she was held.

REV. GEORGE MACAULAY.

On Friday last this devoted and at one time well-known Free Church minister passed quietly to his rest, falling asleep at his residence, Fairfield, Burntisland. In 1856 he entered upon his first charge at Inverteil, Kirkcaldy. Thence he proceeded to Stockwell, Glasgow, where he did for some years valuable service. Subsequently he laboured at Old Kilpatrick, Free Roxburgh, Edinburgh, and Bowling. He was a man of culture, a widely-read theologian, with all the old Scottish fondness for theological argument. He threw himself with great fervour into the Evangelical side of the Robertson Smith controversy, and though even in those days suffering from a heart affection, which made his whole frame tremble when he was in the least excited, he was a speaker of considerable power. As a preacher his sermons were in the same way characterised by careful thought and ample preparation. He was an excellent expositor, and his reading and writings were along that line. He was the author of various works, among others being "Puritan Theology" and "The Pastoral Epistles."

A PLAGUE IN SPAIN.

A few months since the village Cammuñas, in La Mancha, was visited by a terrible small-pox epidemic. In Spain such a plague works great destruction; the people are careless and do not take warning or necessary precautions. The inhabitants of the place became terribly frightened. How to bury the dead became a very serious question, for no one wanted to take part. Our teacher proposed that those who were on the town council should associate themselves together for this purpose, and immediately offered his services. But there was not another person in the whole village who was willing to help. In December the wife of one of the members of our congregation died, and it was only by the help of some fellow Christians that she could be laid in the grave.

I saw similar scenes ten years ago during the cholera plague here. These people do not know Him who hath taken death itself captive. God be praised that the small congregation at La Mancha did not dishonour or disgrace the name of Him whom they follow! Let us be all the more diligent in proclaiming the glad tidings of Him who hath given us the victory; yea, who is the victor Himself. In your prayers remember your fellow-worker and Spanish friend, Fritz Fliedner

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Rochester continues to make progress towards recovery.

The Dean of Westminster has left town for Clifton for change of air after his attack of influenza.

Rev. John Barton, secretary of the Church Pastoral Aid Society, is amongst the latest sufferers from influenza.

The C.M.S. Lay Workers' Union for London have just concluded a very interesting series of engagements for the month of March.

Rev. J. Stephen Barrass, of St. Michael, Bassishaw, has been advised by his doctor to cancel all speaking engagements until after Easter.

St. George's, the chief Evangelical Church in Leeds, is vacant owing to the resignation of Rev. B. Lamb, who has accepted Clapham (Yorks).

Canon McCormick has been laid up with an attack of bronchitis, and, though progressing favourably, has had to cancel several of his engagements.

The annual meeting of the Bath Auxiliary of the C.M.S. was held at Bath last week. The Bishop of Bath and Wells, who presided, delivered an address.

An anonymous donor has sent a cheque for £5000 to the building fund of the new St. Peter's Church, Eastbourne. The Duke of Devonshire gave the site and £5000 towards the erection.

The Bishop of Worcester, though he has thrown off the illness from which he has been suffering, still continues very weak. The Bishop sent a wreath to be placed on the coffin of the late Dr. Dale, and wrote that if he had been well enough he would have been at the funeral.

On Thursday evening next week, a meeting will be held in St. Martin's Town Hall, Trafalgar-square, to express sympathy with the Archbishop of Dublin in the matter of the consecration of Rev. J. B. Cabrera as Bishop of the Reformed Spanish Church. The Bishop of Liverpool hopes to speak.

An offer of service from Rev. Arthur Walcott Crockett, of Appledore, Kent, has been accepted by the C.M.S. for work at Old Church, Calcutta, for a limited period. The following ladies were accepted as missionaries of the society:—Miss R. Clemson, Miss K. Andrews, Miss M. E. Barber, Miss C. Luxmore, Miss M. Gedge, Miss L. Buncher, and Miss F. Brownlow.

The Melbourne Southern Cross says that Rev. A. R. Blacket, who has resigned the incumbency of St. Matthew's, Prahran, in order to take up mission work in Persia, left by the Rome on March 9. "He intends first proceeding to England with the object of attending some of the great religious gatherings in London, and will then join Bishop Stuart at Julfa, near Ispahan."

Bishop Tucker writes to the C.M.S. urging the extreme need in which the natives at some stations in Eastern Equatorial Africa now are by reason of famine caused through drought and excessive visitations of locusts. Local funds, of some 12,000 rupees, raised at Zanzibar and Mombasa, will be altogether insufficient to deal with the urgent needs of Usagara and Ugogo.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A new chapel is to be built in Chorley Old-road, Bolton.

Rev. D. B. Hooke, who has been very ill, is now making good recovery.

In connection with the Tabernacle, Stockport, a fine new Sunday-school was opened last week.

Mr. T. J. Worrall has been ordained to the pastorate of the united Churches of Cannock and Hednesford.

The Lord Chancellor has consented to preside at the one hundreth anniversary meeting of the London Missionary Society.

Oak-street Church, Accrington, reports 262 members. In the Sunday-school there are 412 scholars and forty-seven teachers.

Mr. A. J. Pearse, of Mansfield College, Oxford, has accepted an invitation to the pastorate of the Tabernacle, Trowbridge.

Rev. J. Stewart, who has done for eight years good work at Reading, has now bidden his people farewell on leaving for Bexhill.

Rev. C. B. Symes, of Leytonstone, who has returned with restored health from his voyage to the Cape, resumed his ministry on Sunday.

At the annual meeting of Gloucester and Hereford Union Rev. J. Roebuck read a paper on "Leakages: How the Young Drift from the Churches."

Rev. Thomas Cain, the new chairman of the Lancashire Union, has been for thirty years a singularly successful village pastor at Stubbins, Ramsbottom.

Masborough Church reports thirty-eight members added during the year, making a total of 542. The Sunday-school has 612 scholars and forty-one teachers.

Mr. Alfred Olver, senior student of Western College, was ordained on Thursday at Plymouth to work in South Africa, under the auspices of the Colonial Missionary Society.

A fifteen days' mission has been conducted at Pitnour Chapel by Mr. Belben and the pastor, J. Cary. The meetings were well attended, and a good number of anxious ones were dealt with, and many have taken a more decided stand for the Master.

Rev. H. Elwyn Thomas has entered on his work as pastor of Victoria-road Church, Newport. Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., who presided, spoke of Mr. Thomas's successful career in London. Revs. Ossian Davies and Eynon Davies also spoke warmly of his work.

Rev. John Stevens, minister of Union Church, Shanghai, has received a unanimous invitation to continue in the pastorate there for a second period of three years. His friends in this country will be glad to know that much blessing is attending his ministry in China.

An all-day prayer-meeting of the London Congregational Union will be held at the City Temple, on Monday (April 1). There will be twelve presidents succeeding each other at intervals of half-an-hour. The six appointed by the L.M.S. are Rev. J. Knaggs, Mrs. Evan Spicer, Mr. de Selincourt, Mr. Arthur Marshall, Rev. W. Pierce, and Mr. A. J. Sheppeard.

Calls.—Rev. S. D. Thomas, late of Aberdeen, to Corwen, North Wales; Rev. J. Llewellyn, of Colchester, to Dolgelly; Mr. T. Lee Hutson, to St. Andrew's-road, Birmingham.

BAPTIST.

Rev. C. A. Davis has been recognised as pastor of John-street, Stroud.

Rev. C. B. Birch has concluded his ministry at Lichfield-street, Willenhall.

Reading Auxiliary has raised £523 for the Missionary Society during the year.

Rev. G. D. Jeffcoat has been recognised as pastor of Queen-street Church, Ilkeston.

Rev. C. Pummell has been recognised as pastor at Vauxhall Chapel. Professor M'Caig and Rev. J. Douglas took part.

Rev. A. Mills, of St. Mary's Gate Chapel, Derby, is laid aside by illness, and will be unable to occupy his pulpit for several weeks.

Junction-street Church, Derby, reports 900 Sunday scholars. The anniversary meeting in the Royal Drill Hall was attended by over 2000 persons.

Plans have been adopted for a new church and Sunday-schools in White Cross-street, Lancaster, in place of buildings partially destroyed by fire last June.

The Lancashire and Cheshire Baptist Association half-yearly meetings were held at Leigh on Monday. Rev. E. B. Woods gave a vigorous address on village work.

Mission services have been held at Wycliffe Chapel, Reading (Rev. W. G. Hailstone), by Rev. H. J. Preece, of Maidenhead, at which the afternoon Blackboard Bible Studies formed an interesting feature.

Mr. Francis Gotch, M.A., F.R.S., Professor of Physiology at University College, Liverpool, has been appointed to the Waynflete Chair of Physiology at Oxford. Mr. Gotch is a son of the late Rev. Dr. Gotch, of the Bristol College.

Turret Green Church, Ipswich, reports 339 members, of whom forty-nine have been admitted during the past year, making 270 received during nine years of the present pastorate. In the Sunday-school are 467 scholars and forty-one teachers.

Rev. J. T. Briscoe, in commencing his ministry at City-road Chapel, Bristol, stated that he should preach the old-fashioned Gospel. He proposed devoting one Sunday in each month especially to young men and women, and on Sunday mornings to have five minutes with the children in the form of a sermonette.

The report of the Particular Baptist Fund, established in 1715, shows that last year there was distributed £1433 among 100 ministers of country churches, £713 in special grants to ministers, £400 to Regent's Park College (towards the education of young men for the ministry), and £178 for books to forty-four young ministers who have recently accepted invitations to pastorates.

Seven of the Baptist churches in Newark, New Jersey, are combined in mission work among the Italians of that city, who number from 15,000 to 20,000. A chapel has been erected, to be used on Sunday mornings and two evenings in the week for Italian services, the remainder of the time for English services. An evangelist acquainted with the Italian language has been engaged.

The Metropolitan Association of Strict Baptists held its annual meetings at Brixton Tabernacle; the retiring president, Mr. R. E. Sears, in the chair. The report showed sixty-two churches in the Association, and an all-round increase in numbers. The new president, Mr. C. Wilson, presided in the afternoon, and addresses were given by Pastors H. T. Boulton, G. Herring, and T. Jones, and brethren representing sister associations of Suffolk and Norfolk, Bucks, Berks, and Herts. At a public meeting in the evening the president delivered the address.

Calls.—Rev. J. K. Archer, of Peterborough, to Heptonstall Slack; Rev. T. N. Smith, to Tetbury; Rev. W. Maynard, of Westmoreland, to Syston.

METHODIST.

Rev. M. T. Myers, of Rochdale, is still dangerously ill.

A proposal has been made that the Wesleyan Conference for 1896 be held at Douglas, Isle of Man.

Rev. Thomas Cook's first mission in New Zealand opened more encouragingly than any he has conducted in Australia.

Rev. Samuel Pollard, who has been engaged as a missionary at Yun-nan, China, for the past seven years, has returned to England on a year's furlough.

A gentleman signing himself "A member of the Church of England" has sent a cheque for £100 to the mission funds of the United Methodist Free Churches.

Missions are being conducted through the Bristol district. The first series of services were held at Weston-super-Mare by Rev. W. Yates. The second series have been held at Newport by Rev. J. Foulger.

Mr. E. P. Telford, the Methodist New Connexion missioner, has closed a mission at Milk-street Chapel, Bristol. Night after night the premises have been crowded, and much good has been realised.

The Davies Chinese Scholarship, in the University of Oxford, has been awarded to Rev. W. Grist, a non-collegiate student, and a Bible Christian minister, who is preparing to join the mission staff of his own denomination in China.

The Primitive Methodist Missionary Committee has received a cablegram referring to the mission work on the island of Fernando Po; it states, "Schools closed." It is a wearying business. Only a few weeks have elapsed since, as the result of months of correspondence between the British Foreign Office and the Spanish Government, these very day schools were allowed to be re-opened.

The proposal for a committee to secure concerted action among Methodists has just been sanctioned by the General Committee, and the following points are suggested for mutual action:—1. In mutual defence. 2. Co-operation in moral and social work, without reference to party association, political or credal. 3. The resolute avoidance of unnecessary multiplication of chapels in small places. 4. The development of Methodism in small towns or in villages where it has not yet been established.

Rev. A. G. Robins, the new vicar of St. Barnabas's, Holbeck, spoke at a Primitive Methodist bazaar held in the chapel, Prince's Field, Holbeck. He said his presence might be regarded with a degree of curiosity by his hearers, but he thought it would be a source of greater curiosity to some other people in Leeds. He said it advisedly, but he felt that in Leeds some of his friends thought that there could be no spiritual growth outside a certain corner of the city. He felt that anything that tended to break down that feeling was right. He should like to see other leaders of religion mingling together; but, at any rate, he hoped that day would be the starting-point of a charitable feeling to pervade all Christian communities in Holbeck.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Bala College Special Fund has reached £15,000.

A service of praise by the Association of North London Choirs was held on Tuesday in Brondesbury Church.

The Synodical Foreign Mission Committee accepted the resignation, owing to ill-health, of Rev. J. L. Milne and Dr. Murray Cairns.

A social meeting of the Wallington congregation was held last week to welcome the newly-ordained minister, Rev. P. Carnegie Simpson.

Rev. Charles Williams, Tynewydd, Ogmo Vale, has been compelled, through a throat affection, to relinquish his preaching engagements for some time.

The Jewish Committee (English) has decided to commence a mission at Aleppo, and appointed for the work Dr. Piper, of the Mildmay Medical Mission, and Mr. C. Christie, at present in the employment of the Free Church at Safed.

The Federal Council will meet towards the end of the present year in Dundee, and arrangements for the gathering are in progress. It assembles every three years, and embraces the Free, United Presbyterian, and English Presbyterian Churches. Matters of common interest to the three Churches are discussed.

Calls.—Rev. J. Johnston, of Edinburgh, to Loanhead; Mr. James Evans, to Libanus, Pontardulais; Rev. S. Pryddereh, of Golden Grove, to Stepney (Welsh Church).

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Montreal, Rev. Wm. A. Mervyn, minor canon of Christ Church Cathedral, Montreal, and eldest surviving son of the late Rev. W. A. Mervyn, rector of Killead, co. Antrim.—At Cloughjordan, Mr. Gordon Rudd, an earnest Christian worker.—At Lytham, on 20th inst., Rev. Walter Chamberlain, vicar of St. John's, Bolton, an able preacher, a faithful teacher, and a profound Bible student. At Lancaster, on 18th inst., Mr. Thomas Liver, aged ninety-five, who has been faithfully preaching the Gospel for sixty-four years.—At Stanfield, Burslem, Mr. Henry Wilson, a leading and influential Methodist.—At North Bradley, Mrs. Hanson, wife of the Baptist pastor, and herself a devoted worker and successful Bible-class teacher.—At Croyde, N. Devon, on 13th inst., Rev. J. Hunt, aged ninety-four, who for forty-eight years rendered valuable service to the Baptist Church.—At Long Bitton, on 14th inst., Mr. James Sommerville, a leader in Congregational affairs.—At Plumstead, on 20th inst., Rev. J. A. M'Allister, vicar of the parish.—At Newcastle-on-Tyne, Mr. John Hurman, aged seventy-five, an active member of the Society of Friends.—At Banbury, aged ninety-two, Mrs. Baines, widow of a Wesleyan minister.—At Sandy, aged eighty-one, Mrs. J. N. Foster, a faithful servant of Christ.—At Cymmer, Rhondda Valley, Rev. D. Thomas, aged sixty-one, a useful Congregational pastor.—At Sheffield, Mr. B. FOR A STUDY OF CONVERSION.

[We have been asked by Mr. C. F. Cutter, the present leader of the Fulton-street noon prayer meeting, New York, to give publicity to the following.]

Persons answering the following questions should be especially careful not to confuse beliefs and experiences of a later date with those of the time of conversion.

The value of the answers will depend on their fulness and accuracy.

The names of the persons sending returns will be kept strictly confidential.

1. How long ago were you converted? At what age?

2. Were you brought up by Christian parents? What religious education did you receive? [Did you go to Sunday School? How long?]

3. Describe your life, your religious condition, and your moral struggles for the period preceding conversion. Were you at peace with yourself? Did you endeavour to reform? What did you do to that end? What measure of success attended your efforts?

4. Where, on what occasion, and under what circumstances were you converted? Had you, before that moment, made up your mind that you would be converted if possible? Tell, in detail, what you meant then by conversion; why did you desire it; what did you expect of it? In what mental and moral disposition were you at the time? What was the state of your health?

5. Relate your conversion. What were the various thoughts in your mind, and the various feelings in your heart at the moment of conversion? What affected you mental and most deeply? Were you very much moved? By what, or by whom were you moved?

6. Describe your feelings and your thoughts immediately after conversion. Were you aware that you had experienced conversion? In what particulars had you become changed? What was temporary and what permanent in the results of your conversion?

7. If you have passed through more than one similar experience, or through other less momentous moral crises, describe each one separately, giving date of each.

8. Name and address, on separate sheet. [We would be pleased to receive answers even without name, but we hope it will be given in every case, as an unsigned testimony has but little value. The names will be kept strictly secret.]

9. Do you know of conversions, or of simple reformations, as of drunkards, having happened without the influence of the Christian religion?

You would contribute to the success of the present investigation by giving us the names and addresses of persons who might be able to answer our questionnaire; if preferred, we will send you, on request, copies of this questionnaire, to be forwarded by you to such persons. Send returns, as promptly as practicable, to C. F. Cutter, leader of the Fulton-street noon-day prayer meeting, 113, Fulton-street, New York.

EXTRAORDINARY SUCCESS IN THE TREATMENT OF OBESITY.

"Our corpulent readers will be glad to learn how to positively lose two stone in about a month with the greatest possible benefit in health, strength, and muscle, by a comparatively new system. It is a singular paradox that the patient, returning quickly to a healthy state, with increased activity of brain, digestive, and other organs, naturally requires more food than hitherto; yet, notwithstanding this, he absolutely loses in weight 1 to 2 lb. daily, as the weighing machine will prove. Thus there is no suggestion of starvation. It is an absolute success, and the author, who has devoted years of study to the subject, absolutely guarantees a noticeable reduction within twenty-four hours of commencing the treatment. This is different with other diseases, for the patient, in some cases, may go for weeks without being able to test whether the physician has rightly treated him, and may have derived no real or apparent improvement in health. Here, we repeat, the author guarantees it in 24 hours, the scale to be the unerring judge. The treatment aims at the actual root of the disease, so that the superfluous fat does not return when discontinuing the treatment. It is perfectly harmless. We advise our readers to call the attention of stout friends to this, because, sincerely, we think they ought to know. For their information we may say that, on sending cost of postage (fourpence) a reprint of Press notices from some hundreds of medical and other journals—British and foreign—and other interesting particulars, including the 'recipe,' can be had from a Mr. F. C. Russell, Woburn House, Store-street, Bedford-square, W.C." —Belfast News Letter.

PARIS CITY MISSION.
President—THE LORD KINNAIRD.
Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq.
Each day has a record of blessing. Our ten evangelists are encouraged by open doors, and a fair share of attention from a people who know not the Gospel. Spiritual darkness is dispersed, while infidelity and superstition are overcome by "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." Several of our liberal friends have been called home, and our poverty is such that unless others cast into this part of our Lord's Treasury the work of an effective missionary must cease.
Information will be given and contributions gladly received by J. M. WEYLLAND, Hon. Sec.
14, Nicoll-road, Harlesden, N.W. c4675

BRITISH AND AMERICAN MISSION HOMES, PARIS. Founded A.D. 1872, by Miss Ada Leigh (Mrs. Travers Lewis).—A meeting on behalf of this Society will (D.V.) be held in Exeter Hall (Council Chamber) on Wednesday, May 22, at 3.30. The chair will be taken by F. A. Bevan, Esq. Canon Benham, Rev. H. Alder (late chaplain to the Homes in Paris), and Mrs. Travers Lewis will be among the speakers. c4910

STARVING AND DESTITUTE, verging on crime and suicide, still young and helpable, could obtain fresh start in life through the Labour Homes of the Church Army, if funds permitted. Nearly one million meals served yearly, irrespective of creed, with labour test and Christian sympathy. Donors of 5s. and upwards supplied free with tickets for giving to beggars. £4000 pressingly required for food, clothing, blankets, and maintenance. Staff nearly all unpaid.—Remit, Rev. W. CARLILE, Hon. Chief Secretary, Headquarters, 130, Edgware-road, London, W. c4281

Notes and Comments.

We would again remind our readers that it is proposed to hold meetings for Thanksgiving and Prayer in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, E., on Wednesday, May 1. We are thankful to note, from letters received, that a spirit of expectancy prevails among many Christian workers.

It is earnestly hoped that similar meetings, public or social, may be held, as well as much private prayer made, by all who are united in spirit and fervent desire for the revival of the work of God. As the meetings last year took the form of Thanksgiving for blessings of the past, may we not now remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Let us yield to our blessed God this his supreme blessedness of giving. Then let us open our mouth wide, and He will fill it. Let us spend this month in recounting his mighty acts, until faith grows into expectancy, and expectancy into assurance.

It is proposed to hold in London, under the auspices of the joint representative board of the anti-opium organisations, a Convention for Prayer and Conference on the Opium Question, with the special object of considering the report (or reports) of the Royal Commission on Opium, and of taking such action thereon as may be found needful. It has been stated in Parliament that the report will in all probability be presented before Easter. It is therefore intended to hold the convention during the week after Easter week, probably on Tuesday and Wednesday, 23rd and 24th April, subject to postponement in case the report be not presented to Parliament before the Easter recess.

The evidence that horrible atrocities have been committed in Armenia grows almost day by day. The Times now supports The Daily Telegraph and The Daily News. It is evident also from Lord Kimberley's guarded reply to the deputation which waited on him last Friday, that the Government is in possession of grave information, which it would rather not publish at present. Acknowledgment of outrage, determination to prevent any recurrence of it, and union among the Great Powers in furtherance of this humane object are to be found in these words of the Secretary for Foreign Affairs :—

> Of course, the question of punishment could not be overlooked, but the main question was to secure that there should not be any repetition of what had already occurred. They wished to secure something that might be, as far as circumstances permitted, a permanent remedy. And in this connection he was glad to be able to state that our Ambassador, Sir Philip Currie, whose exertions in this matter had been beyond praise, had assured him that his colleagues, the Ambassadors of Russia and France, had informed him that they were fully convinced of the necessity of reform. This was a very important point, and he was confident that when the time arrived it would be found that they would give this country earnest and cordial co-operation.

Turkish rule in Armenia is a heartless tyranny. It excites disorder, and then, under pretence of punishing offenders, decimates an innocent population. The special correspondents who have been investigating the recent massacres, narrate outrages on young and old, the burning of villages, and the looting of towns. Armenians have been set to digging trenches in which, after being shot or bayonetted, their own bodies have been cast. Soldiers have since told the horrible story with blood-thirsty satisfaction. No outrage or torture, however barbarous or excruciating, has been stopped at. How long shall the blood of unoffending Armenians call for vengeance upon the Porte ?

Those who have read history will be prepared for the statement that the Stundist movement is spreading in Russia. This is the inevitable outcome of religious persecution. All will hope that the influence of increased numbers will lead to toleration being extended to our brethren on the part of the civil and ecclesiastical authorities. So far there is no indication of this, but news has been received of fresh administrative measures to combat Stundist dissent from Greek Church Orthodoxy. Let us pray for our brethren in Russia, that until full liberty of conscience is afforded them they may have grace to suffer in the name of Jesus.

Intelligence from Rome states that the impression produced in Vatican circles by the views expressed by Lord Halifax at his recent audience of the Pope, and his interviews with Cardinal Vaughan, is that the President of the English Church Union, while desirous of vague reunion and religious reconciliation, does not take sufficiently into account the real exigencies of the situation, such as submission to the Papal authority, and an acceptance of all the dogmas and practices of Roman Catholicism. Others besides Roman Catholics will agree in this impression. High Churchmen of the type of Lord Halifax want Papal recognition on impossible terms. They ought to see that the only way the lion and the lamb can be united is by the former acting on its well-known instincts and generously devouring the latter.

The Free Church Congress had an excellent line of action laid down for it ; according to its president, Dr. Berry, it was not to rest in mere discussion and conference :—

> It is at once our duty and our advantage to pronounce judgment, to devise and to promote united measures for the evangelisation of our country and the moral cleansing of our communities ; to speak to Parliament, and to subsidiary governing bodies in the cause of righteousness, justice, temperance, purity, peace ; to watch and to check the encroachments of a privileged priesthood upon the rights and liberties of the people, and generally to voice the convictions of our Churches on such religio-political and ethico-political questions as are constantly arising in the State.

The shortest and surest way of obtaining the subsidiary objects is zealously and patiently to seek the chief object, "the evangelisation of our country." If the Congress never loses sight of that, England will have cause to bless the day that it met.

One of the strongest and clearest notes struck at the Free Church Congress was that of alarm at the growth of sacerdotalism and determination to unite in resisting it. The Free Churches seem now to be thoroughly aroused, and one clear gain will be if they resolutely attack and oppose this most dangerous tendency of our times. It is now twenty-nine years since Dr. Robert Vaughan pointed out the impending change, and Dr. Dale said only recently that he could not contemplate the progress of it without perplexity and dismay.

In the course of a year 110 chronic paupers, men, were sent by the Camberwell Guardians to General Booth's farm colony at Hadleigh, but were not connected with his own "social wing." At the end of the experimental time only thirty remained ; all the other eighty, with the exception of fifteen, returned to the workhouse. Eight were sent away for drinking, nine said they were ill and were allowed to go. A large number left of their own accord because they objected to work. The conditions of their work were favourable, such as honest men would have rejoiced to accept. We have, no doubt, a class of men who will eat, but who will not work. There is no use in shutting our eyes to painful facts.

The process of humanising and moralising our laws goes quietly forward ; the farm servants of Scotland are to be cared for as well as factory operatives. True, their Bill has only passed its second reading, but as the admission was made on all sides that something must be done, we may be sure that something will be done. If it be true that in many cases the houses of these servants are neither healthy nor conducive to the welfare and morality of the people, then careless and indifferent landlords should be compelled—as Sir W. Wedderburn said—to do for their servants what good and conscientious landlords already do voluntarily. An effective measure of this kind will be followed by a change for the better all over the country.

Professor William Wallace, of Oxford, who examines, in The Fortnightly Review, Mr. Balfour's "Foundations of Belief," has small patience with the talk about our faith having been destroyed in these days by science and metaphysics. We agree with him in attributing the effect to a quite different cause. "Other 'causes' generate practical atheism, and we have no need to seek for 'reasons.' The cares for worldliness and the race for riches are what make the heaven brass and iron. It is they that benumb the will to believe." And the worst of it is that these material things have so great a power over many of the very men who should never fail to protest against their degrading influence.

Dr. Robert Anderson gives the happy title of "Daniel in the Critic's Den" to his review, in the April issue of Blackwood's Magazine, of Archdeacon Farrar's recent book on Daniel. It is refreshing to read this reviewer's analysis of the so-called "exposition"; and his indignant rebuke of an insinuating criticism which, after depreciating a portion of Scripture, coolly declares it to be about as good as the best portions of Holy Writ, is richly deserved. Dr. Anderson shows that errors which have so confidently been ascribed to Daniel have simply been "read into" the book. More caution would have saved Dr. Farrar from going beyond "advanced" men whose judgments carry greater weight. Having shown this, Dr. Anderson, in an eminently judicial manner, calls witnesses in defence of the Book.

Citing the opinion of Sir Isaac Newton, that "to reject Daniel's prophecies would be to undermine the Christian religion," and calling attention to Bishop Westcott's remark, the truth of which cannot be questioned, that no other book of the Old Testament had so great a share in the development of Christianity, the reviewer shows that St. Paul's predictions of the Antichrist point back to the visions of Daniel, and that the Revelation of St. John must either stand or fall with "the Old Testament Apocalypse." Then there is not only our Lord's reference to "Daniel the prophet" in Matt. xxiv., but the unmistakeable connection between his words and the visions of the prophet of the Exile. Proceeding to examine the Prophecy of the Seventy Weeks, Dr. Anderson treads ground with which the critics and their followers are not too familiar, and here he utterly discredits their position.

In summing up, Dr. Anderson says:—

Suffice it, then, to notice that, according to the 9th chapter of Daniel, from one historical event, then future, but afterwards definitely recorded, to another historical event, now also definitely known, the interval was to be 483 years; and that this prediction has been fulfilled, not vaguely, with a wide margin of error, but with absolute accuracy, and to the very day. And the logic of this is inexorable. Either the result is an accidental coincidence, or else it is an overwhelming proof that the visions of Daniel were a Divine revelation.

This last sentence suggests the germ of the difference between the disparaging critics and those who stand by the Book as Dr. Anderson has done. The one class gets no further than the parchments; the other studies the things written—"profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." We must not stop at Daniel as a man, but we must become acquainted with God's dealings with him, and God's message to mankind through him.

Those who would study at length Dr. Anderson's elucidation of the Prophecy of the Seventy Weeks should read his learned work The Coming Prince, of which a fifth edition has just been published (Hodder & Stoughton). Without following the author in all his conclusions, we are glad to regard the book as a substantial contribution to the investigation of prophecy, and a strong constructive argument for the genuineness and inspiration of the Book of Daniel.

Another new work on prophecy is The Great Prophecies of the Centuries concerning Israel and the Gentiles, by G. H. Pember, M.A (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) It is full and lucid, and two charts make clear the author's scheme of interpretation. There is to our mind obvious truth in the following sentence taken from the paper:—

It is specially for such a time as this, when all things are in a state of flux and doubtfulness, that God has given us a written Word of Truth, in order that we may learn his unchangeable views, not merely of salvation, but also of political, social, moral, and ecclesiastical matters.

This volume, of which we purpose later on to give some account, contains a vast amount of information, and throws light on many scriptures.

In the April issue of The Thinker the venerable Dr. Edkins, of Shanghai, writes on the Hebrew of the Pentateuch, showing its archaic character when compared with the vocabulary of the Prophets and the Psalms. He holds the results of the higher criticism to be quite unsatisfactory, and says positively: "We are compelled to place the Pentateuch before Samuel's days." He assigns grounds for concluding that the language of Genesis is that spoken in Palestine 1800 B.C. and later; and calls for a new school of Biblical study, that shall take into account the laws which have governed the development of Semitic speech. He expects nothing from critics who have come to look upon Genesis as a book of legends, but promises a fascinating field to those who will add to their Hebrew a knowledge of the grammar of Egyptian, Tibetan, Mongolian, and Chinese.

In preaching from the text, "They limited the Holy One of Israel," Rev. Silas K. Hocking stated that "we limit Him when we preach that men can only be saved in a particular way. He had long since quarrelled with the man who invented the 'plan of salvation.' What right has any human being to talk about the plan, as though the Almighty were tied down to any conception of operation? God may have a million plans and methods of dealing with the human heart." Surely there is not a little confusion here. By the plan of salvation we have always understood God's way of saving men through Christ, and "there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." Dr. Watts sang, long ago, the praises of that God "who saves by different ways."

We are not concerned to defend the phrase, "plan of salvation." It has too mechanical a sound. But there is only one Way, "Jesus and the Resurrection." The Holy Spirit speaks of Saul as seeking out those who were of the Way, that he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem; "and suddenly there shined round about him a great light out of heaven. And he fell upon the earth and heard a voice saying unto him, 'Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me?'" (Acts ix. 2-4, R.V.) Christ had said, in the days of his flesh, "I am the Way, and the Truth, and the Life; no man cometh unto the Father but by Me." It is possible for a seeming correction to contain a worse error than that which it seems intended to rectify.

Men and systems are best understood in the light of their works. Esau is a somewhat attractive character in his early days; Jacob is the reverse. But as the seed in them develops we change our estimate of them. Esau had his men-at-arms, his possessions, his cities, his conquered country, his dukes—worldly show enough to gratify any ambition: but where is it all now? And what did Edom ever accomplish? Nothing. Spiritually, Esau was in his descendants what he was in himself—"profane." Jacob, however, was only a shepherd, a wanderer from Canaan to Haran, from Haran to Canaan, from Canaan to Egypt; but his soul was chastened, ploughed, and harrowed into fruitfulness, and in his children we see the result. They are with us to this day; they are with us in person, and they are also with us in psalm, in prophecy, in Gospel, and in epistle; of them is Jesus Christ according to the flesh. "Esau led to nothing"; Jacob led to the world's salvation. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

World-wide Evangelisation.

Between Liverpool and Manchester there lies a great bog, and before George Stephenson could connect these two towns he had to overcome this enormous difficulty. Stephenson knew how to overcome it. The workmen obeyed his directions, and now it is so easy to run to and fro between these towns that it does not occur to a passenger that there was ever any extraordinary difficulty. Crowds of human beings and thousands of tons of heavy goods pass merrily to and fro by day and even by night.

Christ laid down a skilful plan for the evangelisation of the whole world, and promised the gift of the Holy Ghost to his followers to enable its being carried out. Twelve apostles were appointed, but the work was to be performed not only by them, but by every single convert, regardless of age, or sex, or occupation, or trade. Speedily persecution fell on them in Jerusalem, and they were commanded by their persecutors not to spread Christ's glad news. What happened? The believers ran together for prayer, whereupon they were all filled with the Holy Ghost. Not the apostles only, but everyone of the believers spake the word with boldness, and the threatened persecution scattered them into many lands.
